THE OLD VOICES.

BY JOHN GREENLEAF WHITTIER.

I feel the unutterable longing,
The hunger of the heart is mine;
I reach and grasp for hands in darkness,
My ear grows sharp for voice or sign.

O friend, no proof beyond this yearning,
This outstretch of our hearts, we need;
God will not mock the hope he giveth.
No love he prompts shall vainly plead.

Then let us stretch our hands in darkness,
And call our loved ones o'er and o'er;
Some day their arms shall close about us,
And the old voices speak once more.

CHINATOWN BY NIGHT AND SAN FRANCISCO.

Accompanied by an ensign from the Salvation Army and a Christian lady friend, I went down one night into the depths of Chinatown. This is a section of San Francisco that is inhabited wholly by the Chinese, who, true to their instincts, have packed themselves into every available niche. Within ten blocks 20,000 of these Mongolians are found—human beings of every variety wedged in with poultry and animals, flesh and vegetables. In a little compartment filled with chickens and ducks we saw bunks for the family use lying in a loft, and there, in the midst of malodors indescribable, the owners of the property drew in the breath of life and kept watch over their precious possessions. The meat in the Chinese markets is particularly cheap, as the butchers buy cows diseased with tuberculosis at greatly reduced rates. In the shops are most peculiar-looking objects for sale, wholly foreign to the American eye and wholly distasteful to the American olfactory nerves—gruesome fish, fantastic vegetables, revolting bodies of strange animals, curious grains, and a multitude of other inconceivables. We went down into the opium dives, entering dark, forbidding, rambling old houses, and after meandering around in ancient courts and murky passages arrived at tiny rooms full of rags and filth and fumes, and stretched out on loathsome cots were specimens of humanity that had once been called men, but at present looked more like spirits from Hades; bodies thin and scrawny, the yellow skin like parchment drawn over the grinning bones; small, sleepy almond eyes glistening under shaggy brows that beetled from bare, knotty foreheads; a mass of blue-black hair coiled at the back of the head; all bones, skin, eyes and hair piled up in the middle of the bed—smoking. A flickering candle was sitting on a little table close by the couch. Beside the light was a little jar containing a dark, gummy substance, which we soon discovered to be opium. As we entered one of these dens the smoker grunted a recognition and closed his eyes. In his hand he held a long-stemmed pipe, with the mouthpiece glued between his lips. Suddenly he sat up, and, leaning toward the table, he took a small wiry instrument, and, digging up a speck of opium from the jar, he punched it into his pipe, the opening of which was at the end of the bowl, and holding it over the flames sucked the stem vigorously until the opium puffed and fizzed. Two or three whiffs, and all was over. At once the smoker repeated the operation, then again and again, looking at us appealingly at the end of each performance for a piece of money. We endured the sight of the degradation as long as we could, then walked away filled with disgust.

After leaving the opium dens we went to the Chinese theater. It was filled to overflowing. On the main floor were men, all sitting on the backs of the seats, perched up like birds of paradise on the narrow rims, their long queues hanging nearly to the floor, and each fellow smoking like a steam engine. The air was so full of the fumes as to almost suffocate one, and so cloudy as to obscure the vision. Penned off in the boxes were the women. As soon as we entered we were met by an usher and marched up, not to a reserved seat, but on the stage, in the midst of the actors. In astonishment there we sat, and gazed with awe upon the horrible creatures dressed to resemble nothing on earth nor "in the waters under the earth." Painted faces and naked chests decorated with skins and tinsel, marching to and fro beating pans and drums, and screeching, whooping and dancing. In the midst of the pandemonium we sat and gazed, and the smoking Chinamen in the audience sat and gazed at us. It was a midsummer's night horror.

In walking through the uncertain streets in the flicker of the uncertain lights we saw poor little Chinese women dressed in gaudy clothes, with rouged cheeks, hurrying by, and others of their unfortunate sisters looking from curtained windows down upon the surging crowd of men upon the streets below. Poor little sparrows! God pity them!

From the theater we went to the joss house—the Chinese place of worship. It is a large building with an up-stairs balcony. The furnishings are rich. Idols, looking like monsters, are standing about, and there are heavy curtains, and inscriptions in gold, and altars towering nearly to the ceiling, and great basins where the ashes are caught that fall from burning the sacred sticks. There, too, were holy of holies that the foot of a Christian is not allowed to enter.

We visited the handsome stores and watched with amazement the lordly air and stately tread of the wealthy merchants as they walked up and down their establishments bartering away their costly wares. While standing in one of these stores a little Chinese boy six years old came in and asked his father a question; then followed an animated conversation. The merchant, turning to us, said: "My little son. He likee Mellican shoes. I give him a pair, but he will not carry paper bundles on the street. He do not think it high-toned." It is hard to Americanize the Chinaman. In spite of missions and direct contact with our civilization, he hangs on to his oriental dress and heathenish customs. The Chinese make admirable servants. They are exact and faithful, learning our mode of cooking very rapidly, and are exquisitely clean in their service. In many large hotels in the West whole battalions of Chinamen are seen in the dining-rooms, and in many homes they are strongly in evidence. None but the rich, however, can have them, as their prices usually run from $25 to $35 a month.

San Francisco is a superbly built city. The streets are so fine, the buildings so compact and elegant, and the street-railway system the most admirable in this country. It has been and is headquarters for many millionaires, prominent among whom are Flood, McKay, Stanford and Hopkins, whose palaces are within a stone's throw of each other. The Hopkins mansion has been donated to the city, and is now used as a museum. It is as magnificent as many famous palaces in the old world—a glory of architecture and fine art.

My first view of the Pacific was gained at Inspiration Point, a lofty eminence to the west of San Francisco overlooking the Golden Gate; beautiful Cliff House, the huge rock in the water on which hundreds of seals congregate, crawling to and fro and keeping up a continual barking; overlooking the handsome bathing pavilion and the charming gardens rich in tropical plants and vivid with brilliant flowers; overlooking the wonderful bay and the mountains.

When the people down in the valleys of California are sweltering with the heat in Summer the people of San Francisco are shivering with the cold. The country people go to the city to get cooled off, and the city people go to the country to get warmed up. California affords the most varied climate of any country on the known world. Extremes are met in all seasons.

The trip from San Francisco to Portland takes one through the delightful Shasta region. The scenery is magnificent every step of the way as far north as Ashland—an almost unbroken stretch of mountainous country that grows in grandeur until the border line of California and Oregon is passed. Mt. Shasta stands out like a mighty giant for hundreds of miles, robed in snow; cold, changeless, full of majesty and of mystery. Oregon was in the flush of its fruit season, excelling especially in cherries that loaded the trees, every variety growing to perfection. The culture of hops is a prime industry in that State. The vines, which are extremely graceful, are trained on high supports, and present the same appearance as the festooned surroundings of the vineyards of Italy. The temperance people who raise hops in Oregon say they do it to supply the hospitals and bakeries. The anti-prohibitionists declare that they have gone into the business for the money that is realized in shipping their crops to the large breweries in Europe and the United States. Portland is an attractive and elegant city. From there I sailed down the Columbia river nearly to its mouth, gaining glimpses of Mt. Hood and Mt. Rainier along the route. At Astoria I visited the largest salmon cannery in operation, which is owned by Mr. Kinnoy. Different methods are employed to catch the fish. Apparatuses are placed out in the river supporting strong nets, with wide openings to engulf the scaly beauties as they come swimming down stream, and the fishermen go out in their boats and ensnare them. The whole face of the water is alive with these fishing vessels rocking to and fro. When they are filled with the salmon they are carried swiftly to the cannery—a large, low building close by the water's edge. There the huge fish are thrown upon the floor in great heaps. Chinamen, armed with long, keen knives, are stationed conveniently near, in front of broad tables, and rapidly take up one salmon after another, dextrously cut off heads and tails, and disembowel them, then throw the remaining parts into tubs, where they are thoroughly cleaned, then sliced into small particles, put raw into the cans, which are sealed air tight, and plunged into a tremendous vat of boiling water and cooked. Men are stationed around to keep the temperature at a certain point, and puncture holes into the cans to let the compressed air escape. At last the cans are removed, the air-valves securely closed, labels placed around them, and the salmon, that so happily disported itself in the Columbia river a few hours before, finds itself all boxed up, cooked and ready for the market. There are fluctuations in this business as in all else. For weeks such quantities of salmon are caught as to make it almost impossible for the manufacturers of the canneries to handle them. At other times months go by without catching enough of the fish to justify running the canneries.

From Oregon I passed over into the State of Washington, visiting first the quaint little city of Vancouver, where so many United States troops are stationed; then I went to Olympia, and after a short, delightful stay at the capital, made a boat trip down Puget Sound to Tacoma, and finally traveled as far north as Seattle. It is a dreary waste all through Eastern Washington and Oregon, and almost equally so in many parts of Montana and nearly the whole of Idaho. In the southern portion of the last State a few orchards are seen, and as Boise and other towns are reached, signs of human life and vegetation appear to relieve the sandy and rocky monotony. It is a curious sight in these Idaho villages to see Indians in all their pristine glory marching with kingly steppings up and down the thoroughfares. They invariably wear blankets, and are often in full dress—beads, war-paint, and the rest. One day on the streets of Idaho Falls I met a brave arrayed in leather buckskins, a gorgeous blanket of sunset hues trailing from his left shoulder, and a dazzling frontlet made of porcupine quills across his expansive chest, walking with all the dignity of a thousand earls along the grimy pathway, utterly regardless of the inquiring glances cast upon him. The women are the backbone of the families, as in all tribes, and are not so attractively attired as the men. The poetry and romance connected with the race take unto themselves wings at the spectacle of a fat old Indian woman clothed in a Mother Hubbard tied in the middle, meal-sack in effect, paddling with bare feet, pigeon-toed, carrying pails of water, or lounging around the depots with leather goods for sale, dirty and repulsive.

Very little can be seen of Wyoming unless stage trips are taken through the country, as the railroad only skirts along the edges. It passes through a most interesting section—bleak and bare, it is true. For miles not a human habitation in sight, but in every direction there are the most unique formations of stone—vast rocks piled up in picturesque shapes, giving the appearance of groups of deserted castles and Pompeiian ruins. At Green River perfect fossils of fish and shells and other things are found between the layers of sandstone. The fish are so true to life that the pieces of the strata in which they are found are cut out and used as decorations in the homes without an added touch to their beauty and symmetry. In Cheyenne, Wyo., we were shown two elegant residences, and were told that the wives in each were Indian women whom the white men took unto themselves in the early days of the settlement of the territory, when it was impossible to find a minister to perform a marriage ceremony; but since the preachers have come in with the advance of civilization, the squaws were espoused. Their homes are full of half-breed children, and the families, strange to say, are held in high esteem by the citizens of Cheyenne. One of these lately wedded Indian wives possesses the restlessness of her race, and is known to go to a certain window in her splendid home and look across the plains with yearning eyes in the direction where her people have their habitation. It is impossible to "eradicate the remembrance of her heritage." It is so with many of us.

The West is very great—full of possibilities, full of natural grandeur not to be found elsewhere, full of energy and self-reliance, full of great thoughts and high purposes; but there is an everlasting longing in my soul for the South, the land of my nativity and my heart's devotion. I was homesick for it across the sea; I am homesick for it now; I shall be homesick for it always when far removed from its familiar scenes; homesick forever until "I awake in His likeness"—"satisfied."

"IN AND AROUND THE HUB"—MISS DUVAL.

In the NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE, of Dec. 30, a fair contributor does me the honor to mention a sermon preached by me in McKendree Church, Nashville, in which I used some illustrations from Hall Caine's "Christian." It seems to me well to correct an error in one of her references. It is not believed for a moment that the Christian woman writing proposed to give an unjust criticism on my utterances. It is easy to see, however, that she might have misunderstood the preacher when he and she differed so widely in their conception of the object of the writer. She thinks Hall Caine's second great purpose is to prove "that a woman may retain her high estate through all the compromising positions of a great city." What she takes to be a chief purpose I thought an exceptional incident. What I took to be his central purpose was to detail and hold up to horror the barbarously immoral treatment of women by society—first, in high life; then down through its every stratum to the lowest, tolerating and petting men and damning women, after having taken from woman the industrial openings which might help to her self-protection. I had learned from Hugh Price Hughes that the pictures drawn in this book were true to the life; that he could duplicate everyone of them in actual life. Mr. Hughes, the great Wesleyan leader, whose work occupies the sections of London where Hall Caine locates most of his scenes, can be regarded as good authority.

Looking at the object of the book from standpoints so different, it is not to be wondered at that the fair critic failed to appreciate my allusion to "Gloria." I did not, for one moment, commend her, but pronounced the creation a magnificent conception on Hall Caine's part for the object he had in view.

It is certainly to be regretted that Hall Caine does not give prominence to a single Christian character in a book he has named "The Christian." Admitting this great defect, I claim that a book which portrays the dangers of modern society so vividly and accurately, not as other writers of fiction have done to allure, palliate or attract, but to condemn with burning, blistering excoriation, ought to help the Christian world to apply with a hundredfold more zeal the one only antidote: to stir up this zeal I spoke—not to excuse, but to probe the wrong.

Having corrected the writer's misconception of the purpose of my reference to "Gloria," will she allow me gently to say that I am not willing, as a Tennesseean, to have put in Tennessee mouths the expressions, "we-uns," "you-uns," and "cracker?" There are some States where the lower class of people use these dialectic peculiarities—they are occasional in a few districts of country in Tennessee; but certainly are not characteristic of the dialect of the poor people of Tennessee as a class. Born and reared in Tennessee, I never heard the word "cracker" so applied until long after my manhood, when it was done by a Georgian. The other words I never heard from the mouth of a Tennessee illiterate until since the war, and only a few times at this late day.

ORIGINALITY IN THE PULPIT.

"There are some voices crying in the wilderness which fill the land with echoes." That is Phillips Brooks' way of saying that great preachers have many imitators. In the palmy days of Spurgeon almost every Baptist student took him for a model, and succeeded in reproducing only his eccentricities. There was a time when the American pulpit was threatened with an avalanche of Beechers, and even now nearly every town has a budding Parkhurst who would remedy all the evils from which the community suffers—with his golden counsels. It does not require a profound acquaintance with the principles of homiletics on the part of the public to discover the difference between the originals and the copies. As Phillips Brooks reminds us: "The spirit of the copyist is always blind; he can not discern the real secret of the power which he admires." It is with him a repetition of the old fable of the jackdaw who arrayed himself in the cast off feathers of a peacock and proudly strutted about in the vain belief that he was a peacock. First of all, he gets laughed at; then he receives rough treatment at the hands of his enraged companions; and finally he disappears, to be heard of no more.

A clever French satirist of our day has a brilliant passage in his latest book, in which he represents a writer as anxiously asking himself the question, "Whom shall I imitate in order to be original?" We fear that many young preachers are asking the same question. Originality in the pulpit is the crown of greatness in preaching. It is the pearl of great price in sermons, and sermon makers are prepared to sell everything else in order to buy it. But they often go the wrong way about the purchase. To mistake a grotesque distortion of the most familiar truths for something fresh and wonderful, or the weak and servile imitation of the intellectual mannerisms of a famous preacher for personal preaching power, is a childish error utterly unworthy of the intelligence with which the public credits every man who enters the pulpit. A right conception of what constitutes originality should be one of the first lessons in clerical culture. It does not consist in the creation of matter, for that has been done by the thinkers who went before, but in the selection, combination, and manipulation of the matter already in existence. He who thinks he can add a distinctly new contribution to the subject-matter of pulpit teaching must either be an insufferable coxcomb or a candidate for a lunatic asylum. Originality is denied even to men of genius in these days of searching criticism. Lowell has shown very clearly, in one of his charming essays, that Geoffrey Chaucer was an inveterate borrower of the thoughts of other people, taking everything that suited his purpose and making the most of it. And Shakespeare is proved to have been still less original, if that were possible. Yet Chaucer and Shakespeare were original with a regal originality all their own. Their greatness lay not in the creation of matter, but in the use they made of it. That is the only kind of originality possible or desirable in the pulpit.

"If you want to be an original preacher," wrote Dr. Dale, "look at heaven and hell, life and death, sin and holiness, with your own eyes; listen for yourselves to the voice of God; ask him to reveal to you the glory of his love, the steadfastness of his truth, the energy of his righteousness, and tell the world what you have seen and heard. Preach to the heart of things. Get at the facts which lie behind appearances. In this way originality will come to you when you are not seeking it." This advice could not be improved upon. It comes from one who was a great man and a great saint as well as a great preacher. He who would preach well must first see the Vision and hear the Voice. In the chamber of communion and from the pages of a Bible illuminated by the Holy Spirit he must seek the originality of heart which is widely different from the originality of mind. The great commonplaces of religion must become as new and vivid and real to him as if he saw them for the first time. Then he can enter the pulpit with a direction on his lips, a fire of intense conviction in his soul, and a freshness of truth pouring out of the fountain of spiritual experience, that shall invest the sermon with real originality. The way may be narrow to intellectual pride and self-content, but it leads into the large plains of green pastures and still waters. Try it.—Zion's Herald.

HELP ME, LORD.

Weary, Lord, of struggling here
With this constant doubt and fear,
Burdened by the pains I bear,
And the trials I must share—
Help me, Lord, again to thee
To the rest that's found in thee.

Weakened by the wayward will
Which controls, yet cheats me still;
Seeking something undefined
With an earnest, darkened mind—
Help me, Lord, again to thee
To the light that breaks from thee.

Fettered by this earthly scope
In the reach and aim of hope,
Fixing thought in narrow bound
Where no living truth is found—
Help me, Lord, again to thee
To the hope that's fixed in thee.

Fettered, burdened, wearied, weak,
Lord, once more thy grace I seek;
Turn, O turn me not away,
Help me, Lord, to watch and pray—
That I never more may flee
From the rest that's found in thee."

A MESSAGE TO THE SONS AND DAUGHTERS OF THE SOUTH.

Probably the most important question with which the people of the South have to deal is education. The proper training of the rising generation is a matter of great importance. Born and reared in the South, naturally my heart goes out in interest and sympathy to our people; and as I have traveled from one State to another and witnessed many things that both sadden and gladden, I feel like saying words of cheer and encouragement which are the result of careful study and observation. My love for mankind, however, is not bounded by my own State, the Southern States, or the whole of the United States; it is world-wide, and yet I feel a deep intererest especially in the welfare of our own people who, for many years, have been struggling under so many disadvantages and difficulties. I believe that in the Southern States we have the elements of strength and power that will exert a wonderful and blessed influence in the history of the world throughout all coming generations. I believe our young men and women have in them the latent energies which, if fully developed, trained and directed, would make them, under God's blessing, the noblest race that ever inhabited the earth. I believe that the best things are just before us, and with you I wish to aim and struggle for that intellectual, spiritual and physical development that will make us the highest types of manhood and womanhood.

In looking over the world's history in the past, it is encouraging to note that, for more than sixteen hundred years of the Christian era and nearly six thousand years of the world's history, the greatest authors, artists, philosophers, and, indeed, all the master minds, sprang from Southern Europe and countries whose climatic conditions are exactly the same as those of the South. When we contemplate the noble literary work of Virgil, Cicero and Pliny; the philosophy of Socrates, Plato and Aristotle; the history of Herodotus, Thucydides and Xenophon; the poetry of Homer and Sappho, the drama of Sophocles, the art of Phidias, the oratory of Demosthenes, and the statesmanship of Themistocles and Pericles, how can we but feel that, under fair conditions, even greater results may be accomplished by the proper training of the rising generation? Why should we not have our Dantes and Michael Angelos? Our people are warm-hearted and imaginative; they are sympathetic, and are quick to grasp ideas, and to grow intellectually and every other way.

A GOOD SIGN.

One of the most hopeful signs of the times is the careful and systematic study of the Bible in our schools and colleges. This is the great textbook which should be not simply read, but studied in our schools and homes from earliest childhood to old age. The ever-increasing number of gymnasiums, the systematic and careful physical culture, which commences with the kindergarten and ends with the highest university course, are cultivating and helping to bring out the faculties of mind, heart and body that have not heretofore been factors in our educational work.

THREEFOLD EDUCATION—MIND, HEART, AND BODY.

Education should be threefold: mind, heart, and body. Unfortunately, for many generations the intellect has been trained at the expense of the heart and body. Young people are thus made one-sided. But with the three happily combined, they grow into beautiful and well developed men and women. The time has arrived when parents, before committing their children to the care of teachers, inquire particularly in regard to the methods of Bible study and plans for physical culture. The teachers who ignore these demands will be rapidly shelved, while those who are constantly and earnestly aiming for the threefold development of education will advance to the front ranks. Many young teachers are making splendid records; but I am glad to say that among many of my acquaintances some of the most progressive and successful teachers are well past middle life. They grow from day to day, are happy in their work, and are helping to inculcate ideas and devising methods of teaching that will be far reaching in their results.

NOW ABOUT OUR OWN AUTHORS.

In looking over the work of Southern authors during the past three hundred years, there is much to cheer and encourage us. It is a fact worthy of note that nine tenths of the poetical quotations found on tablets in the national cemeteries are written by a Southern poet of Kentucky. Sidney Lanier, of Georgia, struggled for years in our midst unappreciated, and now he is ranked by intelligent and discriminating readers at home and abroad the greatest American poet. The world has never produced a greater naturalist than Audubon, of Louisiana.

In the formation and establishment of this great country of ours the master-minds sprang from the South. The people of the South are learning year by year to appreciate more and more the splendid work of our own writers. A few years ago I attended the great World's Fair at Chicago, and examined with care the paintings, statuary and interesting works of art on exhibition, and the finest piece of statuary in all of the great world's exhibit was by a Southern artist; the greatest feats of engineering and the greatest work in mechanical arts have been accomplished by men born and reared in the South; the largest reaper factory in the world, both the machinery and the factory, was the creation of the brain and energies of a Virginia boy. Mr. Edward W. Bok, the editor of the Ladies' Home Journal, though a foreigner by birth, but thoroughly Americanized in his ideas, recently traveled extensively in the South, and I take pleasure in giving herewith his tribute to the people of the South. He, as well as many other thinking men, realizes that the South is the truest and most Americanized part of America. He says:

"The most wholesome American ideas—those ideas upon which our government rests—are nowhere so prevalent as they are at present in the South.....They do not question divine laws in the South; they accept and perpetuate them. Intellectual progress there goes hand-in-hand with a strict adherence to the accepted beliefs of religion. The Southern mother does not explain the Bible to her children in the light of so-called 'modern teachings;' she places it in their hands as her mother gave it to her. And with the fundamental principles of religion the Southern child is taught patriotism and a love of country; hence, religion and patriotism stand side by side in the education of a Southern child.

"The Southern people believe in progress, but progress along healthy, rational lines. Theories which mentally upset find no sympathy with them. They are content to move slowly, but sanely and surely. And some day, when the vast majority of us who live in other portions of this country get through with our camping-out civilization; when we drop our boastful manners; when we get old enough to understand that there is a stronghold of conservatism, which stands between tyranny and anarchism, our eyes will turn toward the South. And we will see there a people who are American in ideas and in living; a people worshipful, progressive, earnest, courageous and patriotic—a people who have made their land, against defeat and prejudice, 'the heart of America.'" But for the brave and self-sacrificing efforts of our soldiers of the South, America would never have been free from British rule.

If space permitted, I would be glad to multiply striking facts and relate many more interesting incidents; but let us here consider the conclusion of the whole matter. Young men, young women of the South, educate yourselves. Cultivate the noble mind that God has given you. Spend a little time in the freshness of the morning, the first part of the day, in studying the greatest and best text-book of all. Learn a system of physical culture that will bring into play every muscle of your body. Cultivate your intellect; study the questions that will best promote your health and strength. Keep your hearts and lives pure and clean, and truly you will be able to exclaim with the poet, "My strength is the strength of ten, because my heart is pure." Dignify your daily labor by putting into it the best thoughts and energies of your life. Whether your work be in the field, forest, shop, counting-room, or office, do well the work in hand. The humblest service may be made grand and glorious by working with the right spirit and right aims. With true education the most insignificant drudgery becomes a stepping-stone to nobler and better things. If you are a farmer, and undertake to plow, plow deeper and better than the work has ever been done before. If you are a mechanic, endeavor to turn out the best class of work that it is possible to make from the material at hand. Animated by the highest motives and purposes, you will be constantly growing in the work, and you will find every effort made but a new and inspiring source of joy. Your life, instead of being lived in darkness, despair and obscurity, may be so planned and lived as to enable you to walk at all times in the highest atmosphere of sunshine and joy.

ENCOURAGE HOME TALENT.

Let us encourage educational efforts and educational work by our own authors. It is only natural to suppose that people who are in sympathy and familiar with our needs are much better fitted to prepare text-books that would be really helpful than those who are entirely unacquainted with the difficult problems with which we have constantly to deal. Let us rise up in all the strength that God has given us, and endeavor, by his direction, to make our lives all that is true and grand and noble.

AN INVITATION—FREE TO YOU.

Parents, teachers, if you feel interested in this new educational movement, I shall be glad to hear from you. I will, with pleasure, send you a complimentary copy of a little pamphlet we have recently published, entitled, "A New Era in the Educational Development of the South," by Prof. T. S. Minter, of Bryan City, Texas. This pamphlet gives some helpful ideas and suggestions. It is beautifully printed, and may prove of great practical value to you.

Yours for better things in the educational line, B. F. JOHNSON.

METHODIST HYMNOLOGY.

MR. EDITOR: Allow me to say, in response to the query of "North Mississippi," that I am more than willing to join in a memorial to the General Conference asking for such legislation as will restore and keep the hymnology of primitive Methodism to its place in the church and in the course of study. If the Bible is one of the books of the "course," our Standard Hymn Book should be right alongside of it, as there is not a line or verse, paragraph or chapter between the first chapter of Acts and the last of Revelations that bears the indubitable evidence of divine inspiration any plainer or clearer than does the great majority of the gospel hymns in that collection. Thousands and thousands of glorified spirits who surround the great white throne to-night were led to Christ by these melodies, and the way to that upper and better country has been brightened, and the oil of joy substituted for the spirit of heaviness by the same means ten thousand times. Notwithstanding the low estimate placed upon these hymns by Bro. Featherstun's college faculties, in last week's ADVOCATE, I am inclined to thank the Lord with all my heart that they were written for the comfort of his people. I am also inclined to the belief that many of them are sung to-day by the redeemed and the angels in heaven. So far as the poetic merit of nearly all of them is concerned, it can not be surpassed by any other hymns that have been written.

I regret my inability to endorse my brother's estimate of the Young People's Hymnal. A casual glance reveals the presence of many alleged hymns that are the veriest jingles and a liberal sprinkling of doggerel. This multiplication of song books—the only merit of which is found in the few old gospel hymns found in them—has resulted in the evil we are trying to abate; hence, in my opinion, it was an unwise move to publish the Young People's Hymnal. If our young people are fit to be Methodists, they will ask for nothing better than the Standard Hymn Book, because there is nothing better.

Along with these song books and jingle tunes comes the mongrel Methodist, whose spiritual condition is so dry and hard that he can not bend his knee in prayer, and only bows his empty head with difficulty. The fact that this disease has invaded the pulpit as well as the pew is the saddest evidence and most convincing proof of the decadence of spiritnality in Methodism. When a church ordains a minister it has the right to expect him to have sufficient respect for its rules and forms of worship to conform to them, and the laity of the church have also the right to expect their pastors to be Methodists and not mongrels.

What does "North Mississippi" think of a return to primitive methods in this regard?

Yours truly, REX.

THE SUNDAY-SCHOOL.

The principle laid down and adhered to in the various solid evangelical churches in regard to the Sabbath-school—that it is not a part of the work of the church, but an integral part of the church itself—affords a solution to every question that can arise in regard to the government, work, worship, duties and benefactions of the school; and, if adhered to, will save our Sabbath-schools from all sorts of whimsical improvements and enterprises. The Sabbath-school consists of the younger members of the church in process of training to take the place of the older members. They are to be taught to perform all the duties of church membership, and to place those duties in their right relations and proportions. They should be taught the manly and Christian pride of self-sustentation; otherwise, when they come to the control of the church, they will lie down upon the Board of Home Missions, and go begging about for money to sustain their local church, which they ought to take pride in paying themselves. It is certainly very bad policy to teach a Sunday-school scholar that his Sunday-school is not worthy of his own financial support. The effect is to give him a very low estimate of its value, and thus a low estimate of the value of the church itself. It is bad training to teach the child that the sustaining of the preaching of the gospel in his own community is not a part of his duty, and that the only giving that is worthy and acceptable to God is to something far away from home. The principle held by all our evangelical churches, that the Sabbath-school is an integral part of the church itself, not only settles all questions concerning its government, but all questions concerning its work and duty. The Sabbath-school scholar is to be trained into all the duties of a well-balanced, level-headed, all-around church member—first, to sustain the work in his own church, and then to sustain the work among the needy elsewhere. The financial part is a mere matter of training, anyway. The child does not furnish the money, nor usually make any sacrifices for it. It is put into his hands for the purpose of teaching him to use it, and how to use it, in the maintenance of the church of Christ.—Interior.

ONE THING.

Concentration of powers is the secret of all great successes in human life. Every man should have a main purpose, should aim at one thing, and all subordinate action should have reference to this grand objective. To do otherwise is to dissipate one's energy and insure failure in the main purpose. It is the axeman able to strike ten times in the same place who cleaves the toughest log. It is the thrice-conned lesson that becomes perfect. The mechanic becomes skilled only by habitual devotion to his task, as the merchant grows apt by continuance in one line of trade. All great studies require undivided attention. Sir Isaac Newton and Lalonde had unusual power to hold attention until the most intricate problems were solved. One thing was kept exclusively before the mind; the admission of another would divide attention. "I was familiar with Gurney's method of shorthand," says one, "and wrote it with ease; but when I took it into my head to learn Byrom's, they destroyed each other and I could write neither."

Men no doubt differ in native endowments; they differ more widely in the power to marshal their capacities under a grand purpose. Great powers are often frittered away by dissipation. In trying to hold too many marbles, they all slip from the grasp. In doing many things passably well, we fail to do any one thing in a first-rate way; the whole is lost in its parts.

In the religious life, even more than in the secular, this concentration and unity are important. The secret was seized by St. Paul. His work, though multiform, was in a high and controlling sense one. None of his doings were alien to his main purpose as a messenger of the Lord Jesus Christ. The saint is the man who begins a religious life and sticks to it. The successful preacher is a man of one work. He concentrates his energies upon the great service committed to him by the Divine Master. Small powers intensely devoted accomplish more than great powers held loosely in hand. Life is not long enough to do many things; but, if a man is content to devote himself to his specialty, he may do one thing nobly. Without dissipating your resources in too many things, endeavor to do the best, the great thing of your life, in the most perfect manner possible.—Zion's Herald.

Suppose you say to yourself: "This is an ordinary, shabby life of mine to look at—no great thing to do or be or hope for or grow to. I have just got to content myself with drudgeries that must be every day the same, and never advance me beyond themselves. But I mean to put great cheer into all I do. I mean everything shall show integrity, shall speak of honesty, shall prove my truth; nothing that I touch that I will not adorn by some grace of soul." What will be the result? Where will be the paltriness, the worthlessness, of your life?—Rev. J. F. W. Ware.

There is no way to reach the masses except to come into personal contact with individuals. In order to have an entrance into the heart of the individuals, the worker must come into contact with them at those points where they wish help. The wise worker accepts the situation, comes into contact with the individual, helps the individual so far as he can along the lines in which he or she is seeking help, and then uses the influence that he has gained in striving to bring those individuals to an appreciation of, and a longing for, better things.—A. H. McKinney, in New York Observer.

It is pitiable to see Christians discouraged. Of all men they have the most right and the best reason to be full of hope and energy. They are the Lord's, and are working for his cause. They have "a promise of the life that now is, and of that which is to come." They are on the winning as well as on the safe side. They have noble and inspiring examples, both in private and public life, continually before their eyes. They have grace for duty, for trial, and for victory. No drooping then, but cheering, responsive and persistent services.

Never lose a chance of saying a kind word. As Collingwood never saw a vacant place in his estate but he took an acorn out of his pocket and popped it in, so deal with your compliments through life. An acorn costs nothing, but it may sprout into a prodigious bit of timber.

Take the self-denial gaily and cheerfully and let the sunshine of thy gladness fall on dark things and bright alike, like the sunshine of the Almighty.—James Freeman Clarke.

I do not envy a clergyman's life as an easy life, nor do I envy a clergyman who makes it an easy life.—Samuel Johnson.

A PATHETIC INCIDENT.

Bishop Whipple tells the following pathetic incident: "Some years ago, as I opened my door one day, an Indian knelt at my feet. Upon being asked why he knelt, he said: 'My father, I knelt only because my heart is warmed to a man who pities the red man. I am a wild man. My home is five hundred miles from here. My father told me of the Great Spirit. I have often gone out into the woods and tried to talk with him.' Then, looking into my face, he said: 'You don't know what I mean. You never stood in the dark and stretched out your hand, and could not take hold of anything.' Then he sat down as a child, while he listened to the story of the love of Jesus. Meeting him afterward, he laid his hand on his heart and said to the Bishop, 'It is not dark now; it laughs all the while.'"—Midland Presbyterian.

GENTLENESS TOWARD THE WEAK.

With a tender regret for lost opportunities, who has not sometimes seen a mature woman timid, self-conscious, handicapped from youth to gray hairs, simply because she was a "backward" child once, and therefore was snubbed and ridiculed and pushed into the background, while her sisters and brothers bore off the honors and were the objects of universal estimation? A wrong for life was done to the little daughter, and her daughter may perhaps suffer from the same old mistake, for wrongs are far reaching. Be pitiful and just to the backward child in your home.—Margaret E. Sangster.

Education is the knowledge of how to use the whole of one's self. Men are often like knives with many blades; they know how to open one and only one; all the rest are buried in the handle, and they are no better than they would have been if they had been made with but one blade. Many men use but one or two faculties out of the score with which they are endowed. A man is educated who knows how to make a tool of every faculty—how to open it, how to keep it sharp, and how to apply it to all practical purposes.—Beecher.

So great is my veneration for the Bible that the earlier my children begin to read it the more confident will be my hopes that they will prove useful citizens to their country, and respectable members of society.—John Quincy Adams.

If a religious paper is of any benefit to the church, then it is the duty of each member to see that his church paper is read by a neighbor. A good church makes a good neighborhood, and a community in which truth is manifest strengthens the church.

With earnest purpose go into the "highway and hedges" and seek to recover the lost. No place that contains an immortal soul is out of the way to one thoroughly imbued with the Master's Spirit, and no soul is excluded from the gospel's invitation.

Unworldiness is this—to hold things from God in the perpetual conviction that they will not last; to have the world and not let the world have us; to be the world's masters and not the world's slaves.—F. W. Robertson.

To character and success two things, contradictory as they may seem, must go together—humble dependence and manly independence; humble dependence on God and manly reliance on self.—W. H. Wordsworth.

A physician can not be very successful unless he is enthusiastic about his profession, . . . and I tell you a Christian will never amount to much unless there is enthusiasm in his Christianity.—H. M. Wharton, D. D.

Reverence for a perfect character must be the basis of all development of human character. We must get a glimpse of God's perfect life that we may know our need of him.

"For to me to live is Christ." This is the ideal of the Christian life exemplified in actual experience.

CHRIST AND CAPITAL.

The talent of the capitallst, like that of the preacher or teacher or physician, is the gift of God and should be used in the service of Christ in the way of serving men. The capitalist is a leader of men, and his leadership is exercised chiefly over the men in his employ. His ability in controlling money and commanding men should be used so that men should have the profit of their product, as well as money the interest which its use demands. That is to say, the aim in business ought not to be to give capital the largest possible returns for its use and labor the least return which would be accepted, but to give labor equally with capital the largest possible return. The application of this principle may vary according to varying circumstances and the character of the men who are to be dealt with. It appears, however, in co-operation, in profit-sharing and in similar methods of dividing the products and profits of a business. The capitalist who looks upon his men as disciples and servants and fellow-workmen, and who endeavors to inspire them with the best motive for industry and thrift, and who attempts to lift them toward his own level in point of opportunity and increasing intelligence and comfort, will fulfill the law of Christ and will do much to save men. As men are saved from hopelessness and despondency and dissipation, and as they are inspired with faith and hope and energy, they are uplifted and made capable of both mental and moral cultivation. The reports of such companies as attempt the making of men partners in the profits of a business are most encouraging. At the recent annual meeting of the American Association for the Promotion of Profit-sharing the reports of the peace and prosperity of such companies as were governed by this spirit were most hopeful. One company, whose plan is to give capital six per cent. as legal interest, to allow a certain sum for a reserve and provident fund, and then to divide the surplus earnings, giving two per cent. on wages and one per cent. on capital, proposed last year during the depressed times to pay the men three-fourths of a day's wages for a full day's work on the understanding that as soon as possible wages should be restored to the former amount. The proposition was received by the men with cheers, and in October the wages were restored to the former rate.

The purport of this paper is to deal with the spirit and not with the details of business. Any man who will take the spirit of Christ into his business and attempt to serve his men by using his talents for them as well as for himself, by making them, as Christ makes his servants, co-workers and fellow-heirs with himself in a common cause, will find that he wins, as Christ wins, the faith and loyal love of his servants, and that in the spirit of his business there will be a sweet joy. And in the elevation of his own men there will come a richer reward than could come through the giving of alms or the endowment of educational institutions which are the two chief ways in which men of means have recently disposed of surplus wealth.

The capitalist who accepts Christ as his captain and who receives and obeys Christ's spirit, will find that his capital may become a means of salvation both to himself and to others and a means also of revealing and glorifying Christ.—W. M. McLeod, D. D., in New York Independent.

BUT—!

"Yes, he is a popular man; the people flock to hear him; he has many conversions; he brings up all the collections, and the people always want him returned, but——" But what? The real answer is that the brother in question is a grand success, and the man who "buts" him is a self-conscious failure. A really successful man is always the friend and admirer of others like himself, but the "little fellow" is full of envy, and he tries to conceal the sterility of his own character and work by minifying the labors and successes of others. Such a man should hie himself to his closet and remain in prayer until the devil of envy is cast out of his heart.

Brother, did you ever do another brother an injustice? Did you ever slander him, and work against him on the sly? Did you ever pass over his virtues and pick out every little flaw possible and magnify it to his hurt? If you did, you dislike that man to-day. He may have forgiven you—and if he is a Christian he has done it—but you have not forgiven yourself, and you try to ease your conscience by seaching for something wrong in him that will justify your evil treatment of him.

This is strange, but it is true: It is a principle of human nature to hate those we have wronged. The man who refuses to pay an honest debt is the worst enemy his creditor has. That doctor is a "quack" to whom we owe a bill we will not pay. The newspaper whose publisher's money we have already collected and spent is a "poor paper, anyway!" It is true the world over. The sinner hates him against whom he has transgressed. It began with Adam, who tried to palliate his disobedience by railing at the Lord: "The woman whom thou gavest to be with me, she gave me of the tree, and I did eat." This is the spirit of the tempter—the adversary—and it will not down nor be driven out except at the command of Jesus and by the power of the Holy Ghost. Brother, do you profess to love God? Hear him: "If a man love not his brother whom he hath seen, how can he love God whom he hath not seen?" "Charity envieth not;" and it is charity—love—that is the end of the law—that worketh no ill to his neighbor—yea, "thinketh no evil." Brother, how is the case with you?—Texas Advocate.

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE NONSENSE.

A little boy died in this city last week, while under treatment by a Christian Science "Doctor," a Mrs. Fitzpatrick. The "Doctor," in filling out the required death certificate, failed to state the disease of which the child died. In this way the case came before the coroner, who rigidly examined the "Doctor." When asked if she knew anything about diagnosing a case, or of making a medical examination, she said:

"I only examined the thoughts of the boy. That is all that is necessary."

When asked what she did towards healing the boy, she said: "I spoke the truth for him. The Bible says, 'Speak every man the truth to his neighbor. You shall know the truth, and the truth shall set you free.' That is the whole of our faith, and the only cure we know. With children too young to distinguish the difference between truth and untruth, we usually speak the truth to the parents or others, in order to destroy the error in the child."

"What, in your opinion, was the cause of death?" inquired the coroner.

"The little boy died in a power opposed to God, the enmity of the world against the truth of Jesus," was the reply.

"Now don't you know," said the coroner, "that under the medical law recently passed, you have no right whatever to practice the art of healing?"

She responded by saying that she was unaware that such was the fact. "Christian Science," she said, "does not come under that law. Law, as I understand it, is based on the Bible, and I can't conceive of any law that can be passed which will overrule the Bible."

So many of this kind of cases occur that it is high time the authorities insist upon a rigid enforcement of the law governing medical practitioners. The mere statement of Christian Science doctrine as given by this woman should be sufficient proof to any sane mind that the whole system is extremely fanatical and unscriptural. Such an interpretation of Scripture is so absurd that it passes belief how anyone in his senses can for a moment entertain it as honest, reasonable or true. It is on a par with the recent resolution of the Dunkards condemning bicycles on the scriptural ground that things that are highly esteemed among men, are an abomination to the Lord.—Evangelical Messenger.

MORE THOUGHT.

Is the fact sufficiently recognized that a man can make himself, within certain limits, almost anything he pleases by meditation? Thought induces feeling, and feeling action. Men complain that they do not feel. Why, then, do they not use the means which will produce emotion? Thinking is in the power of all, or nearly all. They can, if they choose, turn aside for a season regularly and meditate upon the importance of things they find themselves neglecting. Why not? If they really desire to improve in any direction, it seems as if they might adopt this simple method. Only by much meditation can our principles take on strength, and we attain to that firm conviction concerning an invisible world without which we shall not seek it as we should. A strong symmetrical character, steady and unwavering, heavenly-minded and imbued with the spirit of Christ, can be gained in no other way. More thought, more thought! He who meditates day and night in the law of the Lord, or the will of God, "shall be like a tree planted by the rivers of water, that bringeth forth his fruit in his season, and whatsoever he doeth shall prosper." Prof. Bowne well says in his admirable volume, "Principles of Ethics": "The great need of ethical practice, next to the good will, is a serious and thoughtful application of intellect to the problems of life and conduct. Misconduct and social evils in general arise less from a will to do wrong, than from an indifference to doing right. The people 'do not consider.' Until they do consider, we must worry along in the old way with an embryonic conscience, 'drugged by custom and warped by artificiality, while life is directed not by wise and serious reflection, but by conflicting passions and selfishness."—Zion's Herald.

IT MAKES A DIFFERENCE.

The popular adage is: "Oh, it makes no difference what a man believes, if he is sincere."

Let us see. A family was poisoned in Montgomery county recently by eating toadstools, which they sincerely believed to be mushrooms. Three of them died. Did it make no difference?

A man indorsed a note for a friend whom he sincerely believed to be an honest man. He was a scoundrel, and left him to pay the debt. Did it make no difference?

A traveler takes the wrong train going North, sincerely believing it is the Southern train. Will it make no difference? Will he bring up at the South all the same?

If a man sincerely believes a certain thing, while the truth about it is entirely different, will this sincere belief make it all right?

The truth is, the popular adage is a lie, and a very transparent one at that! If a man is sincere, he will take pains to know the truth. For where facts are concerned, all the thinking in the world will not change them. A toadstool remains a toadstool, whatever we may think about it.—The Covenant.

A cold intellectuality may be admirable, but not loveable. The intellect never reaches the meridian of its power until it is conjoined vitally and permanently with the heart. Love is supreme. Charity never faileth. It is fully to isolate and develop any one department of human nature. A symmetrical expansion and refinement of the whole man should be our objective point and ultimate aim. When the energy of mind is kindled and intensified by the flames of the heart it is quadrupled. Love can redeem a comparatively barren mind and can double the force of a weak one.—Texas Advocate.

A great deal depends upon the point of view. It is not strange that scientific men, dealing almost exclusively with material things should become materialists. Nor is it peculiar that men studying metaphysical themes alone should adopt an idealistic philosophy. "The dyer's hand is subdued to that which it works in." Environment tells. We need the broad view which comprehends all the interests of life. We need the eye which glances from earth to heaven, from heaven to earth. Let no man be victimized by his profession or his circumstances.—Texas Advocate.

It is a misfortune for any man to be soured on his church. He may be plain, he may be candid, but he ought to be loving toward his individual brethren and toward the church as a whole. The words of a sore-head, a malcontent, do not step with the man that hears them, but they start a wave of disloyalty and discontent that may break on distant shores. Prudence and justice on the one hand and patience and charity on the other are much needed in all the churches of the land.

Goodness expands the heart, and makes it humble. The larger, the better; the nobler your heart is, the more you will be inclined to make allowance for others, and the more you will say and feel, "God be merciful to me, a sinner!"—F. W. Robertson.

FROM THE WORK.

Rev. J. White Davis, Harrisonburg circuit, Louisiana Conference, Dec. 27, 1897: "For two weeks, or more, the good people of Sicily Island and Harrisonburg have been sending good things to the family of the writer. Such a Christmas as we have enjoyed this year has not been our lot before. We have not been 'pounded,' but there has been a steady stream pouring in that has been of great benefit to the preacher's family. God bless the donors! Our report for Conference will show a decrease of about eleven members, but we have been 'pruning' the church registers some this year. The Conference collections are a little in advance of last year, but the presiding elder's and preacher in charge are less than heretofore. Out of about 100 families on Sicily Island we have visited 83, and at Harrisonburg 41, making 124 families on my work, with something like 800 pastoral visits."

There is a world of romance in the picture of a young girl reading her sweetheart's love-letters. In a multitude of cases, if her future could also be pictured, the picture would contain a world of pathos. To the healthy, robust woman, marriage means happiness, the supreme joy of motherhood and the promise of a long, healthy life of helpfulness with the man of her choice. To the woman who suffers from disease or weakness of the delicate and important organs concerned in wifehood and motherhood, wedlock means suffering and maternity death. Dr. R. V. Pierce is an eminent and skillful specialist, for thirty years chief consulting physician to the Invalids' Hotel and Surgical Institute, of Buffalo, N. Y. During that time, with the assistance of a staff of able physicians, he has prescribed for thousands of women. The institute of which he is the head is one of the greatest in the world. He is a regularly graduated physician and has practiced right in one place for thirty years. The esteem in which he is held by his neighbors is shown by the fact that they chose him for their representative in the National Congress. The regard in which he is held by those whom he has treated is shown by the thousands of letters printed in Dr. Pierce's Common Sense Medical Adviser, telling of the benefits derived from his treatment.
Dr. Pierce is the discoverer of a wonderful medicine for women, known as Doctor Pierce's Favorite Prescription. It cures all weakness and disease of the feminine organs. It allays inflammation, heals ulceration and soothes pain. It tones the nerves. Taken during the interesting period, it banishes the usual discomforts and makes baby's advent easy and almost painless. Thousands of women have testified to its marvelous merits. An honest druggist won't advise a substitute.
The profit side of life is health. The balance is written in the rich, red, pure blood of health. Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets cure constipation and make the blood rich and pure. They never gripe. By druggists.

THE MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

We were present at the recent session of the Mississippi Conference throughout the entire time, with the exception of the last day, Monday. Several connectional brethren honored us with their presence, viz.: Drs. Barbee, Morrison, Steel, Bigham, and Hoss, each of whom magnified his office. We had the privilege of hearing most excellent sermons by Drs. Morrison, Hoss and Featherstun. We committed two attempts at preaching—one at Capitol Street Church on Friday night, and another at the Baptist Church on Sunday night.

We were delightfully entertained by our friends, Mr. and Mrs. T. A. McWillie, whose generous hospitality we much enjoyed. We were fortunate also in having as our co-guests such delightful companions as Bros. R. F. Jones, G. M. Hull, and T. L. Mount. We also enjoyed the hospitalities of Hon. E. Mayes, I. C. Enochs, and Rev. H. F. Sproles, pastor of the Baptist Church.

Our time being occupied with our work as publisher, we secured the services of Rev. M. M. Black to report the proceedings of the Conference.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

FIRST DAY.

Conference met at 9:30 A. M. in First Church, Jackson, Bishop Wilson in the chair. After the reading of a Scripture lesson from the seventh chapter of Matthew, Hymn 220 was fervently sung, and the Bishop led the Conference in prayer. The roll was next called, and most of the clerical members and a goodly proportion of the lay members answered to their names. Dr. C. G. Andrews, who has served the Conference so long and so well as the chief secretary, was unanimously re-elected to that office. The following were elected as his assistants: J. A. B. Jones, W. L. Linfield, G. H. Galloway, J. G. Galloway, H. G. Hawkins, and C. F. Emery. Nine o'clock A. M. and 3 P. M. were fixed as the hours for meeting and adjournment.

The various standing committees having been appointed, communications were read from Barbee & Smith, Agents of the Publishing House; from Dr. James Atkins, Sunday-school Secretary; from Dr. R. J. Bigham, Secretary of the Board of Education; from Paine and Lane Institutes, and from the Missionary Secretaries, from the Scarritt Bible and Training-school. The report from the Publishing House announced a gratifying increase in the volume of business for the year, the gain in assets being $41,000.

During the morning session Dr. Barbee turned over the sum of $700 from the Publishing House to the Board of Finance for the superannuates. The Missionary Secretaries reported a considerable advance in the collections over last year, and mentioned that the largest increase in collections and in membership in our mission fields this year has been in Brazil.

A memorial was presented from the W. P. and H. M. Society, requesting the attention of the ministry to the convicts on our State farms. Same was referred.

A letter from Dr. J. B. Fearn, our medical missionary to China, was then read, telling of a forward movement at all mission stations in that benighted land, and making an earnest request for re-enforcements.

The following brethren were then presented to the Conference: Dr. J. D. Barbee, Dr. E. E. Hoss, Dr. W. B. Murrah, Rev. Mr. Hutton, pastor of the Presbyterian Church; Rev. Mr. Cobb, of the Tennessee Conference, and Revs. G. W. Bachman and J. A. Bowen, of the North Mississippi Conference. Later on Rev. Dr. Hunter, of Jackson; Rev. J. B. K. Spain, Dr. R. J. Bigham, Secretary of the Board of Education, were introduced.

Dr. Murrah now read a highly gratifying report from Millsaps College, announcing a present enrollment of 170 students, with prospect for a considerable increase in the near future. Twenty of the students are the sons of preachers, and sixteen are preparing for the ministry. There are twenty enrolled in the Law Department. The college has not a dollar of indebtedness.

The following names were then referred to the Committee on Conference Relations: J. W. Sandell, supernumerary; A. B. Nicholson, H. J. Harris, E. A. Flowers, Geo. Bancroft, J. W. Harmon, J. A. Vance, H. R. Caldwell, J. H. Evans, R. A. Sibley, N. B. Yonng, W. B. Hines, J. M. Pugh, P. Howard, D. G. W. Ellis, L. P. Meador.

The names of the presiding elders were next called, their characters were passed, and each made a report of the state of his district. Dr. Weems stated that, notwithstanding the flood and the yellow fever, which affected a large portion of the Vicksburg district so seriously, most of the pastors would bring up fine reports. Dr. Andrews reported an increase of 500 members on the Meridian district—one new church at Binnsville, and one new parsonage at East End, Meridian. Bro. W. W. Simmons reported five new churches on the Brandon district.

The names of the class of the second year were called, their characters were passed, and the following were advanced to the class of the third year: T. B. Cottrell, R. L. Phillips, R. A. Sibley, and J. H. Foreman. M. A. Thurman and G. M. Hull were continued in the class of second year. T. B. Cottrell and R. L. Phillips were elected to deacon's orders.

The Conference then listened to a very forceful and pleasing address by Dr. Hoss, editor of the Nashville Advocate.

Afterwards the passage of character was resumed, and reports were heard from the pastors in the Vicksburg, Natchez and Seashore districts.

Rev. I. W. Cooper read a report from the trustees of Whitworth College, which mentioned that the college now has 104 boarding pupils, and also that $500 has been expended since June in building and repairing. Then came sundry announcements and adjournment.

SECOND DAY.

Religious exercises were conducted by Rev. H. W. Featherstun. The following had their characters passed, and were continued in the class of the third year: J. C. Ellis, C. M. Crossley, E. E. Langford, G. W. Huff, and H. C. Brown. The last-named brother, having asked for a supernumerary relation on account of failing health and loss of voice, was referred to the Committee on Conference Relations. J. D. Ellis, R. E. Rutledge, Waldo W. Moore and W. M. Williams were advanced to the class of the fourth year. Thos. C. King and M. J. Miller, both in the class of the third year, were located at their own request.

A telegram of greeting from Conference of the Colored Methodist Episcopal Church, in session at Columbus, was received at this point, and Secretary Andrews was instructed to send a suitable response.

H. A. Gatlin was admitted on trial. J. J. Golden, H. J. Moore, W. A. Terry were elected to local deacon's orders. Robt. W. Burton was elected local elder.

Rev. H. C. Morrison, Missionary Secretary, and Dr. S. A. Steel, having arrived, were presented to the Conference. President Beeson then read a report from East Mississippi Female College, mentioning among other items of interest an enrollment of 300 students the present session, 100 of these being boarders. Several thousand dollars' worth of improvements have been made on the property during the year, and the school is having the most prosperous year of its history.

The following were admitted into full connection after having been treated to a very impressive and helpful address by Bishop Wilson, namely: R. L. Phillips, T. B. Cottrell, R. A. Sibley, and J. H. Foreman.

At the conclusion of his address Bishop Wilson called Bishop Galloway to the chair, who presided in his usual happy and easy style during the remainder of the morning session.

After hearing reports of all the pastors whose names had not been called the day previous, the Conference elected the following to elder's orders, they having stood approved examinations on the course of the fourth year: Chas. F. Emery, M. M. Black, E. T. Breland, A. H. Shannon, and J. G. Cammack. Robt. H. Barr and H. B. Vandenburg were continued in the class of the fourth year.

The Conference then proceeded to the selection of a place for holding the next Conference, and Hattiesburg was chosen.

Dr. Barbee now came forward and made a stirring and highly entertaining address in behalf of the Publishing House and its periodicals. The Doctor is a finent and humorous talker.

It was moved and carried that 9:30 A. M., Saturday, be appointed as the hour for electing delegates to the General Conference. Then came announcements and the benediction.

THIRD DAY.

Conference opened at the usual hour. Rev. A. F. Watkins conducted the religious exercises. After the approval of the Minutes, W. A. Gunning read the report of the directors of the Orphans' Home at Water Valley, informing the Conference that the building, though not entirely completed, is ready for occupancy, and requesting the appointment of Rev. M. L. Burton as manager. Same was adopted.

The report of the Committee on State of the Church spoke in strong terms against card playing, dancing, theater-going, and lax living, but took a hopeful view of the piety of the church as a whole.

A resolution introduced by Dr. H. M. DuBose, unqualifiedly condemning lynching, and all other forms of lawlessness, and calling upon the people everywhere to aid the officers of the law in suppressing mob rule, was unanimously adopted.

The Committee on Temperance brought in a ringing report, which was also heartily adopted, embodying a resolution requesting the Mississippi Legislature to make a slight change in the present excellent prohibition law, so as to prevent the sale of "hop tea," hop ale, etc., in prohibition counties, and making imprisonment for the unlawful sale of intoxicants not optional, but obligatory.

The Conference next adopted a memorial to Congress, asking for the passage of a law forbidding the granting of revenue licenses authorizing the sale of beer and intoxicants in any county or State where there is a State enactment in force against such sale. A second memorial, addressed to the General Conference, proposing certain changes in those paragraphs of the Discipline respecting the holding of church property, was adopted. A resolution was passed, urging the favorable and prompt action of Congress in the payment of a war claim of our Publishing House.

The following were then granted the relation of superannuates: A. B. Nicholson, H. J. Harris, E. A. Flowers, Geo. Bancroft, J. A. Vance, H. R. Caldwell, J. H. Evans, R. A. Sibley, N. B. Yonng, W. B. Hines, J. M. Pugh, P. Howard, D. G. W. Ellis, L. P. Meador, and J. W. Harmon.

J. W. Sandell and J. M. Cowan were placed on the supernumerary list.

Dr. Tigert, Book Editor, then entertained the Conference for a while by an eloquent speech in behalf of the Publishing House and the Review, which he declared has a larger circulation than any other such publication in our sister Methodist Churches.

Dr. S. A. Steel next made an address upon the Epworth League, fine in thought and utterance. He likened the League to a brand new mogul engine, which is ready to pull anything you hitch to it. The League, he believes fully, is the God-ordained means for the development of Christian character through service.

The Sabbath observance report, which was adopted, protested against the use of Sunday trains, the purchase and reading of Sunday papers, social visiting on the Sabbath, and the receiving of Sunday mails. It requested also that the next Conference be convened on Thursday, as was the case this year.

After the reports of the Committee on Bible Cause, the Joint Board of Finance and the Church Extension Board had been heard, Miss Addie Purnell, president of the W. P. and H. M. Society, made an earnest talk in behalf of the noble cause she represents.

Rev. E. T. Breland was located at his own request.

The following were elected delegates to the General Conference: Clerical: C. G. Andrews, D. D.; W. C. Black, A. F. Watkins. Alternates: W. B. Lewis and T. L. Mellen. Lay: Capt. S. B. Watts, Edward Mayes, and H. P. McGehee. Alternates: Rev. Irvin Miller and R. W. Millsaps.

Conference adjourned to meet at three o'clock P. M.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

Conference met at 3 P. M., Bishop Galloway in the chair. Bishop Wilson came in later and presided. Following the report of the Sunday-school Board came the report of the Committee on Publishing Interests, which recommended the re appointment of R. W. Bailey, R. J. Jones, and W. B. Lewis on the Publishing Committee, and also of the present incumbent as editor of the NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE. The said report, which was adopted in full, highly commended the Nashville Advocate, as well as the other publications of our Publishing House, and contained the following respecting the NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE:

"We deprecate the disposition of some preachers and laymen to subordinate the interests of our own publication to so called Methodist papers that are inimical to organized Methodism, whose columns abound in harsh and unjust criticism of the officers and doctrines of our church. Such publications circulated in the families of our people are calculated to inculcate in the minds of both young and old disloyalty to the doctrines and institutions of Methodism.... We rejoice in the continued prosperity of our Conference organ under the able management of Dr. Black. The marked improvement in the appearance of the paper is very gratifying, and we urge our preachers to renewed diligence in securing for it the support of our people."

A resolution was passed making it the duty of the pastors to read the report of the Committee on Publishing Interests to their several congregations.

Next came report of Board of Education, followed by addresses from Dr. Murrah and President Chambers. Report requested a sermon on Christian Education in every pastoral charge the first Sunday in May.

The lay delegation to the General Conference was completed at this session by the election of Howard P. McGehee, with Rev. Irvin Miller and R. W. Millsaps as alternates.

A resolution was passed requesting that steps be taken toward the correlation of the several female colleges within the bounds of the Conference.

The Colportage Board, in its report, made a very favorable showing as regards our Book Depository at Jackson, and recommend the reappointment of Rev. R. W. Bailey as colporter. Same was adopted.

The statistical secretary then reported the following items in answer to the questions in the Discipline: Local preachers this year, 117; white members, 36,443 (last year, 37,686); infants baptized during the year, 954; adults baptized, 792; number of Epworth Leagues, 36; Epworth League members, 1,647; number of Sunday-schools, 343; Sunday-school teachers, 2,051; Sunday-school scholars, 16,925. Contributed for foreign missions, $5,936.35; contributed for same last year, $6,528.93. Contributed for domestic missions, $2,353.13; contributed for church extension, $1,677.75; contributed for American Bible Society, $772.82; contributed for Bishops, $1,261.48; raised for support of presiding elders, $9,025.72; raised for support of pastors, $59,924 83. Number of societies, 428; number of church edifices, 386; number of pastoral charges, 123; number of parsonages, 107; number of district parsonages, 4.

By a rising vote the Conference adopted resolutions thanking the people of Jackson for their kindly hospitality, the pastors of the Baptist, Presbyterian, and Campbellite Churches for courtesies extended, the several railroads of the State and the press, both of Jackson and New Orleans, for favors and courtesies. Conference then adjourned till Monday morning.

SUNDAY'S SERVICES.

Commencing at 9 o'clock A. M. a love feast was held, conducted by Dr. C. G. Andrews, which was largely attended. It was a most delightful and helpful service. At 11 o'clock A. M., in the First Methodist Church, Bishop Wilson preached a grand and eloquent sermon upon the text: "For I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ, for it is the power of God unto salvation to everyone that believeth, to the Jew first, and also to the Greek." (Rom. 1, 16.) It was a masterly discourse, and was punctuated by many hearty amens, the Bishop several times taking some lofty flights that almost made his hearers forget whether they were in or out of the body.

After the sermon the following brethren were ordained deacons: Traveling deacons—Robert L. Phillips, Thomas B. Cottrell and R. A. Sibley, Jr. Local deacons—John J. Golden, Henry Jackson Moore and W. A. Terry.

At three o'clock P. M. a memorial service was held in honor of Rev. R. S. Woodward and Rev. J. V. Penn. The memoir of the former was read by Dr. C. G. Andrews; that of the latter by Rev. A. F. Watkins. Tributes to their memory were lovingly paid by a number of the brethren. The service closed with the sacrament of the Lord's Supper.

At 4 o'clock P. M., in the Epworth Hall, a League rally was held, at which a large crowd was present. Dr. Steel made the address, which was full of humor and good points.

At 7 P. M. Dr. Steel preached an earnest and powerful sermon in First Church upon the Holy Ghost, at the conclusion of which the following were ordained elders: Chas. F. Emery, Paul D. Hardin, McKendree M. Black, E. T. Breland, H. G. Hawkins, A. H. Shannon, Jas. T. Leggett, and J. G. Cammack, traveling elders; and Robt. W. Burton, local elder.

MONDAY MORNING'S SESSION.

Bishop Wilson opened Conference at the appointed hour, and after the usual preliminaries reports were heard from two or three committees which had not previously reported. Rev. H. W. Van Hook read the Epworth League report, which showed that while the League has not made as rapid progress in this Conference as ought to have been the case, it is moving forward and accomplishing much good.

After an earnest appeal in behalf of the Indian Mission by Rev. T. L. Mellen, a collection was taken for that cause amounting to $21 in cash and $21 in subscriptions.

The following resolutions, stated in brief, were offered by the Board of Missions and adopted by the Conference: 1. That missionary mass meetings be held by each presiding elder wherever practicable in his district. 2. That a missionary society be organized in connection with every Sunday-school in each pastoral charge. 3. That a missionary collection be taken and the full amount secured as early in the year as possible. 4. That earnest effort be made to circulate missionary literature among our people. 5. That all missionary funds be sent to our own Conference treasurer for distribution.

Rev. M. L. Burton, in a brief speech, plead for the hearty co-operation of the preachers and people in behalf of the Mississippi Orphanage, of which he is now manager.

Revs. H. G. Hawkins and C. F. Emery in short, but forceful speeches, urged the brethren to do their utmost to secure the enforcement of the present excellent laws of our State respecting Sabbath observance.

All other matters having been attended to, Bishop Wilson took occasion to speak a few kindly words of admonition and encouragement preliminary to reading the appointments. Speaking of the presiding eldership question, he remarked that that office, though sometimes misused, is an arm of power, and is almost absolutely essential to the success of Methodism. He urged the brethren of the ministry to cultivate habits of thinking, and advised them to have some positive line of study always on hand. "The people," he remarked, "want what you know, not merely what you have heard or read. We expect and require of you that you leave your works in better condition than when you took charge, if not financially, at least religiously." "Nobody," he further said, "is so like a true athlete as a minister who has to face a congregation and the devil. Possibly some mistakes will be made in the appointments; but," said he, "give me a perfect set of men, and I will give you a perfect set of appointments."

THE NIGHT SERVICES AND THE WATCH-NIGHT MEETING.

On Wednesday night Dr. H. W. Featherstun preached an able and entertaining sermon.

Thursday evening the pulpit of First Church was filled by Dr. E. E. Hoss, of the Nashville Advocate, who preached a sermon of great power and helpfulness, using as a text the sixteenth verse of the third chapter of John.

On Friday night an educational mass meeting was held, the house being filled to its utmost capacity. Rev. A. F. Watkins presided. The first speaker was Dr. W. B. Murrah, who delivered a magnificent address. He was followed by Dr. R. J. Bigham, Secretary of the Board of Education, who warmly eulogized the work of the smaller colleges, and made an earnest plea in behalf of Paine and Lane Institutes for the education of colored youth. His address was strong and eloquent, and he made a fine impression. Bishop Galloway then came forward, and proceeded to take a collection for Haygood Memorial Hall, the splendid sum of $268 being quickly secured. The Bishop has few equals as a collector, as indeed he has few in the line of pulpit oratory.

After a meeting of the Conference Brotherhood, lasting for about three-quarters of an hour, the audience had the pleasure of listening to Dr. Sam Steel's matchless address on "The Pioneers of Methodism," which was listened to with breathless attention by the vast audience. Some had gotten sleepy before he began, but they soon woke up, and remained awake till the meeting broke up. At times his hearers were electrified. The lecture closed about a quarter before twelve o'clock, and then the solemn and impressive watch-night service began, which was conducted by Dr. C. G. Andrews. A hymn of consecration was sung suitable to the dying year. The whole audience joined in silent prayer for five minutes, and then was led by Rev. W. B. Lewis, the striking of the midnight hour finding all upon their knees, confessing their sins and renewing their vows. Then the congregation rose and sang with great fervor the New Year's hymn, after which Dr. Steel requested everybody present who was determined by the help of God to live a better life during the New Year, to come up and shake his hands. Nearly everyone present responded. It was a scene never to be forgotten.

On Saturday night a missionary mass meeting was held, addresses being delivered by Dr. H. C. Morrison, whose remarks are always eloquent and edifying, and by Miss Addie Marshall, president of the W. F. M. S. A collection was taken amounting to about $31.

CONFERENCE NOTES.

The connectional brethren were present in full force. General Conference is nigh at hand.

Dr. DuBose was all that could be desired as a Conference host, and his praise was in the mouths of all.

The weather was delightful—in fact, ideal. Scarcely a cloud flecked the sky during the entire session.

Twenty-five or more ladies, many of them ministers' wives, were in attendance upon the Conference.

Revs. R. M. Standifer, J. A. Bowen, and J. H. Mitchell, of the North Mississippi Conference, delighted us by their presence.

Rev. J. O. Andrew, D. D., editor of the Alabama Advocate, was in attendance, and preached a strong sermon at the Capitol Street Church, Sunday morning.

Bishop Wilson presides with wonderful ease and skill, and despatches business rapidly, but not hurriedly. He is a man of great force and measureless resources.

Notwithstanding it was the holiday season, the people of Jackson were exceeding generous in their hospitality, and vied with each other in extending courtesies to their guests.

All were charmed at having our beloved Bishop Galloway present at the Conference, and participating in its work. It is not often we are so fortunate as to have two Bishops on hand.

The Conference was remarkable for harmony, good feeling, brevity, and the absence of complaints and ugly charges. In not a single instance was a committee appointed to investigate charges against ministerial character.

It was a matter for surprise, as well as congratulation, that the charges which had been visited by yellow fever brought up such excellent reports. Rev. J. G. Galloway, of Edwards, reported the assessments for foreign missions and for Conference claimants paid in full, and only twenty-five per cent. shortage in the other assessments. Rev. C. F. Emery reported his own salary as overpaid, the presiding elder's assessment as paid in full, and the other assessments as only one-third behind.

In these days of disappointments it a gratification to know that one can buy a bottle of Salvation Oil for 25 cts.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

The MSS. of the Minutes went into the hands of the printers to-day. They say that the job will be completed in fifteen days. The ministers will please let me know their post-offices at once. Also let me know if there has been any change in the number of their members, so that I may know how to apportion the Minutes among their pastoral charges.

C. G. ANDREWS, Sec'y.

AIDERS OF ANARCHY.

Two classes of men in this country are public enemies. They are the insincere labor agitator who has his living by that craft, and the heartless and grasping capitalist who is ever ready to take advantage of the necessities of the poor and who regards the working people in the light of machines, to be run up to their full capacity until worn out, and then remorselessly thrown aside. These persons, while as far apart as the poles, so far as social position is concerned, and while proclaiming diametrically opposite opinions, are really allies. They have, in fact, precisely similar motives, though on a different scale, for while the agitator seeks to secure a precarious livelihood, the capitalist's purpose is to add to his wealth. Neither has the least interest in the welfare of the country or the happiness of his fellows. Both are saturated with selfishness and both are breeders of anarchy. The dawn of the millennium will witness the disappearance of both, and it will be a good riddance of bad rubbish.

The professional agitator is a workingman in name only. He may have a knowledge of some wage-earning calling, but it is many a day since his hands bore the mark of real toil. He goes about among mechanics and laborers stirring up the embers of discontent that smoulder in almost every heart. He takes advantage of the organizations that exist among workingmen, sometimes creating unions of his own, and subordinating the associations of the industrial portion of the population to his own selfish uses. He flourishes best in hard times, for it is then he can most effectively appeal to the spirit of discontent. He is in his element when organizing a strike, nor does he ever bother his head about the justice or reason of the demands which workingmen make by his advice, nor the probability of success. He is after notoriety and revenue, and both come in full measure when a strike is on. He is a person whose heart is full of mischief which his tongue constantly expresses, and the wise workingman will have nothing to do with him.

Perhaps the most dangerous force in this country, however, is the person or combination of persons whose dominating thought is to get the greatest amount of work out of employees at the least possible cost, and who never manifests the least interest in their welfare. Hardness produces hardness. While the employer looks down from a fancied eminence upon the men and women whose toil is adding to his wealth with much the same feeling that the slave owner used to regard his chattel, a sentiment of hatred takes possession of the mechanic's heart. He is in a mood to listen to the solicitations of the anarchist.

Those who assume an attitude of indifference to their workmen are the enemies of their own order. One such person is a more potent ally of anarchy than a thousand John Mosts. There needs to be a realization of this fact and a concentration of public sentiment against corporate or individual selfishness. Thousands of employers are generous and humane, interested in the welfare of their servants and willing to pay fair wages. May their tribe increase!—Central Advocate.

For hoarseness, loss of voice, and all affections of the vocal organs, the favorite remedy with many clergymen, singers, actors, auctioneers, and public speakers, is Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. As an anodyne expectorant, its beneficial effects are promptly realized.

Happy Homes

Hearts that Make Them;

Or, Thrifty People and Why They Thrive

BY

SAMUEL SMILES,

AUTHOR OF SELF-HELP, CHARACTER, DUTY, THRIFT, ETC.

CAREFULLY REVISED WITH ADDITIONAL MATTER BY CHAS. A. CASKELL, A. M.

A beautifully illustrated book of 644 pages, cover stamped in gold, marble edges, size 8vo, red cloth. Probably no books of the same general type were ever written that have so much interested and inspired to worthy action the various classes to whom they were addressed, as have the productions of SAMUEL SMILES. The marked interest which attaches to MR. SMILES' productions is chiefly due to his happy use of biography. Readers who tire of extended biographical histories find here groups of the wise and distinguished of earth, each giving testimony to the various principles the author wishes to inculcate. The interest excited by the novel arises solely from our interest in the lives and struggles of men and women. They are interesting biographies; but much more interest should attach to lives actually lived and conquests actually made, provided they are produced with equal care. The home is the epitome of society and government. The application of these principles to every member of the home—the importance of their inculcation in the home, where character is chiefly molded—and the value of such lessons in making every home what it may be and should be, has dictated the title,

"Happy Homes and the Hearts that Make Them."

A SMALL BOY'S PLAINT.

When the blizzard is blowing outside in the street, I have to stay here in the house.
I have to sit quiet the whole of the time, as still as a little brown mouse.
They won't let me tease my small brother at all, or play with my small sister's things,
And mama's not pleased if I step in her room and set off a little firm sneezing.

And papa gets mad as a crazy March hare when I cut pictures out of his books.
I can not go down to the kitchen to stay, because we have the crossest of cooks.
The waitress don't like it if, by some mischance, I upset the cranberry pie.
On blizzardly days there isn't a boy so unhappy and tired as I.

The dog, he snaps at me if I pull his tail; and pussy, she scratches my hand
If I put her aboard the piano and play she's the head of a musical band.
The baby, he cries if I poke at his eyes, and his nurse drives me out of the place,
And tells me that all through the rest of the day, she don't want a sight of my face.

I wish it would clear, for I want to go out; I can not stay quiet and still.
I'm so full of moviness all of the time, that sitting down makes me feel ill.
I can not do anything—no, not a thing I can't say I will or I won't;
I can not go out, and I can not stay in, when there's nothing to do but to don't.

Harper's Bazar.

LOVE IN THE HOME.

Love is the wind, the tide, the waves, the sunshine. Its power is incalculable; it is many horse-power. It never ceases, it never slacks; it can move with the globe without a resting-place; it can warm without fire; it can feed without meat; it can clothe without garments; it can shelter without roof; it can make a paradise within, which will dispense with a paradise without. But, though the wisest men in all ages have labored to publish this force, and every human heart is, sooner or later, more or less, made to feel it, yet how little is actually applied to social ends. True, it is the motive power of all successful social machinery; but, as in physics, we have made the elements do only a little drudgery for us, steam to take the place of a few horses, wind of a few oars, water of a few cranks and hand-mills; as the mechanical forces have not yet been generously and largely applied to make the physical world answer to the ideal, so the power of love has been but meanly and sparingly applied as yet.—Henry D. Thoreau.

"Though his hair be gray, he is not old in mind," so said one of the Latin poets. A man's physical powers may become enfeebled by age or other causes, while his mind remains clear and vigorous. Constant rubbing burnishes the steel; constant use brightens the intellect.—Rev. John Scott, D. D.

HALL'S Vegetable Sicilian HAIR RENEWER

Gives new life and vigor to the roots of the hair. It's like water to a drooping plant. No gray hair. No baldness.

TO SPOIL A CHILD.

1. Begin young by giving him whatever he cries for.

2. Tell him he is too much for you—that you can do nothing with him.

3. Have divided counsels as between father and mother.

4. Let him learn (from his father's example) to despise his mother.

5. Do not know or care who his companions may be.

6. Let him read whatever he likes.

7. Let the child, whether boy or girl, rove the streets in the evenings—a good school for both sexes.

8. Strain at a gnat and swallow a camel; chastise severely for a foible, and laugh at a vice.

These rules are not untried. Many parents have proved them with substantial uniformity of results. If a faithful observance of them does not spoil your child, you will at least have the comfortable reflection that you have done what you could.—The Author of "How to Be Happy Though Married," Christian Commonwealth.

LEARN TO WORK.

No young man can make a success in life unless he works. He can not loaf around the street-corner saloons without deteriorating. He must learn a trade or do some honest work; or, before he knows it, he will be a chronic loafer, despised by all with whom he comes in contact.

Do something, no matter how small, and do it well, and you will eventually find yourself climbing the ladder of success. There are many obstacles to overcome, but toil, grit and endurance will overcome them all. Help yourself, and God and good men will help you.—Farm and Fireside.

Pa: "A man who disagrees with you politically, my son."

ON BEING HURRIED.

There are very few occasions in life that call for hurry. Perhaps no one man confronts in his whole career more than two or three emergencies that call for instant action. It requires the genius of insight and courage to deal with those. But in the vast majority of instances we make a fatal mistake when we suffer the urgency of others, or an apparent crisis, to lead us into a course of action that has not been thoroughly considered. It is wonderful what a capacity things that we consider urgent have for "keeping," if one is only self-contained and patient enough to let them "keep." One of the most successful business men we have ever known was famous for his refusal to give immediate decisions upon important questions. He said to those who knew him well that he had "to sleep over" things before he made up his mind. That did not mean that he took them home to worry about them, but that he let them lie in his mind and germinate before he would decide just what he would do. At least, he gained the advantage of looking at the matter from several different points of view. And the point of view frequently changes the whole aspect of a situation. The men who are in such a "drive" and hurry that they must make up their minds "right away" turn up with unusual frequency in the bankruptcy courts. There is nothing lost by following the sound maxim, "If you don't know what to do, do nothing."—Watchman.

RECONCILIATION.

It is the custom in Germany to bury all quarrels with the old year. On the first day of the new year those who have not spoken to each other for eleven months begin again to be brotherly. Friends that have fallen out with each other fall in again. That is better than to wait as they did in some old heathen land until one party is dead. Then his coffin halted before the door of his enemy for reconciliation. But even that was better than to wait until both are before the judgment bar of God. How little your excuse will look in the light of the throne!—Christian Observer.

"A demagogue," said a small boy who builded better than he knew, "is a vessel that holds wine, gin, whisky, or any other liquor."—Youth's Companion.

Hygiene.

WARM BATHS.

Warm baths often prevent the most virulent diseases. A person who may be in fear of having received infection of any kind should take a warm bath, suffer perspiration to ensue, and then rub dry. He is advised to dress warmly to guard against taking cold. If the system has imbibed any infections matter, it will be removed by resorting to the warm bath, if the latter is taken before the infection has had time to spread over the system, and even if some time has elapsed, the drenching perspiration that may be induced by hot water will be very likely to remove it. In case of congestion, bilious colic, inflammation, etc., there is no remedy more certain to give relief than a hot bath. In case of obstinate constipation, also, wonderful cures have been wrought.—The Pacific.

To maintain a sound mind in a sound, healthy body there are important rules to be carefully observed. Keep the whole body clean, and the skin clear and unobstructed, secure perfect digestion, maintain an approving conscience and a cheerful, contented disposition, and your reward shall be happy, youthful days, vigor and strength in mature years, crowning ripe old age with the full experience of a useful life.—Housekeeper.

Beer, wine, spirits, etc., furnish no element capable of entering into the composition of blood, muscular fiber, or any part which is the seat of the vital principle.—Baron Liebig.

Deeds are the surest cure for doubts. He who lives in faithfulness will live also in the fullness of faith.—The Lookout.

COTTRELL—Mrs. FANNIE G., wife of Rev. T. B. Cottrell, and daughter of W. and Maggie Cannon, was born near Daytona, Orange county, Ala., Feb. 14, 1872; was married at Selma, Ala., April 16, 1889, and died at Lake City, Miss., Nov. 21, 1897, leaving a husband and four little girls, the youngest an infant only five days old, when she died. She was raised by Christian parents, her father always holding some prominent office, or offices, in the church, and has been for several years a most efficient Sabbath-school superintendent in the First Methodist Church of Selma, Ala. Her mother died when she was quite young. One brother, two affectionate sisters, and other relatives, besides father, survive to mourn her apparently timely death.

Fannie was trained up a Christian, and adorned the doctrine in all the relations of life she sustained. Her love for husband and children was most beautiful, ever manifested, not only in kisses and caresses, but in faithful and timely ministries. Her "honeymoon" never waned; she was always like and fond loving bride. Her family discipline was always gentle, yet effectual. She never exhibited the least impatience, not even under the most trying provocations. Her purest, ardent, conjugal love, backed by good sense, made her a most valued helpmeet. Her husband's business was her business, and she watched it with jealous care. Everything that created "Tom," as she called him, interested her. All that "Tom" loved she loved. Tom's father and sisters were her father and sisters. She was literally one of us. How devoted to give her up! When "Tom" joined Mississippi Conference she felt, as every preacher's wife should feel, that she must fit for his responsibilities. She threw herself fully into the work, studying more diligently the Methodist Discipline, and reading more carefully the denominational papers, missionary journals, etc. She visited with him on charge, and with a facility of adaptation which could come only from the heart won universal love and esteem. She, like her Master, was no respecter of persons, but seemed to partial to the poor. Before she was a preacher's wife, on occasion of public festivals was careful to look after the neglected.

The noble women on Silver Creek and Lee Lake charge evinced their appreciation and love for her both by word and deed, often making her useful presents. Hospitality knew no limits nor discrimination. She was especially delighted with the visit of preachers, and those who visited her husband will witness to the ever cordial attentions and thoughtful and considerate entertainments she rendered them. Taking a dear one from a fond husband and four little children, and from so useful a life, who can tell be numbered with those strange dispensations incomprehensible to the human mind but "He doeth all things well," and his grace is sufficient.

"Judge not the Lord by feeble sense,
But trust him for his grace;
Behind a frowning providence
He hides a smiling face."

Though "clouds and darkness are round about him," yet "righteousness and judgment are the habitation of his throne."

Farewell for a time, precious Fannie! We are coming, and, if faithful, all of us will soon be with you. H. COTTRELL.

McALLISTER—JOHN CALVIN McALLISTER was born at Bowling Green, Ky., Jan. 4, 1820, and died at New Orleans, La., Dec. 14, 1897. At an early age he moved to Jackson, Miss., where he engaged in mercantile, and also served as postmaster. Here in 1842, he married Miss Almira Judd, who was the faithful and affectionate partner of his life, and who tenderly closed his dying eyes.

While in New Orleans, and in his meridian, he engaged in merchandising under the firm-head of McAllister, Gardiner & McNair.

He joined the church at Jackson, Miss., during a quarterly meeting session presided over by Rev. C. K. Marshall. This was the beginning of the friendship which lasted through life.

The writer first knew Brother McAllister three years ago, when he was a listened and matured Christian. For a long time he had been a steward in Carondelet Street Church. He was esteemed and loved by all for his proven integrity and piety. A large circle of friends gathered to pay their last tributes of respect over his pathetic ashes. For years the church, and the great interests for which it stands, was first in his thoughts and affections. In his heart he loved the gates of Zion, and by prayer and work ministered to her prosperity. In comparison he despised the festal mosaic and mirth of the tents of wickedness, and rejoiced in the sacred, soul-communings of the sanctuary. His word said he said, "A day in thy courts is better than a thousand." From experience he knew the truth of the beatitude, "Blessed are they that hunger and thirst after righteousness, for they shall be filled." He knew the sources of spiritual life, and through prayer and the word of God held communion with the Father in heaven. The languors of his spirit was, "Who have I in heaven but thee? and there is none upon the earth that I desire beside thee." His conception of God was embodied in the words of inspiration, "In thy presence is fullness of joy, and at thy right hand are pleasures for evermore." At that fountain he took long and deep draughts. As he walked into the valley of the shadow he had for companion, friend and comforter the Savior of all who believe on and obey him. To this fact he bore emphatic witness.

Bro. McAllister furnished another illustration of the truth that to a good man the incident we call death is not life's impoverishment, but its coronation. "There is a natural body and there is a spiritual body." Who can tell what raptures of communion he has held since he left us "with the spirits of just men made perfect"? His daily prayer was, that his entire family might join him in God's indissoluble and ethereal kingdom.

LONG—That dark-winged messenger came to our community and church, and took from us, in the very zenith of his manhood, Bro. DANIAL ROBERT LONG.

The subject of this sketch was born in what is now Montgomery county, Miss., a few miles west of Winona, March 11, 1867; was converted and joined the M. E. Church, South, at Columbiana, in 1882. He afterwards moved his membership to Bluff Springs, in the Winona circuit, where it remained until his death.

He was married to Miss Mary V. Smith, May 27 1894, by Rev. Joseph T. Howell. He leaves his young wife and two little children to battle once with the cares and conflicts of this life; but One has promised to be a "father to the fatherless and a friend to the widow."

One who knew him best writes that "he tried to live a Christian life; prayed with and for his wife and little ones often, even in his last illness."

Bro. Long, though seemingly of a robust constitution, was in bad health from the beginning of the year, having a complication of diseases, but the most serious trouble was heart disease, which took him away from home and friends on the twenty-second day of July, 1897.

May the richest benedictions of heaven rest upon that saddened home! HIS PASTOR.

BALL—D. N. BALL was born in Pike county, Miss., Feb. 24, 1833 and died Dec. 20, 1897. He was converted and joined the M. E. Church, South, in early manhood, in which he lived till the day of his death. He was married to M. E. Tyler, Aug. 30, 1855. To this union were born fifteen children, nine of whom, with their mother, still live. One of his sons is now sheriff of his native county; another is a successful physician of Alexandria, La. Two of his daughters married Methodist preachers: Rev. W. M. Stevens, of the Mississippi Conference, and Rev. L. E. Alford, of the Louisiana Conference.

We feel our insufficiency to make an adequate measurement of the great soul that lived among us. He was true to God and loyal to his church. A devoted husband, loving father, good neighbor, upright citizen, generous and godly man has fallen. We shall miss him, for he was eminently a peacemaker among us. He loved his preacher, who always found place to rest at his happy home. The large congregation that attended his funeral gave evidence of their appreciation of him. We shall meet him again. W. W. MOREE.

DAVIS—Miss GEORGIE W. DAVIS, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. R. M. Davis, was born Jan. 13, 1884, and departed this life at Vinton, La., Nov. 16, 1897. She was brightly converted and joined the M. E. Church, South, in her eighth year. When asked by her mother if she thought her sins were forgiven, she said, "I know it." She was bright, studious, cheerful, unselfish, attractive, kind and thoughtful of others' happiness; gentle, making friends of old and young. She was a pure, sweet Christian girl. She bore her thirteen days of sickness with the fortitude of a soldier. We loved her here, and we will love her more and more in heaven. God bless and comfort the bereaved ones is our prayer.

NOBLIN—Resolutions of the fourth Quarterly Conference at Edwards, Miss.:

Whereas, During the awful scourge that visited our town our heavenly Father, in his wise providence, has been pleased to take from our midst two members of this Quarterly Conference; therefore, be it

Resolved, That in the death of Bros. R. H. and C. H. NOBLIN the church has sustained a loss of two of its most faithful members, men full of faith, who loved the church and were ever zealous about the Master's business.

Resolved, That, as officers of the church, they were ever thoughtful of their pastor and his needs, and of every interest of the church.

Resolved, That in them the pastor loses most faithful friends and advisers, the Quarterly Conference wise counsellors, the church faithful workers.

Resolved, That to their families we tender our heartfelt sympathy, and pray that the God of all comfort their hearts in the time of sorrow.

Resolved, That these resolutions be spread upon the Minutes of the Conference, and a copy sent to the families of the deceased and to the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

Selfish ambition may help us to climb to the point where we may be seen, but it never aids us in climbing to where we can see. The higher a man gets in the world in pursuit of selfish aims the narrower his field of vision becomes; the higher he gets in pursuit of unselfish aims the farther he can see around him. It matters little whether we climb in life if we do not climb toward a higher point of vision.—Sunday School Times.

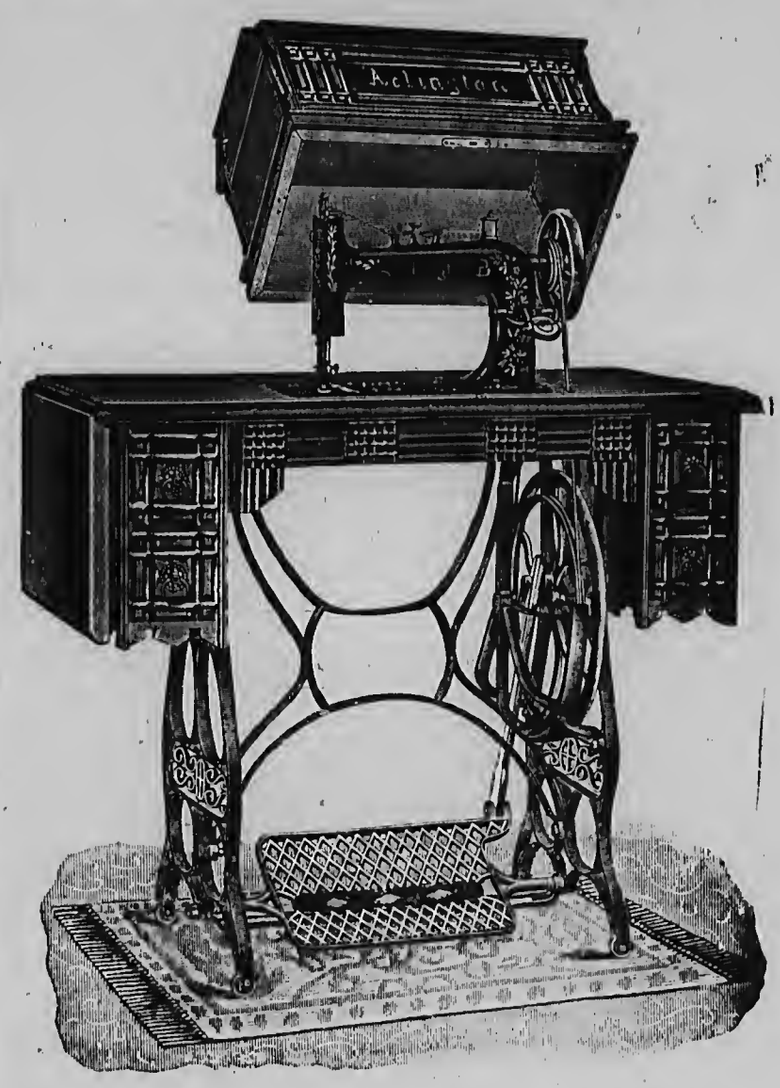
Our Machine Offer.

New Improved High-Arm "Arlington B" Self-Threading Sewing Machine.

A recorded certificate of warranty for 10 years accompanies each machine. The "Arlington B" is complete in every detail, combining all modern and late improvements, such as automatic bobbin winder, self-threading shuttle, self-setting needle, upper spring tension, etc.



The "Arlington B" self-threading sewing machine has a large high arm, its mechanical appearance is perfect, its adjustment is absolute, positive take-up, convenient foot rest, with the best style furniture, either oak or walnut; in addition to which each machine is furnished with the best steel combination attachments free, as follows: One tucker, one foot ruffler, one set of plain hemmers (five different widths up to seven-eighths of an inch), one binder, one skirring plate and one under-braider, packed in a handsome velvet lined case. It is also furnished with one foot hemmer, one screw driver, one wrench, one oil can with oil, one gauge, one package of needles, six bobbins and one instruction book.

THE HEAD is strong and substantial; has large space under the arm for handling bulky goods, is finely japanned and protected by a hard finish. Has so few bearings and friction points that it is easily oiled and kept clean.

NEEDLE BAR is round, with adjustable bearing polished and fitted, insuring great ease, and can run a long time without oiling. It has a slack dip motion, relieving the strain upon the thread when the shuttle is passing through the loop. Using the adjustable take-up, controlling the threads perfectly on all grades of work.

IMPROVED AUTOMATIC BOBBIN WINDER which is so positive and reliable in its action that an imperfectly wound bobbin is an impossibility. So simple that a child can easily operate it. This valuable attachment renders possible a perfect control of shuttle tension.

SELF THREADING—The "Arlington B" is self-threading, requiring no change from light to heavy work. Uses double thread, and makes the lock stitch.

THE NEEDLE is the same as used on the New Home machine, and is self-setting both as to height and position with reference to shuttle, with short blade and long shank, insuring great strength; finely polished.

SELF-THREADING SHUTTLE—A perfect steel cylinder shuttle with delicate and perfect tension, open at one end to allow the bobbin to be inserted without displacing any of the parts; runs loose in the shell, without spring centre or point bearings, thus insuring as even tension; can be threaded in the dark, and easily understood.

LOOSE PULLEY for winding the bobbin without running the machine requires no change or adjustment, nor is it necessary to remove the work from the machine.

PARTS SUBJECT TO WEAR are made of the finest steel, case hardened, light and noiseless and are very durable.

The action of the cotton manufacturers in New Bedford and Rhode Island in deciding to join the movement to lower the wage schedule in January, which was inaugurated by the big corporations of Fall River, makes the reduction practically a general one throughout the New England States.

On New Year's Day the cities of New York and Brooklyn, together with several smaller communities in their vicinity, ceased to exist as separate corporations, and merged into Greater New York, the second largest city in the world. The ceremony of inaugurating the government of the great city was exceedingly simple, unattended by any popular demonstration or parade.

On Monday night, in this city, the big Democratic ratification meeting for the indorsement of the candidates for delegates at large to the approaching Constitutional Convention, was held at the Washington Artillery Hall, and it was unquestionably a fine meeting. There were speeches by leading men in the State, and though they confined themselves absolutely to the question of reforming the franchise, there was always a deep interest manifested in what was said and enthusiastic approval.

"THE BEST GIFTS."

We are commanded to "covet earnestly the best gifts." This implies that all are not gifted alike. There must be diversity of gifts for diversity of work. Especially is this true for the ministry. To help the world and to carry on the redemptive work of Christ, the world must be approached in a variety of ways. This man was born for that work and that man for this. Their work can not be successfully interchanged. If David could not fight in Saul's armor, no more could Goliath successfully use the sling of David. Samuel Rutherford, in speaking of his work in his parish of Anworth, said: "I see exceedingly small fruit of my ministry; I would be glad of one soul to be a crown of glory and rejoicing in the day of Christ. I have a grieved heart daily in my calling." Nevertheless the preaching and the writing of this pure, retiring man have both comforted and confirmed many a weary soul, and his words have filled the world far outside of his parish with sweetness and fragrance. He had not the evangelistic gift, but the gift of edification. Others may have the evangelistic gift in a high degree; let them look for the fruit of their labors in many souls being saved and added to the church of Christ. There are others yet who have the gift of organization and the ability to execute plans and work. Few, indeed, possess all these gifts in equal degree. Because one fails in that in which another man succeeds is no disparagement of the ability of the man. Under the preaching and labors of one pastor the church will be taking deeper root in all those cardinal principles which are the real life and strength of the church, because the pastor has the gift of edification, the results of which are less easily observed. Under another the same church will luxuriate in outward growth which may be observed of all men. Both were essential to the proper development and growth of the church. And this is the glory of this, our itinerant system. The ministry can be classified according to their gifts, and at intervals assigned where their peculiar gifts are especially serviceable.—Recorder.

A CALM REPOSE.

O, for a heart of calm repose
Amid the world's loud roar;
A life that like a river flows
Along a peaceful shore.

Come, Holy Spirit, still my heart
With gentleness divine;
Indwelling peace then canst impart,
O, make that blessing mine.

There spreads a region fair;
Give me to live that higher life,
And breathe that heavenly air.

A PASSING GLANCE AT THE SITUATION IN THE FOUR STATES THAT HAVE GIVEN THE BALLOT TO WOMEN.

In Wyoming, where the women have been enfranchised for over twenty-five years, they exercise their rights of citizenship quite naturally, voting with as much calmness and assurance as the men of their households. The elections pass off as peaceably as if the masculine element alone prevailed. The women seem to be decidedly averse to holding office. A woman is State Superintendent of Education, but they do not aspire to anything beyond official positions connected with the school system. There has never been a stir over woman's suffrage in Wyoming. The women did not ask for it. The glory and dignity of citizenship was bestowed upon them by the men of that commonwealth, who were broad-minded and generous-hearted enough to desire to have the women their equals in politics as they were in the home. This idea of equality is carried out to the fullest degree in professional life. There are a number of women physicians in Wyoming. At Green River a wife and husband are partners in medicine. He does the out-door practice while she attends to the office duties, keeps house, and cares for their little child. The plan works admirably. I have never seen a more attractive, orderly home, nor a more tender, devoted mother.

Idaho has so lately wheeled into line as one of the quartette of States standing for the enfranchisement of woman that the newly made citizens have hardly begun to realize their emancipation, and have had few opportunities to express their convictions at the polls. Mrs. Mitchell, former president of the State Woman's Christian Temperance Union, a very intelligent woman, one of the pioneers of Idaho, has served as chaplain in the Legislature two seasons, and is held in popular favor with the members of that body. Idaho's great step in the direction of woman's political freedom seemed to have been the reflex action of the movement in California for woman's suffrage. In the tremendous fight made in the latter State a few months ago, Southern California voted almost solidly to bestow the rights of citizenship upon its women, and nearly every other section of the State voted likewise; but the movement was defeated, as is generally conceded, by the combined efforts of the liquor men of San Francisco. The wave of enthusiasm for justice to women swept over the desert to Idaho. Tennyson wrote an unpublished poem, in which he speaks of the fullness of the cup with the acorn in it, and of compensation in filling it with dew after the acorn had fallen from it. California would have been the fullness; Idaho is the compensation.

In Utah enfranchisement sits well upon the women. They vote with admirable punctuality and perfect intelligence, without being manipulated or intimidated. They run for offices from the lowest to the highest, and get them and discharge their obligations with entire satisfaction. Woman's suffrage in Utah is an acknowledged success; no one questions it.

Colorado is the crowning triumph. The women there wanted the ballot, and they fought for it, and achieved it, and now they propose to enjoy it. Woman's suffrage in Colorado stands for reform. It is an avowed cleansing factor. Since the women have been allowed to vote, they have driven the saloons out of a number of towns in the State, and the old ringsters and jobbers realize that they have a power with which to cope of whose strength they had never dreamed. The Civic Federation of Denver is a political league composed entirely of women. They declare themselves wholly for righteousness in politics, and are regarded as the most potent feature in the political life of the State. When the campaigns are on the candidates ask to be allowed to appear before the Federation to explain their attitudes, plead for recognition, and curry favor. In Denver I met the two women who were representatives in the last Legislature of Colorado. They spoke in glowing terms of their delightful sojourn at the State House, and of the deep respect and consideration shown them by the male members of the Legislature.

Woman's suffrage is in the air throughout the West. The other States will catch the infection and naturally fall into line as the days go by. "Give them time, General; give them time." It is said that as the West goes, so goes the Union. If that is true, we may expect, in the course of a few short years, to have our entire country going for woman's suffrage. God speed the day!

BELLE KEARNEY.

LETTER FROM "GILDEROY."

The devil was turned loose in this bottom country on Christmas Day and for some days after. There were shootings, cuttings, killings, murders and lynchings. The main cause of all this was too much whisky. It comes to us at this season per express in quart bottles, in half, gallon, and two-gallon jugs, and in five-gallon demijohns. In some places the express offices are the blind tigers of the town. The agent lends himself to this unholy business. For a commission of twenty per cent. he becomes the agent of some whisky house during the Christmas festival. He sends to the house a long list of fictitious names for whisky in packages to suit. In comes real, live men, who want to order a jug by wire. "All right," says the agent, and the man pays twenty-five cents for the telegram. The agent pockets this, and promises to have the jug on the next train. Before the train comes the agent labels one of the jugs already on hand to suit. He gets his commission and the twenty five cents for the telegram. In this way he covers up his tracks, or he thinks he does. There ought to be some way to stop this awful business. Of course, men can order whisky by wire and by express, if they desire to do so; but it is wrong for an operator and express agent to lend himself, or to sell himself, to this unholy work. It is done in many places in Mississippi and in other States.

The devil is artful and very wise in carrying on his business. He leaves no stone unturned. He gets up early and works all night long. The Christmas festival is more like the birthday of the devil than of Christ in many sections. Some people seem to think it is a religious duty to have whisky, and to get half, or once and a half, drunk on Christmas Day, or during Christmas week. Indeed, most drinking men are glad for any pretext as an excuse for drinking too freely. In cold weather they drink to keep warm, and in warm weather to keep cool; and when sick to get well, and when well to keep from getting sick; and they drink to enjoy excursions and to run elections. Any sort of an excuse is better than none. When they go a-fishing they take some along for snake bites, and, as an ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure, they drink the whisky whether the snakes bite or not. Now and then you find a man honest enough to say, "I drink because I love it." This is all bad, bad enough, but nothing to compare to the open saloon. When there were saloons every few miles in this bottom country the devil was supreme all year long. Now his reign is limited to a month or two in the Winter, mainly to the Christmas festival. I sometimes wish the Christmas time could be wiped out of our calendar; but the devil manages somehow to get his finger into every pie. He has prostituted the Lord's Supper and baptism. A devil that would tempt the Son of God will do anything. He hates God, the right, virtue, truth, honesty, piety, and right living. He is the enemy of God, of man, and of all that is good.

It is really astonishing that sane men will endure this whisky curse, and yet they petition for it, provide for it, and encourage it in every way possible. If snakes were as bad as whisky, and caused as much trouble and destroyed as many lives, men would rise up in arms and go snake killing by the space of five years, or more. If one man were to refuse to kill snakes, he would be set down as an enemy of his fellow-men. Snake bites do not run men crazy; do not make them fight, cut and shoot; do not make demons of men, and send them home to brain their wives and children. Whisky does all of this, and more, too. It is the worst curse with which we are afflicted, and the cause of nine-tenths of the crime in our land. The friends of God and man work to get whisky out and to keep it out, but the devil and his friends work like beavers to get it in, and so the contest goes on and on. As long as the devil lives and reigns in the hearts of men, this contest will go on. We are gaining ground slowly, but steadily. It takes time to naturalize, civilize and Christianize some of the inhabitants in some of the territory won. We must fight on to the end. At the last, if the world will not be won for Christ, God will burn it up, and give us a new heaven and a new earth, in which righteousness shall reign supreme. God will win at last—by love, if he can; by fire, if he must. Then the devil and all those who side with him will be cast into the lake of fire and brimstone. This is horrible, and our God does not want to do it, and he will not, only as a last resort to get rid of sin and sinners in the kingdom he has given to his Son.

SOUTH CAROLINA LETTER.

The one hundred and twelfth session of the old South Carolina Conference is now a thing of the past. It met at Florence, S. C., on Dec. 8, 1897, and adjourned on the following Monday night. Florence is a flourishing town of several thousand inhabitants, situated in the eastern part of our State. Rev. W. I. Herbert is the pastor, and proved to be an excellent host. He is the son of Rev. Thos. G. Herbert, of our Conference. He has two brothers in the Conference. The father and all three of the sons are held in high esteem by all who know them.

Bishop William Wallace Duncan, D. D., of Spartanburg, S. C., presided. He is our own Bishop, and we are justly proud of him. In a former communication I spoke of the Bishop as being one of South Carolina's distinguished men. Doctor Lafferty took me up on it, saying that the Bishop was a Virginian. That is the way of these Virginians—they want to claim the whole earth, including the Bishops. I am willing to allow the Doctor's claim that Bishop Duncan once lived in Virginia, but it took South Carolina to make him what he is now. If he had never seen South Carolina, he would never have seen the bishopric.

The session of the Conference was, upon the whole, a pleasant one. There were said and done some things that had better been left off. The presidency of the Bishop gave general satisfaction, I think. Some of the brethren disapproved of his advice to the young preachers to join the "Conference ring." I do not think he meant just what his words bore on their face. I understood him to mean that if there were brethren in the body capable of leading, the rest of us had better follow. Notwithstanding the financial stringency, our reports were good. The best item, however, of the reports was the large increase in membership. We report a net increase of ten thousand members. Has either one of the Annual Conferences of Southern Methodism surpassed that? If so, let us hear from them, and we will gladly join them in praising God for his goodness to our beloved Zion.

Rev. John O. Willson, D, D., who was elected three years ago to fill out the unexpired term as editor of the Southern Christian Advocate of the lamented Kirkland, received the endorsement of the Conference by being re-elected to the position for another term of four years. Doctor Willson has made us a safe and conservative editor. Rev. S. A. Weber, D. D., was appointed assistant editor. Doctor Weber was for several years editor of the paper. He, therefore, takes up his old work again. The two will make us a safe team—no running away with the wagon.

We sent a strong delegation to the General Conference. They are: Clerical—S. A. Weber, J. A. Rice, J. A. Clifton, J. W. Daniel, J. O. Willson, and W. R. Richardson. Lay—J. H. Carlisle, R. L. Coleman, R. O. Purdy, L. D. Childs, Geo. E. Prince, and J. B. Humbert. Alternates: Clerical—S. Lander, C. B. Smith, and E. T. Hodges. Lay—L. B. Haynes, B. Greig, and H. Baer.

We had some lively discussions during the session. Dr. G. G. Smith, of Georgia, says we are almost up with the Virginia Conference when it comes to discussions.

We were glad to have with us during the session Dr. A. Coke Smith, of Virginia; Dr. James Atkins, Sunday-school Editor; Dr. David Morton, the Church Extension Secretary, and Dr. G. G. Smith, of Georgia; also several returned missionaries. But enough this time.

Merry Christmas and Happy New Year to you and your readers.

WATSON B. DUNCAN.

Allendale, S. C.

TO THE PRESIDENT AND MEMBERS OF THE MISSISSIPPI ANNUAL CONFERENCE.

BRETHREN: It is with deepest gratitude to our Father that I come to make this, my second report, to this Conference in behalf of the East Mississippi Female College. Notwithstanding the dreadful epidemic and a delay of the opening of the session for six weeks, we are now in the midst of by far the most prosperous session in the history of the college. Although we lost thirty or forty students on account of the delay and yellow fever in homes of patrons, yet we have already enrolled nearly three hundred students, about one hundred of whom are boarders. Our buildings, new and old, are almost entirely filled, there being room for only about ten more students. Several of these places will be taken by the first of February, and the college will be filled to its capacity before the session closes.

Since I made my last report we have made several thousand dollars' worth of permanent improvement on the buildings, grounds, and equipments, and all without a dollar's cost to the Conference. We have bored a well 314 feet deep, and have an abundant supply of as fine, deep well water as can be found in the South. We have erected a tank, put in a steam boiler, deep well pump, and now have a complete system of waterworks belonging to the college. We pump every day and get pure, fresh water, which is one secret of the fine health record in the college. We have added more and better sewer connection, hot and cold baths; have supplied the laundry with hot and cold water and steam, and added several attachments to the laundry which we started last year. These, with other equipments, cost the president nearly $2,000.

We have erected a fine three-story brick extension to the south wing at a cost of over $3,700, to be paid for entirely by the president. This building is 40x80 feet, an excellent piece of workmanship, nicely finished, and consists of kindergarten-room and primary room, kitchen and recitation rooms on first floor, large and beautiful dining hall on second floor, with elevator from kitchen below, and dish pantry and four bedrooms on same floor. The third story contains a Young Women's Christian Association Hall and bedrooms. The new furniture is composed of white enameled iron bedsteads, good home made double cotton-top mattresses, woven wire springs, nice wardrobes, bureaus, wash-stands, etc. It would be hard to find a college better furnished. We have contracted for electric lights in study-hall and dining-hall, but they have not yet been put in. The chapel is lighted by gas.

We have, at our own expense, added several new music rooms in order to make room for our Conservatory. In making this departure we have spared no means in getting the finest talent that can be induced to come South. We have seen many of our young women go North to study music, and were convinced that, if we would bring the talent South, we could hold many of them. In this we were not mistaken. Already we have enrolled more than 125 music students, and school has been open only about six weeks. We have six fine musicians in this department who are doing work that will compare favorably with that done in Cincinnati or Boston. The people of Meridian are appreciating these opportunities and patronizing this department liberally as well as other departments.

The Literary Department now has one of the strongest faculties of any college in Southern Methodism. We pay the teachers promptly at the end of each month, and hence can command good talent. Our lady principal, who is also teacher of mathematics, is a Methodist, daughter of a Methodist preacher, and sister of a member of this Conference; was educated at the I. I. and C., and afterwards studied in Peabody Normal, graduating with high honors, and has since filled some important positions in this State and Tennessee.

Our teacher of English and Latin is a graduate of Greensboro Female College, N. C.; then graduated from Trinity, a male college in North Carolina, and studied two terms in Europe. She speaks three languages fluently and is master of five; is one of the finest linguists in Southern Methodism, male or female. She is the daughter of a Methodist preacher in the North Carolina Conference; was once at the head of a Methodist college in her State, and declined the honor a second time.

Among all the teachers and officers there is none that comes in closer contact with the girls than the matron. In this position we have a Methodist woman of sterling character, a relative of our former presiding elder, Rev. R. J. Jones, by whom she was recommended for the position. In her we have a fine Christian, a trained nurse, a kind-hearted, loving mother to the girls. If any are sick, she is with them day and night ministering to their wants. In her we have a strong helper.

Our principal of Preparatory Department is a fine, trained teacher, a Methodist, and a noble Christian woman. She spent this Summer in Chicago in the famous training-school for teachers, getting the latest improvements in teaching.

Our principal of the Primary Department, one of the most important teachers in a school, is from Nashville, sister of one of our preachers of that city, recommended by two of the Nashville preachers and by Bishop Hargrove. She is a fine teacher, a Methodist, and a Christian woman.

Our vocalist is a fine artist, has a lovely voice well trained, is a fine teacher, a Methodist recommended by her pastor, also by Dr. Gross Alexander and other prominent Methodists.

Our kindergarten teacher is a Baptist, but an excellent Christian woman; recommended by Dr. Gross Alexander, of Vanderbilt, and by other Nashville Methodists.

Our director of music is a Lutheran, a high-toned Christian gentleman. He is a native of Berlin, Germany; graduate of Kullak's Conservatory; has taught in Cincinnati and other musical centers in the North. He is certainly one of the finest teachers and pianists who ever came South to live. His wife is also a fine musician, a Methodist, and an elegant lady.

I wish I could have time to mention each member of the faculty, but fear this report will be too lengthy. Suffice it to say that we have 26 teachers and officers, and 19 out of the 26 are Methodists, four are daughters of Methodist preachers, and all the others are Christians of some Protestant faith. Nearly all the heads of departments are Methodists, and none are inimical to our church.

But what I feel most grateful to our Father for is the highly religious tone and spiritual atmosphere that pervades our college. Last year, when college opened, less than one-third of the boarders could say they had been converted. Nearly all were church members, but few were really converted. When school closed all professed conversion but four, and many were deeply pious, learning of the deep things of God, ready to work anywhere for the Master. I have been told by pastors that they were of great help to them on their return. There was a general spirit of Bible study among the students. Many would rise early and spend the morning hour in study of God's Word and in prayer. Every afternoon they would meet for a short prayer service. Many of these have gone out and are doing good work for the Master. Several started family altars in homes where prayer is seldom heard; started Bible classes and other Christian work where needed. This year the same work has begun in the college. I find less than half have the assurance of conversion. But we who are Christians have agreed to work and pray until all shall have that blessed assurance that may come to every soul. We have committees of Christian workers from among the young ladies to meet every new student and bring her under religious influence from the moment of her arrival, when she is most impressible. The consequence is, nearly all are members of the Young Women's Christian Association, and quite a number of conversions have already taken place.

All praise to our Father for what he has done for us. We are running the college in his name, and to his honor and glory, and are trying to please him and do his will, and at the same time conserve the interests of our church. He has set his approval on the work by giving unprecedented success. To him be all the praise. Pray that we may always do his will and be greatly used of him.

J. W. BEESON, Pres.

GOD'S WORD.

BY DR. JOHN CLIFFORD.

Last eve I paused beside a blacksmith's door,
And heard the anvil ring the vesper chime;
Then, looking in I saw upon the floor
Old hammers worn with beating years of time.

"How many anvils have you had," said I,
"To wear and batter all these hammers so?"
"Just one," said he; then said with twinkling eye
"The anvil wears the hammers out, you know."

And so, I thought, the anvil of God's Word
For ages skeptic blows have beat upon;
Yet, though the noise of falling blows was heard,
The anvil is unharmed—the hammers gone.

READING THE BIBLE.

This may seem an old subject, but I question if it can ever be exhausted. Among the signs of progress in religious matters, none is more encouraging than the increased attention to Bible studies. First, our Sunday-school literature, which can not be too highly praised, giving, as it does, valuable and interesting information on the lessons studied, and inciting desires to read further on the subjects treated therein. There are also the Epworth League topics, with various Bible readings and institutes, all calculated to inspire enthusiasm in the study of the grandest of all books. But with all the increasing attention to the Bible, I question if Christians generally search the Scriptures as they are commanded to do, or if children are taught as the book deserves. What are the teachings of the Scripture on this subject? Dent. xi, 19: "Therefore shall ye lay up these, my words, in your heart, and in your soul, and ye shall teach them to your children, when thou sittest in thy house, and when thou walkest by the way, when thou liest down, and when thou risest up." In the wonderful 119th Psalm (9-18) we read, "Wherewith shall a young man cleanse his way?" Again: "Open thou mine eyes, that I may behold wondrous things out of thy law. The entrance of thy word giveth light. Thy word have I hid in mine heart, that I might not sin against thee." But we would be obliged to quote the whole Psalm to write them all, and then the half would not be told. We meet numberless texts on the subject in the gospels, epistles—indeed all over the Bible. But one of the most effectual for practical purposes is I. Peter ii, 2: "As new-born babes, desire the sincere milk of the word, that ye may grow thereby."

Perhaps the principal cause of unprofitable Bible reading may be that we read it rather in a perfunctory manner instead of searching the Scriptures as a means to an end. Often in the interruption of harassing cares we are apt to read with inattention. We should guard carefully against this, and read not so much to get through a certain quantity of chapters as for spiritual profit. Even a few verses attentively read and reflected upon is better, if we can do no more, than hastily reading a larger number. In this each must be guided by his own conditions and surroundings, but always be sure to devote as much time as practicable to this important and precious means of grace.

In regard to Bible study, I often think how little we would learn of any department of learning were as little time devoted to it as is given to the study of the Scriptures. In our schools, for example, how little prominence is given to the Bible, and yet how full of interest is it even in a literary point of view alone. If we learn history, how wonderful is the historical part of the Bible, the foundation of all ancient history! If we love poetry, where shall we find loftier poetry than in the unparalleled strains of David, the sweet singer of Israel? Bailey tells us, "Poets are all who love, who feel great truths, and tell them." If this be so, how can it be better shown than in David's Psalms? We read with pleasure the poems of nature, and admire their descriptions of natural phenomena—sunrise, sunset, the seasons, etc. What poetical description can be compared with the beauty and sublimity of the nineteenth Psalm: "The heavens declare the glory of God, and his going forth is from the ends of the heaven." The sunrise graphically thus described: "A bridegroom coming out of his chamber, and rejoiceth as a strong man to run a race." Bishop Galloway, in his fine description of sunrise on the Brazilian mount, has appropriately quoted this Psalm.

We might linger on these beauties forever. The truest philosophy, the grandest rhetoric, the most striking figures of speech, are all found in the Bible. The Proverbs of Solomon are indeed true proverbial philosophy. Indeed, I have often thought it would be an interesting, as well as successful search, to seek in the Bible for the origin of all lofty ideas and true aspirations. We will find them, only in a superior style, and more grandly portrayed. The poets tell of unsatisfied longings, yearnings after the unattainable ideals. David tells it in a line: "As the hart panteth after the water brooks, so pantoth my soul after thee, O God." These thoughts, however beautiful, are subordinate to the real object of searching the Scriptures. "Desire the sincere milk of the word, that ye may grow thereby." That sweet-spirited, now glorified saint, F. R. Havergal, says: "Jesus did not say, Read, but search, and it is a serious thought for many a comfortable daily reader of the Bible that they are not searching, but only reading. What wonder if they do not grow therohy! Oh, let us search the Scriptures, and when controversies or differing views arise, and dim, as they often do, our spiritual eyes, let us search, not to prove a preconceived opinion, but to 'see if these things are so.'" Then we shall with David exclaim, "How sweet are thy words to my taste: yea, sweeter than honey and the honeycomb." If we would study his Word more, what new and wonderful beauties would we see, what enlarged views and hopes of the spiritual world. But, alas! too often the tumult of the world in our ears dims the sound of the everlasting gospel. Oh, shall we not turn a deaf ear to the vain things of this lower world and press on in our study of this wonderful book, the Book of books—yea, Bibles—the "Book," as is the real meaning of the word, drinking deep of the fountain of living waters, forsaking the "broken cisterns that hold no water." Then we shall know, if we follow on to know the Lord, and he rooted, built up and stablished in the faith. Our peace shall flow like a river. Thus prayerfully read and waiting on the Lord, we shall renew our strength, mounting up with wings as eagles, run and not be weary, walk and not faint.

"Lord, I have made thy word my choice,
My lasting heritage;
Then shall my noblest powers rejoice,
My warmest thoughts engage."

PAUL'S "THORN IN THE FLESH."

MR. EDITOR: I thought my former article on this subject was plain and easily understood; but in your last issue "Rex" remarks: "He (Rev. Van) then proceeds to prove to his own satisfaction that Paul's trouble, from which he desired and sought help, consisted, not in any besetting sin of his own, but in the persecution and maltreatment of himself by his enemies," etc.

I am certain nothing was farther from my mind than undertaking to prove anything of the sort. What I did claim as true was:

1. That Paul's thorn was no sin he was in the habit of committing.

2. That it was no moral or physical impurity that defiled him.

I then undertook to prove, by reference to certain Scriptures, that the "bruised, battered, mangled" condition of his body; his unsteady, shambling gait; his eyes nearly out, his teeth gone, his speech rendered difficult and almost incomprehensible, his whole appearance rendered an object of jesting, laughter and ridicule to the young and the gay, caused, as I believed, by the stoning he received at Lystra (when he said he was caught up to the third heaven, and when he stated this "thorn," or "messenger of Satan," was given him), was the "thorn" spoken of. This view seems to be sustained:

1. By the date, above fourteen years (II. Cor. xii, 2), carrying us back to the time of this stoning.

2. Because of his being "left for dead" (and doubtless he was dead) at that time.

3. From various other Scriptures, such as: (a) The answer to his prayer, II. Cor. xii, 9, "My grace is sufficient for thee, for my strength is made perfect in weakness." (b) His decision, "Most gladly, therefore, will I rather glory in my infirmities, that the power of Christ may rest upon me." (c) The remark of his enemies, II. Cor. x, 10, "For his letters, say they, are weighty and powerful; but his bodily presence is weak, and his speech contemptible." (d) His own references to his peculiar embarrassments, and the great difficulties he labored under because of these disadvantages, such as Gal. xiv, 13-15; "Ye know how, through infirmities of the flesh, I preached the gospel unto you." . . . "And my temptation, which was in my flesh, ye despised not, nor rejected." . . . "I bear you record that if it had been possible, ye would have plucked out your own eyes, and given them to me." Gal. vi, 11, 17, "Ye see how large a letter" (or more correctly, "with what large letters," because of poor eyes) "I have written unto you with mine own hand." He generally had an amanuensis to do his writing. "From henceforth let no man trouble me, for I bear in my body the marks" ("stigmata"—brands, bruises, scars, etc.) "of the Lord Jesus." When brands are placed on cattle they are put where they can be seen.

How many modern pulpit orators, of sensitive, high-strung natures, would fail to ask God to relieve them from such drawbacks—as they would doubtless consider them—in the prosecution of their work?

That I did no serious injustice to "Rex's" views in the matter when I did "infer" that he somehow classed Paul's "thorn" among the sins or vices to which many people are addicted, or the depravities by which they are defiled, I think may be fairly concluded from his last paragraph in this article, viz: "If God is taking away the appetite for sin or evil of any kind in our day, why did he not, as a being of infinite love, justice, mercy and compassion, take the inclination to eat the apple out of Adam's heart, and thereby prevent the necessity for the sacrifice of his only begotten Son for man's redemption? He did not do it then, and he don't do it now."

An "astute theologian" would never have framed the above paragraph—just as it is—unless he purposely desired to "confound the sense and befuddle the judgment." If I undertook a reply to the question, I would divide it thus:

1. The inclination to eat an apple I would never class as a sin.

2. I suppose one of two reasons must exist to prevent God from taking away—at once—the appetite (or desire) for sin in any or all cases. Either,

1. The party interested does not desire him (God) to do so; or,

2. He believes that God is either unable or unwilling to do this work for him now.

MEMOIR OF FANNIE G. COTTRELL.

Sister Fannie G. Cottrell (nee Canon) was born near Dayton, Ala., Feb. 14, 1874, and died at Lake City, Miss., Nov. 21, 1897. On April 16, 1889, she was married to T. B. Cottrell, now of the Mississippi Conference.

Sister Cottrell was for several years a member of the M. E. Church, South, and a devoted Christian. In her daily life she gave illustration to the Sermon on the Mount. Indeed, her life was according to the "Golden Rule." As a wife, she was patient, sympathetic, tender, and true. As a mother, she was kind, loving, and constant in the care of the little lambs God had given her. As a friend and a neighbor, she was ever the same amiable, sweet-spirited being. To know her was to love and appreciate her. She loved her church, and ever manifested an interest in its welfare. Always in her place, she exerted a potent influence for good. By her bright smiles and sensible words of encouragement she was of great assistance to her pastor. How often has this scribe, while her pastor, gone to her home, wearied and discouraged, and gone forth strengthened and encouraged by her hopeful words and cheering smiles.

She always took great interest in the work of the church and Sunday-school; but her real worth was not known until God laid his hand upon her husband and called him to preach the gospel. She then gladly assumed and ever faithfully discharged the obligation growing out of her relation to her husband's work, and for eighteen months was one of the best of preacher's wives. How helpful she was! Willing, ready, glad to do anything that was for the promotion of the kingdom of her Lord and Master.

Her life, though comparatively short, was well lived. The world is better because of her having lived in it. She has left an influence wholesome and pure. She will be missed. We can not understand why God should take from us one so helpful and useful. Maybe some day we will. Now we can only say, "Thy will be done." Her death was glorious and triumphant. No doubt as to her future exists. We weep not as those who have no hope, but look forward to a glorious resurrection, when we shall strike hands and know each other again. Death had no horror for her. She could indeed ask, "Oh, death, were is thy sting?" As she was passing down into the shady valley of death, she said to her father, standing near, "Papa, I am not afraid; Jesus is with me." I consider it a great blessing to have been associated with this Christian woman.

She leaves behind a noble young husband and four little lambs, for whom she waits and watches on the other shore. May we meet her again!

TO THE WOMAN'S FOREIGN MISSIONARY SOCIETY OF THE NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

DEAR SISTERS: We have entered upon the fourth quarter of our fiscal year, and it is well for us to know what has been done, that we may know what remains to be done. Your treasurer remitted to Mrs. McTyeire for the third quarter $946.32. This amount is a little less than that remitted for the same quarter of last year, although we are encouraged by the fact that the sum total for the three first quarters of this year is greater than last year.

Now, dear sisters, let me urge you to let this advance over last year stimulate us to very earnest efforts for a grand closing up of our year's work. Let the gain already made be the vantage-ground from which we shall move to greater things than we have ever before done. This can not be done unless each will do her full part. The remittance for the fourth quarter of last year was $2,336 27; so we have no small amount to collect and send in during the time yet remaining of this year, but it can easily be done if we make the proverbial "pull, strong pull, and pull altogether." This should be a season of great activity for treasurers, and they should be very earnest and persistent in their efforts to collect every cent for dues, contingent fund, and specials, that it is possible to collect.

My sisters, this is a matter of no small importance; great issues wait upon our efforts. If we do well our part, our Lord's cause will be greatly advanced; if we fail, we paralyze our Woman's Board of Missions, and cause great discouragements to the brave women who represent us in the foreign field. In view of the great importance of our work—the far reaching consequences for good, if we are faithful to it; the blasting efforts, if we are negligent of it—let us look to God for his help, and be very diligent. God bless you all.

WOMAN'S PARSONAGE AND HOME MISSION SOCIETY, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

ITEMS OF INTEREST FROM AUXILIARY CORRESPONDING SECRETARIES.

Miss A. M. Kennard, Port Gibson Auxiliary: "The Week of Prayer was observed in accordance with the daily program arranged. The attendance was good. Much information about the great work of the society was given, resulting in an increase of interest and zeal. A box was sent to Bay St. Louis for yellow-fever sufferers. Value of box, $48.50. One life member was made—Mrs. O. E. Kelly; three new members added. Sent Conference treasurer $40.50."

Mrs. F. R. Ford, Magnolia: "Have received leaflets and annual report. Our auxiliary was considerably disappointed in the latter as regards our local work. You will see we are credited with a very small amount, whereas we expended from March, '96, to March, '97, on parsonage, $25.55; on church, $5.90; on local missions, $2 50. (We regret this error, but their treasurer failed to make exact and full reports for each quarter. Treasurers and corresponding secretaries, please be careful, and make full and exact reports in future for each quarter.—Conference Corresponding Secretary.) Our Week of Prayer offering was $20. Sent a box to Water Valley Orphanage. Value of box, $90. I enclose list of goods sent and 'Baby Roll'—11 names."

Miss Mollie Norman, Wesson: "I am sorry to have to write you that I have done nothing on this Brookhaven district in the way of organizing new auxiliaries. Yellow fever and quarantine restrictions have interfered with all church work. I can hear nothing from Summit Auxiliary. Magnolia Auxiliary is doing a fine work. North Wesson is a zealous little auxiliary of about fifteen members, though it is weak financially. Our Wesson Auxiliary is active, but not as much so as it might be. Week of Prayer was observed, and was indeed beneficial to the auxiliary. Collection, $12."

Mrs. Van Hook, Lauderdale: "We carried out the Week of Prayer program. All seemed to enjoy it. Great interest manifested, and much good resulted to the local society. Collection, $7.66."

Mrs. A. A. Breckenridge, Montrose: "We have held our regular monthly meetings; added one new member this quarter. Observed Week of Prayer; collection, $1.45."

Mrs. M. W. Grant, Oak Ridge: "We observed Week of Prayer. All enjoyed the impressive program which was carried out. Our contribution was $13 (!). Organized a juvenile auxiliary with sixteen members." (Good. Hope others will follow suit.—Conference Corresponding Secretary.)

Mrs. M. C. Dunn, Bradley Chapel: "Owing to so much sickness and several deaths, we could not observe Week of Prayer. I was sorry to know we had lost so good a worker as Miss Helm. I read of her death in the NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE. Our society is not progressing very well. We can't secure officers to carry it on." (I hope Mrs. Dunn, president, will carry it on, whether there are other officers or not.—Conference Corresponding Secretary.)

Mrs. Buie, West End, Meridian: "We observed Week of Prayer. Sent an offering of $5 to treasurer; sent $5 70 dues; sent a box to Bay St. Louis' yellow fever sufferers valued at $100. Paid a local debt of $3 25; also $5 on stove for parsonage."

Mrs. A. P. Joynor, Bay St. Louis: "I am a little late in forwarding my report this quarter. We are getting along fairly well, considering we had so much sickness during the Summer. Our heavenly Father fulfilled his promise to us in sparing our lives and, as it were, keeping us under the shadow of his wings. Our auxiliary has arranged to observe Week of Prayer second week in January. Dues and donations amounted to $62 25." MRS. S. S. COPE, Selections.

THE JOY OF THE LORD.

The coming of joy into our hearts may be obstructed by an unfortunate habit of choosing to dwell upon the shadows rather than upon the sunshine of life. Our heavenly Father does not wish to deal with his children always as with the rod of chastisement. He knows we all need to be cheered by the evidences of his approval. It is the sign of human weakness to treat our offspring with unrelieved strokes of discipline. But our divine Father never commits such an error in the government of his children. Love prompts him to inspire our confidence by tender appeals and supreme acts of goodness. He would say: "Child of earth, look up; do not be discouraged. I am thy Lord, merciful and gracious."

Nevertheless, when clouds do gather above us and joy is far removed, let us not be unmindful of the fact that we have then an opportunity to show to others the integrity of our purpose, the loyalty of our souls to him who is seeking our spiritual development more than our present experience of joy. If we are seen to be watchful and faithful to duty under such circumstances of trial, we may be able to accomplish much while passing through the furnace.—New York Advocate.

We must all go in the shadow sometimes. The glare of the daylight is too brilliant; our eyes become injured and unable to discern the delicate shades of color or appreciate neutral tints—the shadowed chamber of sickness, the shadowed house of mourning, the shadowed life from which the sunlight has gone. But fear not; it is the shadow of God's hand. He is leading thee. There are lessons which can be learned only there. The photograph of his face can be only fixed in the dark chamber. But do not suppose that he has cast thee aside. Thou art still in his quiver; he has not flung thee away as a worthless thing. He is only keeping thee close till the moment comes when he can send thee most swiftly and surely on some errand in which he will be glorified. O, shadowed solitary one! remember how closely the quiver is bound to the warrior, within easy reach of the hand, and guarded jealously.—Rev. F. B. Meyer.

A Christian of the approved pattern is self adjustable. He knows both how to be abased and how to abound. If he is led into a wide sphere, he spreads out over it without noise, delay, or painful effort. If he is brought into a narrow sphere, he does not have to take himself to pieces and send a part of his belongings off to the storage-room before he can adjust himself to it. The Christian who can not adapt himself to his surrounding, but must sit and wait for things to adapt themselves to his idiosyncrasies, is of too clumsy a pattern to keep out of the junk shop.—Richmond Advocate.

To appreciate the reality of God's redeeming mercy, you need to think of a wretched ship out in mid-ocean, passengers and crew without food, rudder broken, sails rent, no help in sight, hope gone, death imminent. In such a moment what a boon the glimpse of a distant sail, the coming of a new, strong ship, the presence and work of rescuers. Our race was on the sea, struck with death, hopeless, despairing, sinking. Christ rushed to the rescue. We owe our presence on earth to-day in health and hope and happiness to his unbounded love.—Michigan Christian Advocate.

We shade our eyes with the hand to shut out the glare of the strong daylight, when we want to see far away. God thus puts, as it were, his hand upon our brows, and tempers the glow of prosperity, that we may take in the wider phases of his goodness. It is a common experience that, looking out from the gloom of some personal affliction, men have seen for the first time beyond the earth plane, and caught glimpses of the Beulah land. Let us not shrink from the hand which we know is heavy only with blessing.—Selected.

If when I read a book about God, I find it has put him farther from me than he was before; or about man, that it has put me farther from him; or about this world that I live in, that my book has shaken down on it a new look of desolation; or about life, that it has made life seem less worth living; or about moral principles, that they are not so clear and strong in my heart as they were when this man began to open his mind to me: then I know that to me this is not a good book.—Robert Collyer.

The out-and-out Christian is a joyful Christian. The half-and-half Christian is the kind of Christian that a great many of you are—little acquainted with the joy of the Lord. Why should we live half way up the hill, and swathed in mists, when we might have an unclouded sky and a visible sun over our heads, if we would climb higher and walk in the light of his face?—Alexander Maclaren.

Five minutes spent in the companionship of Christ every morning—aye, two minutes, if it is face to face and heart to heart—will change the whole day, will make every thought and feeling different, will enable you to do things for his sake that you would not have done for your own sake or for anyone's sake.—Henry Drummond.

CHRISTMAS THOUGHTS; OR, THE BABY KING.

BY T. H. PORTER.

I imagine when the wise men in the East first beheld that beautiful star that their souls were filled with rapture, for the Spirit must have impressed upon them the fact that the long-expected King had been born. Doubtless the Spirit brought to their minds the prophecy of Balaam as recorded in Numbers xxiv, 17, which reads: "There shall come a Star out of Jacob, and a Sceptre shall rise out of Israel, and shall smite the corners of Moab, and destroy all the children of Sheth." I imagine as soon as they saw the star that they began to make preparations to get to see the little King, and that the star grew brighter and brighter as they proceeded on their journey until it came and hung over the little rock stable in the city of Bethlehem where the little Child lay. Oh, how their hearts must have leaped for joy when they were ushered into the presence of the little King. Matthew says, "When they saw the star they rejoiced with exceeding great joy." And I infer from this that they must have sent up a shout to heaven. Matthew further says, "When they saw the Child with Mary his mother, they fell down and worshiped him." Oh, how natural is this!—for whoever saw him as he is that did not fall down and worship him? And we are further told that "when they had opened their treasures, they presented unto him gifts; gold, frankincense and myrrh." Which is also natural; for whoever saw him as he is that did not present unto him gifts even more precious than gold; for they present unto him their hearts, their fortunes, their all. I would to God that all sinners could see him to-day with the eye of faith, that they might fall down and worship him in spirit and in truth; and that they might present unto him their best gifts, which are their hearts and their lives.

How different was his coming from the manner in which earthly kings come. For they are usually born in palaces; but he was born in a manger. They are usually dressed in purple and fine linen; but he was wrapped in swaddling clothes. They are rich in this world's goods; but he was poor and had not so much as a place to lay his head. Earthly kings rule by might; but he ruled then and does rule now by love. Earthly kings wear crowns bedecked with jewels and precious stones; but he wore a crown of thorns. Earthly kings seek wealth, honor and dominion; but "he came to seek and to save that which was lost." Yes, he laid aside his crown in heaven. He left his Father's house, where there is wealth and power and dominion and glory, and came down to earth and took upon himself the weakness of the flesh that he might seek and save that which was lost. Oh, what a condescension! Oh, what matchless love he exhibited in so doing! I am glad it is so. I am glad that he was born of poor parents and in such a humble manner. He did it that he might the better sympathize with poor, fallen man. He did it that he might place himself on equality, so to speak, in birth and life with the poorest and most down-trodden of our race. And to-day he still comes to the poorest of mankind; yea, he even stoops down into the gutter itself, and all the wretches who will let him, he folds his arms around and lifts up and makes them heirs of God and joint heirs with himself. He lifts their feet out of the miry clay and places them upon the Rock of Ages. He puts a new song into their mouths, even praises to God.

Whoever heard of a king before or since who was of such great importance that God should create a beautiful star and hang it in the sky above him to call attention to him. Whoever heard of any other child whose birth was of such moment that God should send angels down to deliver the good news to men. For Luke says: "There were in the same country shepherds abiding in the field, keeping watch over their flock by night. And lo! the angel of the Lord came upon them, and the glory of the Lord shone round about them, and they were afraid. And the angel said unto them: 'Fear not, for behold I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people. For unto you is born this day in the city of David, a Savior which is Christ the Lord. And this shall be a sign unto you, Ye shall find the babe wrapped in swaddling clothes lying in a manger.' And suddenly there was with the angel a multitude of the heavenly host praising God and saying, 'Glory to God in the highest, on earth peace, good-will toward men.'" Oh, what a grand occasion that must have been, and what a beautiful picture that little city must have presented upon the memorable night of the Savior's birth! Let us look at it for a moment, though there is no language that can describe it. There nestled, as it were, upon a little lime-stone ridge, about six miles South of Jerusalem, is the little city, Bethlehem. To the east and west of it lie low and narrow plains outskirted by mountains that rise up like great walls, not more than four or five miles from the little city. In the plain just east of it is where Ruth gleaned behind the reapers. Out in the northeast looms up the grand old Mount of Olives. Add to this that beautiful star that God created and hung out with his own plastic hand as a great lantern in the sky above that little stable, and we have one of the most beautiful pictures imaginable.

I imagine when that star, which was none else than the light of God, first swung into space above that little city, that all the stars in the firmament above fairly sang together for joy and made obeisance to it. I imagine when its soft light penetrated every nook and corner of that surrounding country that even the little birds awoke as though it had been dawn of day and warbled forth the Great Creator's praise. I imagine that the very trees and flowers for miles around seemed to bow their heads in silent adoration to the little King. And the breezes that came up from the plains were all laden with perfume, sweeter by far than frankincense or myrrh, which they wafted to the nostrils of the Baby King and seemed to whisper to the inhabitants of that little village: "Awake, ye sleepers, and adore your King," while out on the plain at a short distance God lifted the veil between heaven and earth, letting his glory come pouring through and allowed those humble shepherds to behold it. I think those shepherds must have gotten a glimpse of heaven and heard what was going on there. It is evident that they did see the angels and learned that they are God's messengers. They also heard them praising God and saying, "Glory to God in the highest, on earth peace, good-will toward men." And I imagine that the mountain walls echoed and re-echoed the praise, "Glory to God in the highest, on earth peace, good-will toward men."

Notice this thought: God revealed his Son to two classes of individuals, but in different ways. First, to the wise men of the East who were, doubtless, historians and were acquainted with the Law and the Prophets and were, therefore, looking forward to the coming of the Great King. They must have known, also, that a star would be the sign of his advent. They were, doubtless, astronomers, too, and as soon as the star appeared they knew that it was a new star and must be the star that should be the sign of his birth. These probably represent that class of individuals in the world to-day who are scholars and thinkers and who are allured to Jesus Christ by the splendor of religious influence that shines out as a beautiful star from the life of every consecrated Christian.

Second, God revealed his Son to the shepherds whose very occupation indicates that they were not scholars. They probably were not historians and may not have known that a king was expected. Neither were they astronomers; and if a dozen new stars had appeared in the sky, they would not have noticed them. But to these God revealed his Son in a very different way. He poured out his glory upon them until they were overwhelmed. These probably represent that class of individuals in the world to-day who are neither scholars nor profound thinkers—men and women who have to labor hard for their living, and have neither the time nor the inclination to become learned, and who do not come to Jesus by any process of reasoning. But to these God reveals his son in a more direct manner. He sends a messenger directly from heaven, and that messenger is the Holy Ghost. I would to God that he would open up windows in heaven to-day and let his glory come pouring in upon all the world and awaken the sinners who are sleeping in moral darkness.

The greatest miracle that I know of is that of my conversion. I was dead and I live; I was blind and I see. I was a slave and I am free; I was an enemy of God and I love him. Prayer, the Bible, the society of Christians—these were to me a source of profound "ennui;" whilst now the pleasures of the world are a weariness to me, and piety is the source of all my joy. Behold the miracle! and if God has been able to work that one, there are none of which he is not capable.—Vinet.

TOLERATION AND INDIFFERENCE.

True toleration is a very different thing from indifference. There is a danger that people should be quite tolerant of the differences in particular forms of religious belief, because as a matter of fact they are utterly intolerant of religion as a principle of life and ethics. The unbeliever can not be called a tolerant man. He has no church in which he believes, and all churches are to him intolerable, as institutions of truth and righteousness. He excludes Christianity from his life, and, if possible, from his home, because he disbelieves in all religious institutions. He can not persecute by law, but he often concentrates the spirit of rabid intolerance in a sneer or a jest. His very indifference may be but a disguised form of intolerance. Now, the essence of all real toleration is sympathy. The tolerant Christian does not abate one jot of his steadfastness and constancy in adhering to his own faith; but he feels that another man, living in the light of another phase of truth, is not to be hated or mocked. Perhaps he is not always to be argued with, but a sincere wish for his enlightenment is perfectly consistent with toleration towards his error. This attitude of considerateness is in fact one of the most persuasive instruments of conciliating those who are not believers. It is consistent with the most intent zeal and the most eager enthusiasm, but these two qualities are tempered and directed by love, and the combination thus formed is the virtue of Christian toleration.—Exchange.

VENTILATION IN CHURCHES.

The proper ventilation of churches is very properly beginning to attract a reasonable share of public attention. That some of our churches are badly ventilated no one who has ever attended during service when they are crowded will dispute. Most persons are afraid of draughts, and very properly, but it does not appear to have entered into the minds of the masses of church goers that there is as much danger in churches that have little or no ventilation as in those that are affected with draughts. The air in an air-tight church becomes vitiated, and is therefore pernicious and poisonous. Pure air has life-giving qualities, of which it is robbed in such edifices by being breathed and rebreathed many times over. It needs not the saying that the breath of many persons, men and women, is in the highest degree offensive, the offensiveness always proceeding from some disease. Each respiration from such mouths and throats carries with it into the atmosphere poisonous air, which, of course, mingles with the atmosphere, and is taken in divided quantities into other lungs, where it may impart disease.—Exchange.

CANON FARRAR ON THE DRINK CURSE.

The stream of horrible profits which drunkards pour into the enormous reservoir of the drink trade is a stream swollen by untold misery to the innocent, and a stream which everywhere leaves the slime of its overflow over devastated areas of society. But apart from drunkenness and all its ruinous incubus upon the well-being of the country, the amount of hopeless waste caused by the drinking habits of our poorer population is the main cause of the pauperism and demoralization with which, for so many weary years, the best have struggled in vain. If there were no other and deeper grounds for temperance efforts, they would be amply justified by the immense prosperity which the working classes might achieve for themselves if they would divert into the channels of useful trade the vast mass of wealth—amounting according to some calculations to £60,000,000 a year—which they spend on an article of consumption which is not food, but a needless stimulant, and which even in measures that are deemed moderate is to large multitudes of men a source not of strength, but of weakness; not of health, but of widespread anguish and disease.

Mystery envelopes the future. We know not what is before us. But our inability to penetrate the secrets of Providence is no reason for doubt or alarm. We have already gone through previous years with their enigmas as unsolvable at the outstart as any that now confronts us, and the same God, who has given light and grace as the days brought their trials and difficulties, will go with us, hour by hour, and help us as his purposes are disclosed. We can take courage, then, and move forward with comfort and hope.—Presbyterian.

Is never done, and it is especially wearing and wearisome to those whose blood is impure and unfit properly to sustain the wasting of nerve, muscle and tissue. A Fatal Spider-Web.

When a fly accidentally gets caught in a spider's web, the spider goes calmly about the work of securing his prey. He does'nt hurry particularly. He takes his time and binds first the fly's feet, and then his wings and his entire body.

That is the way with the dread enemy of mankind—consumption. It has a web—the web of trivial disorders neglected. When a man heedlessly stumbles into that web, consumption first attacks his stomach, then his blood, then his lungs, then every organ in his body. Many doctors assert that when a man is once in this deadly web there is no escape. That is a mistake. Thousands have testified to their recovery from this disease by the use of the right remedy. Many of their letters, together with their names, addresses and photographs, appear in Dr. Pierce's Common Sense Medical Adviser. The remedy that saved them was Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. It cures 98 per cent. of all cases of consumption. It cures the conditions that lead up to it. It is the great blood-maker, flesh-builder and germ-ejecter. Druggists sell it.

"Your 'Favorite Prescription' cured my little girl, seven years old, of St. Vitus's dance," writes Mrs. A. E. Loomis, of Walnut Grove, Redwood Co., Minn. "She could not feed herself, nor talk. That was fifteen years ago. I have always had great faith in your medicines ever since. I had a terrible cough, and my friends thought I had consumption. I took the 'Golden Medical Discovery' and it cured my cough, and now I do my housework. I have always praised your medicine and would like to have your 'Common Sense Medical Adviser.' I enclose stamps."

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

We had the pleasure of attending the recent session of the Louisiana Conference at Crowley, arriving in time for the opening on Thursday morning. Our time being necessarily taken up with publisher's work, we had the good fortune to engage the facile pen of Rev. F. S. Parker to report the proceedings of the Conference. Of Crowley we need not write, as Bro. Parker has done so in a felicitous way. In keeping with his record, Bishop Hendrix showed himself a model presiding officer. Without seeming to be in a hurry, he dispatches business with marvelous rapidity. Drs. Barbee, Tigert, Morrison and Atkins were present representing their respective interests, all of whom acquitted themselves in a manner befitting the high stations which they fill. We had the privilege of hearing a sermon by Dr. Barbee for the first time. It was a clear, forceful, and highly entertaining discourse. We also heard an excellent sermon from Rev. J. I. Hoffpauir. We also committed an attempt at preaching on Friday night. Saturday morning we took our departure for the Crescent City. During our stay in Crowley we were domiciled in the hospitable home of Bro. and Sister R. M. Jones, to whom and also to Sister Jones' mother, Mrs. Shaw, we are indebted for many courtesies. We were pleased to have as our coguest our old-time friend and brother, Rev. P. A. Johnston. We also enjoyed the cordial hospitalities of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Foote and Mrs. Fitzpatrick.

OUR ORPHANS' HOME.

Rev. M. L. Burton is now at his post at Water Valley, and as busy as a bee putting things in shape for the opening of our Orphans' Home. He expects to have everything in readiness within a month. Meantime let all who have subscribed to this institution pay up, and let those who have not subscribed do so at once. Be sure to read the appeal of Bro. Bowen and others on our fifth page in behalf of this noble institution. Mississippi Methodism has no grander work before it than the equipping and maintenance of this institution.

REMARKABLE.

When the yellow-fever excitement was at its highest the ADVOCATE stated editorially that the mortality for the city of New Orleans would be less in '97 than it was in '96. Many of our readers thought we were off our base when we made this prediction; but we were right. The mortuary reports for '97 show 966 deaths less in '97 than in '96. In view of the unparalleled excitement throughout the country on account of the presence of the fever here, this is certainly very remarkable.

CROWLEY: THE LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

Crowley represents a class of phenomona almost unique in Louisiana. No stretch of imagination is required, as one pulls into the depot after a run of twenty miles through broad prairie, broken only here and there by clumps of trees, and bounded on the north by the blue line of distant forest, to induce the illusion that one has arrived at a Western boom town. The absence of the broad veranda, and the presence everywhere of the high gable and the porch, or stoop; the treeless sidewalks, wide streets, substantial brick buildings standing each apart as if awaiting the companions that are ultimately to form extensive business blocks, are characteristic features to be found here.

Points of comparison and contrast are numerous. The saloon is to be found, but seems to lack the prominence it assumes elsewhere. A strong temperance and anti-saloon feeling prevails. It is said that the seven churches, all of them of good capacity, are regularly filled at Sunday services. No masses of negroes, hanging about barrel houses and stores like a dark cloud upon the horizon, are here present to oppress one with the thought of an unsolved problem, and the reluctant confession that duties toward these sons of Ham remain undone.

In the rice-mills, and on the surrounding farms, the industrious sons of the West are to be seen working with their own hands. Of the population of about 3,500 in and around the town, probably not more than 10 per cent. are negroes. A public school house capable of accommodating 500 pupils and a college building of still greater capacity indicate the value here placed upon education. Twelve years ago none of these things existed—only the bare uncultivated prairie. Now near 60 miles of irrigation canal carry the waters of Bayou Plaquemine Brulee at the rate of 140,000 gallons per minute over the lands, making a sure rice crop, of which the three rice mills here handle and clean 150,000 sacks.

As one approaches the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, he recognizes certain architectural features that remind him of the works of that justly noted church builder lately gone home to the city where there is no temple. The church was built under the pastorate of the Rev. S. S. Keener, who is most highly esteemed among his former parishioners, and seems to be enjoying the hearty welcome that greets him on every hand. Bishop Hendrix seems to belong here, and appears to be unchanged in person and business methods since he was with us at Ruston last year.

At 9 A. M., Jan. 6, the Bishop called to order the fifty-second session of the Louisiana Conference. After the usual hearty devotional service, Dr. Sawyer was elected secretary as usual, and the Conference statistician, Rev. William G. Evans, and Rev. Robert Wynn were elected assistants.

For the first time Dr. J. D. Barbee has favored the Louisiana Conference with his genial presence this year. Rev. O. L. Cobb, of the Tennessee Conference, was introduced as the representative of the Board of Missions.

The Minute questions of the Conference were taken up, and the names of the superannuates were called. Revs. E. B. Foust, T. S. Randle and M. C. Manly were present and spoke. A letter was read from Rev. R. S. Trippett. Others were not able to be present, and the names of two will appear later in the report of the Committee on Memoirs.

The names were called and the characters passed of the presiding elders: J. T. Sawyer, R. W. Tucker, J. L. P. Sheppard, H. O. White, B. F. White, V. D. Skipper, B. T. Crews.

R. W. Randle was discontinued at his own request. Chas. D. Adkinson, E. S. Alford, Henry W. Ledbetter, Frank N. Sweeney, Wiley G. Roberts, were continued in the class of first year. J. C. Sligh, P. R. Knickerbocker, J. M. Alford, P. O. Lowry, W. H. Hatfield, Barnett Wright, H. B. Thomason, E. E. Riggs, were advanced to the class of the second year.

The feature of the morning session was the address of Bishop Halsey, of the Colored Methodist Episcopal Church. His tribute to Haygood was a piece of classic eloquence. He compared the slavery of the negro race to that of Israel in Egypt, and affirmed that the negro had been the gainer; but, with manly and racial self-respect, he affirmed the debt of the Southern white man in turn to the Southern negro. Space will not admit of even a brief synopsis of Bishop Halsey's address; no report could reproduce the personal grace and dignity of this black man, who, educated under the personal superintendence of Bishop Geo. F. Pierce while yet in slavery, has evidently profited by the privilege of knowing and hearing this matchless orator. The brethren cheerfully gave Bishop Lane $190 on his call for the Haygood Memorial Building, now under process of construction on the grounds of Payne Institute at Augusta, Ga.

The following were admitted on trial: Martin Hebert, M. F. Johnson, George D. Purcell, J. M. Etheridge, W. R. Harvell, J. M. Martin, James Montgomery, George D. Parker.

Of the large first year class, John C. Sligh, Percy R. Knickerbocker, Wm. H. Hatfield, Eli E. Riggs, Joseph M. Alford, Perry O. Lowry, Hyder B. Thomason, and Barnett Wright passed approved examinations, and were promoted to the class of the second year. Rev. W. H. Hatfield passed on the examination of the second year. Rev. Harry W. Rickey also passed two years' examinations. These young brethren deserve commendation for having made good their loss by sickness last year. Both had been kept from attendance at the last session of the Conference. Of the class of the third year, Robert W. Vaughan, C. C. Miller, John W. Lee, Harry W. Rickey, and R. C. Grace passed their examinations, and were advanced to the class of the fourth year.

The sifting process has been rather more severe than formerly since the written examination was introduced, but a highly gratifying advance in the quality of the work done by undergraduates is noted, and the degree of preparation for the work of the ministry shows an advance over any former time. The system of examination now in use more and more commends itself, as experience proves its worth, and the necessity of thorough preparation will be a source of life-long advantage to the young men, some of whom find it rather hard now.

An afternoon session finished the work of the first day, disposing of the passage of character of all the undergraduates.

Dr. Barbee preached to the delight of a crowded house in the evening. Rev. H. W. Knickerbocker preached at the Presbyterian Church, and Bishop Halsey at the Colored Methodist Episcopal Church.

SECOND DAY.

The morning of the second day's session witnessed the advent of the connectional men in force. Dr. Tigert's shadow has not diminished. He still believes in "The Methodist Review," and has brought all the rest of the preachers to his opinion by the sustained and substantial merits of this work. Dr. Morrison is radiant and seems to have sustained no harm while sustaining the heavy burdens of the past year. He reports $75,000 of the debt actually discharged, and the rest secured by the best people in the church.

Dr. Jas. Atkins appears among us for the first time this year. The really magnificent work he is doing in the line of Sunday-school literature and general work was modestly commended by the simple statement thereof. It is probable that some of the preachers were astonished to learn of the great work being done by the Children's Day collections. The Sunday-school literature of the whole foreign field, the maintenance of home mission schools, the supply of Sunday-school libraries, and the main prop of the Board of Education, are from this fund gladly given by the children of the church on their day, the third Sunday of May each year. We believe in connectionalism; must have connectional officers, and profit by and enjoy their presence.

An excellent resolution looking towards the formation of a reserve fund for the relief of those newly superannuated was introduced by the Joint Board of Finance and passed. The assessment for this purpose is to be 10 per cent. additional to the regular amount.

Thomas Carter, William B. Van Valkenburgh, and William H. Hatfield were admitted into full connection after the Bishop's address and satisfactory answers to the disciplinary questions.

The Bishop based his address upon the words of Paul to the Milesian elders—"Take heed to yourselves and to the flock"—and those to Timothy—"Take heed to thyself and to the doctrine." Personal piety, pastoral faithfulness and doctrinal soundness were the points lovingly, eloquently, earnestly pressed home to the consciences of all. It is impossible for us to estimate too highly the benefit to all derived by this annual opportunity to review the obligations of the itinerancy so solemnly assumed.

THIRD DAY.

During the morning session of the third day it was easily apparent that Bishop Hendrix intended to be through with all the routine business before noon. Reports of the pastors during the examination of character were briefer than usual; so brief, in fact, as to have little value. Nothing noteworthy occurred during this proceeding. Rev. C. M. Lyons was located at his own request. A committee of investigation appointed upon the case of Dr. J. A. Parker, at his own request, reported no ground of objection to exist against the passage of his character.

The report of the Legal Conference by Dr. C. W. Carter showed a profit of one thousand dollars from the Bynum bequest turned over for the use of the superannuates' fund.

The report of the Trustees of the New Orleans Depository, presented by W. B. Thomson, Esq., referred to a damage by fire of $1,500 sustained during the year, but covered by insurance. The Depository building had been put in thorough repair, painted without and papered within. A balance of $300 was turned over to the Board of Finance for the superannuates' fund.

Mr. S. H. Meyer was elected a member of the Board of Trustees in place of the late Dr. Joseph B. Walker.

Treasurer W. B. Thomson reported the receipts for missions during the year as follows: Foreign, $4,667; domestic, $1,783 02; total, $6,450.02, showing increase, notwithstanding the liberal gifts to the debt fund, of $146.42. It is hoped that this marks the beginning of an upward movement in the missionary contributions of the church in Louisiana.

An increase in the Conference claimants' fund of $146.42 is also noted this year, the total from all sources being $4,714.29.

The treasurer of the Board of Church Extension reported receipts for the current year of $1,118.89, an increase over last year's receipts of $74.97.

Other items of finance were: Collection for Bishops, $801.37; General Conference delegates, $208.75; printing Minutes, $112.40.

Rev. N. S. Cornell reported on District Conference Records without adverse criticism.

Dr. Tigert impressed upon the Conference the importance of "The Methodist Review" in his usual forceful and happy style. He very pleasantly referred to the claim he admitted Louisiana held upon him, as Mrs. Tigert is a native of New Orleans. The Doctor asserts that candidates for the General Conference must be readers of the "Review." Judging by the number of subscribers he has taken there must be some aspirants.

The election of delegates for the General Conference actually resulted as follows: Dr. William H. LaPrade was elected on the first ballot by 48 votes, 42 being necessary to election. On the second ballot Rev. Franklin N. Parker and Dr. C. W. Carter were elected, the former by 52, the latter by 44 votes. Dr. John T. Sawyer and Rev. Thomas J. Upton were elected alternates. W. B. Thomson was elected lay delegate on the first ballot; S. B. McCutcheon and John M. Pharr were elected as the other two lay delegates, and A. M. Mayo, of Lake Charles, and C. L. Andrews, of West Baton Rouge, were elected alternates.

A touching episode of the Saturday afternoon session was the placing upon the superannuate list of the Rev. John A. Miller, who has been a prominent preacher, a beloved and venerated pastor, a diligent and painstaking presiding elder for more than thirty years in the Louisiana Conference. Rev. P. A. Johnston, who has already endeared himself to the Conference during his three years among us, also took a superannuate relation for the first time. Those already holding the superannuate relation were accorded the same again. The calling of Question 18—"Who are superannuated?"—is well calculated as a reminder to those who are in the meridian of effectiveness that they must do the work of him that sent them while it is day, for the night cometh.

The Board of Church Publications reported through Rev. A. D. McVoy, recommending the following committee on the publication of the ADVOCATE: S. S. Keener, Frank N. Parker, John T. Sawyer. The report was adopted.

Rev. H. W. Knickerbocker read the report on the Bible cause, showing that $565.72 had been contributed for the cause during the year. Rev. J. W. McLaurin, superintendent of the American Bible Society for Louisiana and Mississippi, addressed the Conference, calling special attention to the magnificent offer of the society by which a Bible may be placed in the hands of every Sunday-school scholar in the United States at one-half the cost of manufacture. It is much to be regretted that only one-third of our pastoral charges have acknowledged their obligation to this great organization by making contributions to it during the year.

The absence of suggestions for General Conference legislation had been conspicuous until this time, when a resolution looking to the introduction of laymen into the cabinet was offered. On motion, it was promptly tabled.

The statistical secretary having suffered considerable embarrassment in his work by reason of delay in the filing of reports, a resolution was offered by Rev. W. R. Tucker, and passed, constituting it a ground of censure for a preacher in charge to fail in promptly filing his statistical reports.

Rev. W. H. LaPrade presented the report of the Board of Education, showing substantial improvements in the equipment of Mansfield College at an expense of over $2,000, which now has 116 pupils, of whom 86 are in the college department. Johnston Collegiate Institute is soon to become the property of the church; buildings valued at $4,000. One hundred and one pupils are in attendance. Centenary College reports 67 pupils, 5 professors, and $29,600 endowment. Rev. Franklin N. Parker was elected Conference Secretary of Education, on recommendation of the Board.

Centenary was again brought before the Conference, Monday morning, by Prof. Thos. Carter, who after referring to the various things by which preachers are distinguished, in allusion to Dr. Tigert's sermon, said: "After all, the thing that distinguishes one preacher from another is the way he thinks. The difference between Jesus, as a preacher, and John, was that Jesus thought as God, John as a man."

J. C. Sligh spoke briefly for Mansfield, and Rev. J. D. Harper stated that they all were on the up-grade.

The education collection was $715, distributed among Centenary, Mansfield, Payne and Lane and the General Board of Education.

SUNDAY'S SERVICES.

Sunday was a high day for church-going Crowley. All the pulpits were occupied by various members of the Conference, the Bishop at the M. E. Church, South, in the morning, and Dr. Tigert in the evening.

After the sermon the following brethren were ordained deacons: Percy R. Knickerbocker, J. R. Montgomery, William H. Hatfield, W. R. Harvell, M. F. Johnson. The following were ordained elders: S. B. Beall, S. S. Bogan, Robert W. Vaughan, Harry W. Rickey.

Bishop Hendrix combines the ritual for the ordination of deacons and that for the ordination of elders in one service. This may save time, but seems not as impressive as the usual method of having the two orders imparted separately.

Seldom has the Louisiana Conference had such occasion for heartfelt sorrow at the call of Question 19—"What preachers have died during the year?"—as when, after appropriate religious service, it was called by Bishop Hendrix, Sunday afternoon. We should like to reproduce here the beautiful and clear memoirs read on this occasion, but space does not admit of doing so. Memoirs of Rev. Joseph Burch Walker, D. D., and Rev. Jesse Fulton were read by Rev. J. F. Scurlock; of Rev. E. W. Yancey, by Rev. J. D. Harper; of Rev. P. H. Dieffenweirth and Christian Keener, by Dr. C. W. Carter.

FIFTH DAY.

Much work was rapidly done Monday morning, and Conference was ready for the appointments by 10:30 o'clock.

Rev. James A. Parker read the report of the Conference Board of Missions, noting an increase over last year's receipts, and offered a resolution, which was passed, requesting our delegates to the General Conference to endeavor to bring to the attention and under the care of the Board of Missions our work among foreigners and non-English populations. An assessment of $9,000 for foreign and $3,400 for domestic missions was made.

Rev. John F. Foster read the report of the Sunday-school Board, which was adopted with a resolution endorsing the State Sunday-school Association. Pastors were requested to turn over their entire Children's Day fund to the Conference Board, by which a proper division of the money would be made. Thomas Carter was added to the Sunday-school Board, and A. M. Mayo and W. W. Carre were put in place of William Round and T. J. Martin.

Rev. Fitzgerald Sale Parker read the report of the Epworth League Board. Thomas Cartor and Thad. M. Salter were put in the places of Lyman F. Jackson and Claude Smith.

The office of Conference editor of Minutes was constituted, and Rev. John T. Sawyer, D. D., elected to the office.

In addition to statistics already reported, Rev. W. G. Evans reported as follows: Number of white members, 28,250; colored, 13; local preachers, 74; infants baptized, 970; adults baptized, 729; number of Epworth Leagues, 52; members, 1,658; number of Sunday-schools, 279; teachers, 1707; scholars, 13,648; salaries of presiding elders, $7,605.02; preachers in charge, $52,488 23; number of organized societies, 376; number of church edifices, 297; value of same, $501,148; number of pastoral charges, 114; number of parsonages, 91; value, $86,710; 4 district parsonages, valued at $7,100.

Mansfield was selected as the place for holding the next Conference, and after sincere resolution of thanks for the delightful and generous hospitality of our Conference hosts, the Bishop read the following appointments, and pronounced the Conference adjourned:

IMPORTANT NOTICE.

I want a local preacher whose earthly possessions consists solely of a horse, bridie and saddle, and who will work on a small salary, to take charge of Faller circuit, recently declined by Rev. F. B. Ormond, who was appointed by Bishop Wilson at our recent Conference in Jackson, Miss. The work lies west from Ellisville a few miles. Ellisville is on the Northeastern railroad, some fifty miles south from Meridian. Correspondence solicited.

ORPHANS' HOME.

To the Methodists and Other Friends of the Mississippi Orphans' Home:

We are preparing for the early opening of the Home. Hope to be ready not later than the fifteenth of February to receive orphans. We desire to call your attention to the furnishing of the Home, and ask anyone who feels an interest in the work and desires to "bless the living and honor the dead," to contribute to the work by sending fifteen dollars—an amount sufficient to buy and furnish a substantial iron bed and place on it the name of donor or anyone suggested. We will need about fifty or seventy-five beds, and we hope that number will be contributed at once, so that we will not be compelled to spend the money we have on hand for beds.

We need to use this money in other ways for the comfortable and successful opening of the Home. All correspondence and articles for the Home should be sent to the manager, Rev. M. L. Burton, Water Valley, Miss.

Those who know of orphan children that desire to be admitted into the Home will please write for blank applications immediately, so that there will be no delay.

We beg in behalf of this holy cause the earnest co-operation of the ministry and laity with the manager in the successful prosecution of the work. Please accept our sincere thanks for the practically universal sympathy and help that you have extended to the Home. We pray you not to delay, but give us your continued prayers and aid.

Yours in behalf of the orphans.

FELLOW SUNDAY-SCHOOL WORKERS.

The Executive Committee of the Orleans Parish Association wishes to call your attention to the resumption of the Friday Evening Teachers' Meetings, which are held at the Y. M. C. A. Building.

The gratifying success of these meetings up to the time when they were discontinued for the Summer is an assurance that they can be taken up again this season with great profit to the active Sunday-school workers in New Orleans.

Everyone interested in Bible study, especially teachers and Sunday-school officers, is cordially urged to take part, as the larger the attendance the more useful and interesting the work will be.

These meetings are purely informal and begin promptly at the hour set, and close at 9 P. M., sharp.

T. G. HARDIE, Chair'n.
J. R. WESTERFIELD, Sec.

NOTES.

The postoffice address of Rev. Hiram R. Singleton is Malden, Mo.

When you change your postoffice, be sure to notify us if you wish to receive your ADVOCATE promptly.

Dr. J. M. Weems and family received a royal welcome from old friends on their arrival at Brookhaven.

Dr. J. J. Tigert is spending a few days in the city, the guest of Bro. and Sister F. A. Dicks, at whose hospitable home we had the pleasure of meeting him.

Citizens of Jackson generally, and the Methodist denomination particularly, are glad that the Conference made no change of ministers here. Both Dr. DuBose and Rev. R. J. Jones are popular and capable, and under their faithful and efficient ministration their churches have become stronger and their congregations materially benefited. That they are to remain with us another year is cause for congratulation.—Clarion Ledger.

NOTICE.

To the Pastors and District Stewards of the Jackson District, Mississippi Conference—

DEAR BRETHREN: Very important business, in addition to the regular work of apportioning the assessments ordered by the Annual Conference, will come before the district steward's meeting. I earnestly ask every district steward and pastor to be present. The pastors will please urge the stewards to attend and come themselves. Pastors will please see ADVOCATE for time and place, and call attention to same.

MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP has been used for children teething. It soothes the child, softens the gums, allays all pain, cures wind colic, and is the best remedy for Diarrhœa. Twenty-five cents a bottle.

No ferry transfer at Memphis via the Texas and Pacific. Double daily trains each way, thus preventing delay on your return trip.

RUNNING OF TRAINS ON SUNDAY.

I recommend legislation that will prevent the running of railroad trains on Sunday, especially freight trains. I waive the question of religion. "The Sabbath was made for man, and not man for the Sabbath." The forces who load and unload and the crews who run these trains are composed of men who having given six days to faithful labor are entitled to relief from unremitting toil by a rest of one day in seven. It is necessary for recreation and recuperation. It gives these laboring men an opportunity to spend an uninterrupted day with their families. It gives the State the benefit of the elevating power of home influences. It is a step in the direction of the recognition of the principle in government that regards the humblest and poorest with as tender consideration as the richest and proudest.—From Message of Gov. McLaurin to Mississippi Legislature.

PAINT TALKS.

ECONOMY OF PAINTING.

Owners of buildings should realize that it pays to use paint. A building, or even a fence costs money, and repairs are expensive. The only way to preserve material is buildings is to protect them with paint. The weather and the sun then exert their destructive influences only upon the cheap, easily renewable covering.

As with the exterior, so with the interior; paint is cheap, clean, cheerful and easily renewable, while wall-paper, with its decaying paste and its crumbling, deleterious colors, is a disease-breeding, microbe-harboring, dirty makeshift. Paint, when dirty, can be washed, and when, after long service, renewal is desired, a fresh coating makes it new, sweet and bright.

But in selecting paints, the buyer should know what to avoid, for paints which are not durable, and which have poisonous properties, should certainly not be used upon dwelling-houses.

It is well known among paint manufacturers that the basis of the best paints in use is oxide of zinc, or zinc-white. Thousands of tons of excellent white paints are sold yearly under the title of "lead," which contain no lead except in the name on the label. They are popular with property owners because of their durability, and with dealers because of their popularity. Why, then, are they called "lead-paints" instead of "zinc-paints"? The story is a long one, but it is sufficient to point out the fact that the manufacturers of lead have spent a fortune advertising white lead, and the manufacturers of combination paints have found it profitable to reap the benefits of this advertising by calling every white paint "lead."

Pure lead, however, begins to undergo chemical change from the moment it leaves the brush, and change continues rapidly until it has crumbled from the painted surface. In the course of this decay it is washed off from roofs, houses and fences into the drinking water, and is dusted off doors, base-boards and window-frames into the air of living-rooms, to produce a thousand forms of mysterious ailments—the symptoms of chronic lead poisoning.

Zinc-white is not poisonous. Paints made with it do not crumble from the surface to which they are applied, and the chief objection painters have against it is that it lasts too long.

The property owner should, therefore, keep his property well painted; but he should be sure that pure lead is not used in the painting. It may be accepted as an axiom that, all things being equal, the less lead and the more zinc there is in a paint, the better and the safer the paint.

Hearts that Make Them;

Or, Thrifty People and Why They Thrive

BY

SAMUEL SMILES,

AUTHOR OF SELF-HELP, CHARACTER, DUTY, THRIFT, ETC.

CAREFULLY REVISED WITH ADDITIONAL MATTER BY CHAS. A. CASKELL, A. M.

A beautifully illustrated book of 644 pages, cover stamped in gold, marble edges, size 8vo, red cloth. Probably no books of the same general type were ever written that have so much interested and inspired to worthy action the various classes to whom they were addressed, as have the productions of SAMUEL SMILES. The marked interest which attaches to MR. SMILES' productions is chiefly due to his happy use of biography. Readers who tire of extended biographical histories find here groups of the wise and distinguished of earth, each giving testimony to the various principles the author wishes to inculcate. The interest excited by the novel arises solely from our interest in the lives and struggles of men and women. They are interesting biographies; but much more interest should attach to lives actually lived and conquests actually made, provided they are produced with equal care. The home is the epitome of society and government. The application of these principles to every member of the home—the importance of their inculcation in the home, where character is chiefly molded—and the value of such lessons in making every home what it may be and should be, has dictated the title,

"Happy Homes and the Hearts that Make Them."

Publisher's price, $2.50. Sent postpaid to any address on receipt of price. To any subscriber who will pay his subscription one full year in advance—viz., to January, '99—we will send it postpaid for $1.85.

FIRST TO GO.

I look around on the loved ones,
By the fireside's ruddy glow,
And I ask my heart in a whisper,
Solemn and soft and low,
When the angel shall come to grieve us,
And unsealed surely leave us,
Who'll be the first to go?

Across death's darkened portal
Some step must faltering go,
Some face must lie in its shadow,
Some pulse must flutter low
When the angel shall come to grieve us,
And one must surely leave us,
Which one will have to go?

Of all that unseen glory
Some face will catch the glow,
Some heart find first the healing
Where the restful waters flow.
When the angel shall come to grieve us,
And one must surely leave us,
Who'll be the first to go?

FRIENDLY CRITICISM.

We can never make the most and best of our life if we refuse to be taught by others than ourselves. The best-made man is the one who in his formative years had the benefit of wholesome criticism. His life is developed on all sides. Faults are corrected. We all need, not only as a part of our education, but in all our life-work, the corrective influence of the opinions and suggestions of others. Some people are only hurt, never helped, by criticism, even when it is most sincere. They regard it as always unkindly, and meet it with a bitter feeling. They resent in from whatever source it may come, and in whatever form, as something impertinent. They regard it as unfriendly, as a personal assault against which they must defend themselves. They seem to think of their own life as something fenced about by such sanctities that no other person can, with propriety, offer even a suggestion concerning anything that is theirs, unless it be in the way of commendation. They have such an opinion of the infallibility of their own judgment and the flawless excellence of their own performance, that it seems never to occur to them as a possibility that the judgment of others might add further wisdom or point out anything better. So they utterly refuse to accept criticism, however kindly, or any suggestion which looks to anything different from what they have done. They regard as an enemy anyone who even intimates disapproval, or who hints, however kindly, that this or that might be otherwise. It is hard to maintain cordial relations of friendship with such persons, for no one wishes to take the trouble to keep a look on the door of their lips all the while for fear of offending a self-conceited friend.

This building of character is something of the greatest importance to us all; but especially to those whose years are few, whose habits are not yet formed, and who have much to learn. Their ideals may be high, but they will none the less need to be corrected and confirmed by the best counsels.—J. R. Miller, D. D.

For Croup,

asthma, bronchitis, or whooping cough, there is no remedy so sure and safe as Dr. Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. From the first dose its healing influence is manifest. The sufferer who has been kept awake by the cough falls into a restful sleep, and awakes strong and refreshed. Dr. Ayer's Cherry Pectoral is acknowledged to be a specific for all pulmonary complaints. Physicians praise and prescribe it.

"One of my children had croup. One night I was startled by the child's hard breathing, and on going to it found it strangling. It had nearly ceased to breath. Having a part of a bottle of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral in the house, I gave the child three doses at short intervals, and anxiously waited results. From the moment the Pectoral was given the child's breathing grew easier, and in a short time it was sleeping quietly and breathing naturally. The child is alive and well to-day. Ayer's Cherry Pectoral saved its life."—C. J. WOOLDRIGE, Worthen, Texas.

Ayer's Cherry Pectoral.

It is an old admonition, but it can not be too frequently repeated: Be your best at home. Life is too short to waste its holy hours in criticism, fault-finding and unkind words and acts. Only a few brief years do family circles remain unbroken by the invasion of marriages, removals or deaths; and, if our retrospect of the time spent together is to be a precious memory, let its hours be filled with all that is loving and generous and noble.—Evening Messenger.

A HELPING HAND.

A cabman signed the pledge for Rev. Charles Garrett, but soon after broke it. Conscience-stricken and ashamed, he tried to keep out of the way of his friend, but Mr. Garrett was not to be put off.

One day he found the poor, miserable man, and, taking hold of his hand, he said:

"John, when the road is slippery, and your cab horse falls down, what do you do with him?"

"I help him up again," replied John.

"Well, I have come to do the same," said Mr. Garrett, affectionately; "the road was slippery I know, John, and you fell; but there's my hand to help you up again."

The cabman's heart was thrilled. He caught his friend's hand in a vise-like grip, and said:

"God bless you, sir! You'll never have cause to regret this. I'll never fall again."

And to this day he has kept his word.—Selected.

THE ART OF BEING PATIENT.

A wise man in an address to young men advised them to learn the hardest lesson in the world the art of being patient. He said:

"Do your duty and leave success to take care of itself, and then you will see the wisdom of the old proverb, 'Everything comes to the man that can wait.' You know, for instance, how hard it is to learn a difficult subject. All the ideas are unfamiliar, all the words are unfamiliar. We go on laboring and seem to make no way. Now this dishearteus nine students out of ten—the nine out of ten that will always be obscure people—but the tenth man goes on. He works harder and harder, he lets his mind play around the subject, he lets the ideas of that subject soak into his brain, he is determined that nothing can possibly resist persistent effort, and one fine day a great flood of light comes in—he suddenly sees all about it. His work is easy, his work is delightful. Everybody says of him: 'What an amazing amount of ability that young man has!' No, it was not ability, it was patient perseverance. The man had learned to labor and to wait."

Hygiene.

CARE OF INVALIDS.

When a patient is very ill, as a rule, he desires, above all things, to be let alone and not worried. It is an easy matter to be over-zealous in one's attentions to the sick, and to force one's presence upon them, in season and out of season, may display a sympathetic nature, but it displays also very poor judgment.

Indeed, it sometimes happens that over-zealous people actually render, by their want of tact, the discomfort of illness more grievous than it need be. Their well-meant attentions are a source of annoyance to the physician and of worry to the patient; yet their efforts are so obviously prompted by kindly motives that every one shuns the ungracious task of pointing out how far they fall short of their aim.

No one should think for a moment of entering the sick-room unless particularly requested to do so, and usually the exercise of one's judgment, when so admitted, will quickly determine whether or not the visit should be cut short. No one likes to inform a visitor that his or her presence is harmful to the patient. Nevertheless, it is sometimes, for the patient's sake, absolutely necessary to do this.—Selected.

BENEFITS OF EARLY RISING.

It was once laid down by a celebrated writer and historian that the difference between rising at five and seven in the morning for the space of forty years, supposing a man to go to bed at the same hour every night, is nearly equivalent to the addition of ten years to the life. This consideration should carry very great weight and be sufficient to induce those who have not hitherto practiced this habit to commence to do so, more especially the people who are always complaining that life is not long enough for them to transact all the work that they have to perform. There is much foundation for their complaint if they persist in wasting so many valuable hours of the day in bed. The advantages and benefits of early rising can not be overestimated; in the early hours of the morning the brain is clearer and more ready for work, and after a night's sleep we should be ready to attack the work of the day.—New York Ledger.

DENOMINATIONAL JOURNALISM.

Multitudes neither know nor feel their obligations to those religious papers which all through the life of the church, through self-denial and the expenditure of intellectual force and money, have carried her through all her trials, directed her in danger, have been eyes in darkness, strength in weakness, and a defense when assailed. They have stood sentinels, warning of danger, and when she has been defeated, have been the first to gather her shattered forces together for future contests. The fact is indisputable that the wisdom of the church becomes practical through these mediums. These papers go on week by week in their duties, have no vacations, not much appreciation, and often an unreasonable amount of fault-finding. They often lose money by the thousands, but no cries go up in behalf of the newspaper sufferers. No special collection is are made for them; no famine among them ever drew a tear. They are the burden-bearers, with panniers across their backs, into which the churches put their loads. Meetings of assemblies, conferences, classes and conventions are advertised gratis, and special meetings which often concern but a few, and about which multitudes of paying subscribers rave, calling it "dead wood," "dull trash," etc.

This has been the habit, and to break the habit of overloading newspaper editors with lumber which costs the publisher a good round sum a thousand cents to set up, besides paper, ink, press work, postage, all for nothing, would be regarded a sin. But this might be endured if the church, demanding so much, felt any sense of obligation to return these favors in seeing that papers which exist alone for the church are circulated. But churches expect these favors all the time from their own paper when the members oftentimes take another paper into the family. They would quite as soon take one of some independent order which has never spent a farthing to sustain the church in her perils, or to help her in her denominational enterprises. The editors and publishers of the denominational journals, they think, ought to continue to do this because they always have done so. We are not objecting to independent or undenominational papers; they may be taken with profit when the obligation to those on which the church is dependent is sustained. But how many notices of the meetings of ecclesiastical bodies do they publish for nothing? How many columns of Minutes do they carry for nothing? Nor do we blame them for this; they have no special obligations to do the work of any partien ar church.

The secular papers are constantly crowding the religious journals of the church for space, and granting that they may be as good for the families who read them—which is not true—how much defense has the church received in her perils from the secular papers? In the contests between sound doctrine and heresy they have been almost universally against orthodox teachings and practices. In the contests concerning church order and discipline, the secular papers have universally been with the offenders in their efforts to destroy the church.

Then, again, where do the attacks on Christianity come from? Through the secular press. Where the sneers and assaults at the ministry? Where the constant assailment that the church is effete or dying? Where the laudations of infidelity and atheism and attacks on the Word of Life? But for the neglected, half-supported church papers, compelled often to make bricks without straw, where would the defense of Christian principles and hopes of eternal life come from? No policy is as suicidal.

The churches of the land need, before all things, to build up their broken fortifications, their dismantled fortresses. They need to increase the influences of the organs of their communication at home, and then they can command the resources of knowledge, money and men. We are not attacking secular papers in the place and time, nor are we regretting or undervaluing any improvement in their moral or religious tone, but calling attention of the church people of every kind to the amazing folly and short-sightedness of not supporting, first, their means of defense, their means of diffusion of Christian principle, their means of knowledge of Christian necessities and from Christian standpoints. If the religious papers of the church at large perish, how long will the secular papers serve or even respect the Lazarus that lies at their doors daring to be fed as beggars where they might have reigned as princes? This article is a plea for a support to religious journalism, which will keep the church of Christ in this land, independent, progressive, defensive, educational and aggressive. "If the foundations be removed, what can the righteous do?"—Philadelphia Presbyterian.

RESPONSIBILITY OF THE PREACHER.

The key to the religious situation, in almost any church, will usually be found with the preacher. His position is a very delicate and important one. His own character and conduct will have most to do with the prosperity or decline of true religion among the flock. He is set over it to feed, guide and inspire; beyond the range of his example the members will not be likely to go. If his experience be imperfect, that of the church will probably be dubious; if he fails in earnest effort for the salvation of men, the labors of the rank and file all along the line will be slackened; while, on the other hand, if the preacher be devoted and intense, his influence for good will be felt through the whole congregation. By the whole people the preacher is recognized as the corps leader and central power; the whole camp is ready to move as he moves. The preacher should not fail to know his power and consequent responsibility. He must be the leader, marching in the van of the army and confronting every difficulty with a courage and intensity which mean certain victory.

The position of the Christian preacher is one of the grandest in the universe; he can do what angels are not allowed to do in conducting sinners to the cross; but let him know that for all this greatness of privilege he must give account to the Judge in the final day.—Zion's Herald.

Nothing is taught us more clearly in the New Testament than that it is our duty to forgive those who commit offenses against us. The Lord Jesus goes so far as to make compliance with this duty a condition precedent to the pardon of our sins: "For if ye forgive men their trespasses, your heavenly Father will also forgive you; but if ye forgive not men their trespasses, neither will your Father forgive your trespasses." St Paul approaches the subject from a somewhat different direction, and sets forth the free grace of God in Christ Jesus toward us as a reason why we should not be harsh or rigorous with others: "And be ye kind one to another, tender-hearted, forgiving one another, even as God for Christ's sake hath forgiven you."—Churchman.

OBITUARIES.

Obituaries of 200 words published free. For all words in excess of that number send one cent per word.

COLEMAN—Wilkins, son of J. J. and M. J. Coleman, died July 1, 1897, at his father's home. He was called off suddenly in the midst of business and well-matured plans for the future. He was not planning for so short a stay on earth, but, as our Savior said, death came as a thief in the night; but, notwithstanding he was called away so suddenly, he was prepared to answer the call; he was ready.

Wilkins was a noble young man. He was energetic in business, a lover of home, of father, mother, and sisters; and while other young men were seeking pleasure, he was either at home or engaged in business. He was not demonstrative in his religious life, but earnest and constant in his devotion to God and the church. While engaged in a business that required him, at times, to spend the night on the highway, it was said by one who was associated with him that he never laid himself down to sleep at night without engaging in his evening devotions, regardless of the presence of any. He was the only young man in his neighborhood who attended and engaged in the Sunday-school at his home church. His life is a demonstration of the fact that a young man, assisted by the grace of God, can escape the snares of Satan and the delusions of the world, and live a religious life in this present world.

May the Lord bless the grief-stricken father and mother and sisters, and help them to follow him as he followed Christ!

May the Lord help the young people who were his associates to imitate his example and live as he lived, that their end may be like his!

G. H. Jacobs.

SAGE—Mrs. A. P. Sage was born June 30, 1830. She was the daughter of the late Thos. A. Burgin, for many years a citizen of Mayhew, Miss. The family lived first in Alabama, where the subject of this notice grew to womanhood and graduated at the Methodist college in Tuscaloosa.

Hers was a checkered life, filled with lights and shadows. Often she was in the vale of deepest sorrow; often on the crested heights of happiness; but in all conditions our sister was the same conscientious, consistent Christian. During all her life she exercised those qualities which mark the true woman. Few persons were ever more thoughtful of the comfort of others.

But time and space would fail me to tell of all her noble traits. Her life was a constant flow of good deeds. Her character was noble and ennobling, always inspiring in other lives the influences which make for righteousness and tend to redemption.

February 18, 1869, she was married to Rev. A. P. Sage, of the North Mississippi Conference.

Sister Sage was a faithful, good wife, a devoted daughter, a teacher, kind sister, a consistent friend. After a long and painful illness she died at her home in Starkville, Miss., Dec. 11, 1897. She sleeps with her kindred in the cemetery at Mayhew. Our sympathies and our prayers are for Bro. Sage, for the aged mother, and the bereaved family, in this great affliction.

Self Threading—The "Arlington B" is self-threading, requiring no change from light to heavy work. Uses double thread, and makes the lock stitch.

The Needle is the same as used on the New Home machine, and is self-acting both as to height and position with reference to shuttle, with short blade and long shank, insuring great strength; finely polished.

Self-Threading Shuttle—A perfect steel cylinder shuttle with delicate and perfect tension, open at one end to allow the bobbin to be inserted without displacing any of the parts; runs loose in the shell, without spring centre or point bearings, thus insuring an even tension; can be threaded in the dark, and easily understood.

Loose Puller for winding the bobbin without running the machine requires no change or adjustment, nor is it necessary to remove the work from the machine.

Parts Subject to Wear are made of the finest steel, case hardened, light and noiseless and are very durable.

Governor Pingree, of Michigan, in a recent address to the Teachers' Association of the State, advocated the study of the Spanish language in the public schools on the ground that most of the commerce of the country would soon be with South America.

The ministers of Trenton, N. J., have resolved to make a united crusade against prize fighting, and intend to set apart one Sunday when sermons against the "noble art" will be preached in every church.

Mr. John D. Rockefeller has given $200,000 to the University of Chicago, to enable that institution to swell its income for the year beginning July 1, 1898, to $729,000, the sum needed to carry out its work as planned.

Whittaker's Protestant Episcopal Almanac for 1898 shows that the denomination has 4776 clergyman, an increase of 53 over the previous year; 6332 churches, an increase of 46; 664,083 communicants, increase of 22,938, and 433,600 Sunday-school scholars, an increase of 12,077.

The director of the mint has instructed the superintendent of the New Orleans Mint to reduce the force at that institution by seventeen, in addition to the fifty-four already dismissed. When the melter, refiner and coiner have completed their settlements there will be a further reduction of force.

An assembly of eighteen representatives of the Methodist Episcopal Church in the United States was in session, last week, at Foundry M. E. Church, in Washington, D. C., for the purpose of effecting a union of the forces between the two branches of the church, North and South. The assembly consisted of three Bishops, three ministers and three laymen from each branch of the church.

The military committee of the National House has returned from a recent trip to the Vicksburg battlefield, favorably impressed with the value of this locality for a national military park, and it is practically agreed that a favorable report will be made on a bill to this end. Members of the committee say that the old defenses about the city and the points occupied by the Union forces can be secured for about $50,000.

Some of the friends of the State levee system seem to fear that, should the United States government, as is proposed in a bill recently offered in Congress by General Catchings, of Mississippi, offer to take charge of all the levees of the State, the people of Louisiana would be prohibited by the limitations upon the coming Constitutional Convention from accepting Federal assumption of the care and control of their levees.

The complications attending the pending senatorial contest in Ohio are in every way anomalous and remarkable. A numerically weak Republican opposition to the election of Mr. Hanna, having secured the co-operation of the Democratic members, has already organized both Houses of the State Legislature, and, if the combination effected for that purpose can be maintained intact, will be able to name Mr. Hanna's successor in the United States Senate.

FOREIGN.

Spain is considering a formal request to the United States to use its good offices to stop the fighting in Cuba. Intimations have been received at the State Department that the Sagasta government had become convinced that the only way to save Cuba was to accept the often proffered good offices of the United States.

The German press is indulging in a tone of extravagant self-satisfaction over the success of German diplomacy in China. The act that Emperor William personally conferred the order of the Red Eagle upon Baron von Buelow, the German foreign minister, for his share in the affair, indicates that the Emperor is delighted with the outcome of his policy.

The most surprising development in connection with the Eastern situation is the floating of a large Chinese loan in London, amounting to £16,000,000. This loan was secured by the guarantee of the British government. It is not stated what concessions Great Britain received for this loaning of her credit to China; but it is assumed that she has acquired a firmer control than ever of the finances of the Chinese Empire.

MAN.

How poor, how rich, how abject, how august,
How complicated, how wonderful is man!
From different natures marvelously mixed,
Connection exquisite of distant worlds!
Distinguished link in being's endless chain!
Midway from nothing to the Deity!
A beam ethereal, sullied and absorbed,
Though sullied and dishonored, still divine,
Dim miniature of greatness absolute!
An heir of glory! a frail child of dust!
Helpless, immortal! insect infinite!
A worm! a god! I tremble at myself
And in myself am lost.

SUMMARY OF PROCEEDINGS OF THE JOINT COMMISSION ON FEDERATION.

The Commissions on Federation appointed by the General Conferences of the two Episcopal Methodisms met in joint session at Washington, D. C., Jan. 7, 1898. The commissioners present from the M. E. Church, South, were: Bishop J. C. Granbery, D. D.; Bishop R. K. Hargrove, D. D.; Bishop W. W. Duncan, D. D; Rev. Dr. E. E. Hoss, Rev. G. G. N. MacDonell, D. D; Rev. J. H. Dye, Judge Walter Clark, Prof. R. W. Jones, Col. Asa Holt. From the M. E. Church the commissioners present were: Bishop S. M. Merrill, D. D.; Bishop W. X. Ninde, D. D.; Bishop John F. Hurst, D. D. (alternate); Rev. R. J. Cooke, D. D.; Rev. L. B. Wilson, M. D. (alternate); Robert T. Miller, Thos. H. Murray, Esq. R. J. Cooke and E. E. Hoss were appointed secretaries. The commission sat two days, nine hours each day. From the beginning to the close harmony and fraternal love characterized the discussions of the important and delicate questions considered by the commission.

As a basis for action, the following paper was presented from the M. E. Church, South:

"We, the commissioners of the M. E. Church, South, think it becoming that we state to the Joint Commission the motives and purposes of our General Conference in originating this movement for federation. We, therefore, call your attention to the following report on federation, which was adopted by the General Conference, May 19, 1894. (The report referred to was read, as well as the report adopted by the General Conference of the M. E. Church.)

"We also remind you of the declaration and basis of fraternity which was adopted without a dissentient voice by the Cape May commission.

"Status of the M. E. Church and of the M. E. Church, South, and their co-ordinate relations as legitimate branches of Episcopal Methodism:

"Each of said churches is a legitimate branch of Episcopal Methodism in the United States, having a common origin in the M. E. Church organized in 1784; and since the organization of the M. E. Church, South, was consummated in 1846 by the voluntary exercise of the right of the Southern Annual Conferences, ministers, and members, to adhere to that communion, it has been an evangelical church, reared on scriptural foundations, and her ministers and members, with those of the M. E. Church, have constituted one Methodist family, though in distinct ecclesiastical connections.

"That commission decided questions concerning conflicting claims to church property in so just and liberal a spirit as to settle local contentions and give general satisfaction.

"The questions which come before this commission relate not to property, but to such occupation of the same territory by the two great branches of Episcopal Methodism as tends to promote friction and waste, and injure rather than promote the common cause, namely: the spreading of scriptural holiness through these and other lands.

"The two churches are one in faith and in most features of polity. They closely resemble in religious fervor and in methods for extending the kingdom of God and edifying believers. The reasons for harmony and hearty co-operation between them are very strong. We do not desire to reopen any disputes of 1844 or of later date. We view the present situation, its responsibilities and opportunities. Where one of these churches has been long and firmly established, given evidence of healthy and vigorous life, is growing surely and rapidly, and is active and enterprising in providing for the spiritual needs of the community according to the doctrines and usages of Methodism, it seems unwise that the other should enter and seek to divide the Methodist people. If a feeble start has already been made, the societies which have been formed made slow and doubtful progress, and are maintained year after year by the help of missionary funds, to withdraw would endanger no interest of the kingdom of God, but remove an unseemly and unprofitable competition, and augment the resources in men and money for the cultivation of needy fields. This view was very definitely expressed by the Cape May commission:

"In order to further promote the peaceful results contemplated by this Joint Commission, and to remove, as far as may be, all occasion, and especially to forestall all further occasion for hostility between the two churches, we recommend to members of both, as a wise rule of settlement where property is in contest, and one or both are weak, that they compose their differences by uniting in the same communion; and in all such cases that the ministers and members recognize each other in all relations of fraternity, and as possessed of ecclesiastical rights and privileges of equal dignity and validity. They should each receive from the other ministers and members in good standing with the same alacrity and credit as if coming from their own church, and, without interference with each other's institutions or missions, they should, nevertheless, cooperate in all Christian enterprise."

This paper was referred to the commissioners of the M. E. Church, and was reported back as adopted. It was then adopted by the Joint Commission. Various questions relating to every possible phase of federation between the two churches, questions relating to education and mission interests in foreign lands, to the occupation by the two churches of the same territory, to the feasibility of a common hymn book, one catechism, and one common form of public worship, and to the reception of traveling preachers by either church from the other without loss of orders or ministerial standing, were taken up and discussed with utmost frankness, and the most careful regard for the vast interests involved.

The Joint Commission finally agreed on the following resolutions, the exact language of which and particulars explanatory will be given hereafter as provided for by the Joint Commission:

First. That the General Conferences of the two churches be recommended to order the preparation of a common catechism, hymn book, and order of public worship for both churches.

Second. While recognizing the value and growth of the Epworth Leagues of the respective churches, and rejoicing in the spirit of fraternity manifested in their biennial International Conferences, yet the attention of the respective General Conferences is called to the International Epworth League Conference in the absence of any legal provision for it, and suggest to the General Conferences the propriety of recognizing and regulating it by legal provisions.

Third. That the General Conferences of the respective churches be recommended to adopt measures for the joint administration of their publishing interests in China and Japan.

Fourth. That while appreciating fully the Christian comity prevailing among our missions in foreign lands, and having given careful consideration to the principle and desirability of co operative administration as a means for lessening the expenditure of funds in the prosecution of the work, the commission, without attempting to formulate any plan for such co-operation, commend the subject to the consideration of the two General Conferences.

Fifth. It was further agreed for the prevention of hurtful competition that in places where either church is established and supplying the needs of the people, new work shall not be organized by the other church without the consent of the Bishop having jurisdiction.

Sixth. The following with reference to Christian education was adopted: In view of the many efforts made to give a purely secular direction to all forms of education, we are convinced that the time has arrived when greater attention should be given to higher education under Christian auspices than ever before, and when the church should feel its full responsibility for the wise and safe training of all its young people. We are approaching the close of the nineteenth century, and believe that our members should give some tangible expression of our gratitude to our heavenly Father for the manifold blessings which have marked our progress.

Resolved, first, This expression should take such practical form as will increase the efficiency of our higher institutions of learning.

Second. That the years 1900 and 1901 should be the period for the presentation of the subject of higher education to all our people and of their gifts to the cause.

Third. That it is the imperative duty of the Protestant Church to provide in the city of Washington a university—Christian, catholic, tolerant, and American—having for its sole aim post-graduate and professional study and original research; and that the American University is worthy of the confidence and benefactions of the people in all our churches. We, therefore, recommend that the claims of this institution be commended to both churches for special contributions during the closing year of the present and the opening year of the coming century.

It was also agreed that the Minute proceedings of the Joint Commission be published for the use of the General Conferences of both churches. With earnest appeal to the Head of the church upon the labors of the commission, it adjourned sine die.

A REPLY.

MR. EDITOR: The ADVOCATE, of Jan. 6, is before me, and I have just read Dr. Kelley's kind and courteous statement in regard to my remarks in the Christmas issue of your paper on the character of "Gloria" in Hall Caine's much-talked-of book, "The Christian." I hasten to say that, however much it may have appeared so, I had not the slightest idea of criticising Dr. Kelley's remarks in his admirable sermon, which I not only enjoyed very much on reading for the first time, but which I cut out carefully to preserve as containing some fine arguments on the "woman question."

In speaking of the sermon, I intended merely to give an interesting piece of news, and in speaking of "Gloria" I gave my individual opinion of her—an opinion which is, I am sure, at variance with that of many others more competent to judge than I. Dr. Kelley's known abilities as a scholar and a critic, and his honesty and fearlessness in expressing his views, would deter me from presuming so far as to criticise his utterances through the public print.

As I stated in my former article, I read the "Christian" in serial form, and my conclusions were, perhaps, hastily drawn. It seems to me, however, that if Mr. Caine had attempted to portray a modern "society woman," a professional especially, who had the dangerous power to "allure, palliate, or attract;" one who cared for nothing but the fleeting pleasures of the moment, who put behind her all the traditions of a godly home, all the admonitions of a fond father; one to whom a spiritual life was nothing and a life devoted to material wants everything, he could not have done better than he has done in "Glory Quail." The "winding up," the death-bed marriage scene, was something which appealed to her professional instincts. It was almost equal to an engagement at the "Royal Theatre." It was much easier to pose as John Storm's widow than to follow him through a life of self-denial and mission work. We feel that if we could only lift the curtain which veils her future, we should see her, after the "nine days' wonder" has passed, going back with renewed zest to the gaieties of a London theatrical season, either as the reigning queen of song, the wife of some wealthy sportsman, or, perhaps, the popular court beauty.

In "Vanity Fair," where this same London society is drawn for us by the master-hand of Thackeray, we see one woman, at least, who, though weak willed and infirm of purpose, is true, through poverty, desertion, and death, to her ideals of love and duty. We look in vain through the pages of the "Christian" for one person true to his convictions on any point. Seen through its medium, Christianity itself is a cheat and a delusion, with no power to comfort or support. There is no life which glorifies humanity, which makes us proud of our kinship with the race—a life such as we see in the ex-convict, Jean Valjean, immortalized by renunciation of self and stern adherence to duty. In this word-reading age, unless we have high ideals, we may expect bad results.

As to the "we-uns" and "you-uns" in Tennessee speech, I must plead in extenuation the example of Dr. Kelley's co-patriot, Charles Egbert Craddock. During my very short Christmas holiday I employed myself in wiping away salt tears shed over the woes of her badly treated, imaginary heroes and heroines "down the ravine" and "among the clouds." So thoroughly did I become impregnated with the spirit of bad English that for a few brief nights I am not sure that I did not dream in mountain dialect. Being somewhat of a "Georgia cracker" myself, I shall not deny the soft impeachment made against the denizens of the "piney woods" of that grand old State; but I shall never believe that Craddock, or anyone else, is justified in making it customary to use "you-uns" and "we-uns" in the singular number. I have heard it in the plural, both in Georgia and on the Cumberland Mountains in Tennessee, but never in the singular.

I believe, in fact, that the great demand for "dialect stories"—the result of a popular taste that is almost morbid—has caused great injustice to be done to a large and respectable class of honest and highly honorable people, in whose veins runs the best blood of the Anglo-Saxon, and whose only misfortune, if such it be, is in living in isolated portions of the country where opportunities for "culture"—another name for education—are limited. Not long since—to give you an idea of the vagaries of a certain class of scientists—I read an article written by a Northern man, which was written to prove that the "cracker" element in the older Southern States belonged to a different type or nationality from the upper classes—as the Bohemian or gypsy is distinct from the peoples among whom he pitches his tent. I think that is the most arrant nonsense. I believe if you should take the proudest Vere de Vere, whose veins ever bore the commingled Norman and Saxon blood, and isolate him and his descendants for a few generations from close contact with the great world and its social amenities, the result would be the same as in the so-called "cracker" districts of the South to-day. Really, laying aside their thriftlessness, the result of a congenial climate and spontaneously producing soil, they are not far below the New England farmer as depicted by Miss Wilkins, Sarah Orne Jewett, and others. The difference lies in the fact that until the war opened up the conservative South, the dialect fields of this section were virgin soil to story writers, and being opened up by a few hardy pioneers, have been worked, to use a cant phrase, "for all they are worth."

Joel Chandler Harris has done for Georgia what Thomas Nelson Page did for Virginia and George W. Cable for the Creoles of Louisiana. In my humble opinion, these are the three really great dialect writers of the South to-day. The rest of the innumerable host are more or less imitative.

Speaking of popular fallacies, a leading Southern daily recently denied indignantly that people existed in the backwoods of the South who indulged in the luxury of "dirt-eating," or as our Northern friends term it, "clay-eating." That this depraved appetite does exist among certain classes of the poor whites is a fact so well-known and so easily substantiated that I was surprised that a newspaper which should be the repository of useful knowledge should deny it.

I did not intend writing so much, Mr. Editor, but what I have written is written; so, with many thanks for your courtesy in allowing me so much space, I remain,

Sincerely, MARY V. DUVAL.

CALIFORNIA NOTES.

We have had an unusually dry Christmas throughout the State, though delightful weather. Indeed, though some sections have fared better and some worse, less than two inches of rain have fallen for the season in this part of the State. There have been very few days when the roads have not been in good condition for bicycles. This has been good for the wheelmen, but farmers are becoming somewhat alarmed. However, the ground has been sufficiently moist for plowing, and a great deal of grain has been sown. There is time enough yet for bountiful rains, insuring a bountiful harvest, and I look for them, even if the moon is on her back.

Speaking of bicycles, it has not been long since, to say the least, it was considered unclerical for clergymen to ride them, but now "wheeling" is the most common mode of traveling among us. I am seriously thinking of adopting it myself, as cheaper than keeping a horse and more convenient. In fact, I have already rid myself of "Dolly and the buggy."

Still they come—new preachers do. A transfer has been sent to Petaluma, another to Gridley, and another to Lemore. None of them have gone to "flowery beds of ease." Then the Bishop has changed Dr. J. W. Bain from Salinas to San Bernardino, and given us a Mississippian—James Healey—instead. Though a near neighbor, I have not yet had the pleasure of meeting Bro. Healey, but hear good reports of him. Of course, he's all right. Mississippi has never given California any other kind, unless this scribe is the exception. I remember, too, of having heard a presiding elder represent Bro. Healey at Conference, at the close of his first year, I think, and if the presiding elder knew him, he is made of the kind of material that is demanded for this Western work.

I recently received a letter from a brother inquiring if there was a vacancy in our Conference for "an ambitious, educated young man." It depends upon the character of his ambition and some additional qualifications. If he is ambitious for place, we do not want him, nor does he want us. In fact, I have not heard of this brother applying for the places that I described to his friend as being vacant. Paul was ambitious to labor in the hardest places, where the way had not been prepared before him.

So far "all is quiet along the Potomac." No "self-appointed evangelist" has come along to disturb us, and ours is really a "Pacific" Conference. Pacific I hope it will ever be, but Methodists can not get along without a little noise, at least an occasional shout of victory. These will begin to rend the air ere long, no doubt.

I have seen several copies of the Texas Advocate lately. It seems to me that some of the brethren in the Lone Star State are vexing themselves unnecessarily about trespassing local-preacher evangelists. What's the use? Since the settlement of the Morrison case, of course evangelists will abide by the law as interpreted by the Bishops until the General Conference, and it is a foregone conclusion that that body will more clearly define the prerogatives of pastors in the premises, and make it easier to deal with offenders. It will not, however, adopt the suggestion of the Rev. Sam P. Wright, and pass a law whereby all "second-blessing" preachers can be tried for immorality. It will meet too near the opening of what Dr. DuBose is pleased to call "the sunrise century" for that.

Our Pacific Methodist College is not on a boom, but President Anstin reports a larger number of pupils enrolled than for several years past. Almost in the shadow of two heavily endowed State institutions, where tuition is free, with free high schools in every county, it is up hill business to conduct a denominational college without endowment. The skeptical tendencies at Stanford and Berkeley make them not the most desirable places for Methodists to educate their sons and daughters, but their superior equipment draws them, notwithstanding. The two universities have between them about three thousand students. Oh, for a million dollars with which to equip and endow a Christian school!

THE HANDSELS OF THE ATTIC.

A NEW YEAR'S MEDITATION.

(Translated from the French by Rev. A. B. Warwick.)

January 1st.—This date comes into my mind as soon as I awake. One year more which has been detached from the chain of the ages to fall into the abyss of the past! The crowd is eager to receive with open arms its young sister. But while all eyes are turned forward, mine turn backward. They are smiling at the new queen, and I, in spite of myself, am thinking of that one whom time has just wrapped in her shroud.

As for the latter, I know, at least, what she was and what she has given me, while the other presents herself surrounded by all the menaces of the unknown. What does she conceal in the clouds which envelop her? Is it storm or sunshine?

Meanwhile it is raining, and I feel my soul misty like the horizon. I have holiday to day; but what is to be done with a rainy day? I go through my attic peevishly, and I decide to kindle my fire.

Unfortunately, the matches are hard to light, the chimney smokes, the wood goes out! I throw down my bellows in vexation and sink into my old armchair.

In a word, why should I rejoice to see a new year born? Do all those who are already running through the streets with a holiday air and with a smile upon their lips understand what makes them joyful? Do they even know what this festival signifies, and whence comes the custom of New Year's gifts?

Here my mind pauses to prove to itself its superiority over the mind of the common people. I open a parenthesis in my bad humor in favor of my vanity, and I assemble all the proofs of my knowledge.

The earliest Romans divided the year into only ten months; it was Numa Pompilius who added to them January and February. The first took its name from Janus, to whom it was consecrated. As it opened the new year, its commencement was surrounded with happy presages, and from that came the custom of visits between neighbors, of wishes of prosperity, and of New Year's gifts. The presents in use among the Romans were symbolic. They used to offer dried figs, dates, honey comb, as emblematic of "the peacefulness of the auspices under which the year was to begin its course," and a little piece of money called "stips," which presaged riches.

Here I close the parenthesis to take up again my sullen mood. The little speech which I have just addressed to myself has made me satisfied with myself and more dissatisfied with others. I might indeed breakfast to divert myself, but the servant has forgotten my morning's milk and the preserve jar is empty! Another would be provoked; but I affect the proudest indifference. There is remaining a hard crust, which I break with my wrists, and which I nibble nonchalantly as a man well above the vanities of the world and light rolls.

However, I do not know why my ideas grow gloomy in proportion to the difficulties of mastication. I once read the story of an Englishman who had hanged himself because they had served him tea without sugar. There are hours in life when vexation the most frivolous assumes the proportions of a catastrophe. Our humor resembles opera-glasses, which, according to the end, show objects diminished or enlarged.

Usually, the perspective which opens before my window delights me. It is an overlapping of roofs, whose tops interlace, cross, rise above one another, and over which some tall chimneys raise their points. Yesterday, moreover, I discovered an alpine aspect to them, and I was awaiting the first snow, in order to see there some glaciers; to day I perceive only tiles and stove pipes. The pigeons, which aided me in my rustic illusions, no longer seem to me anything but miserable winged animals, which have taken the roofs for a back yard; the smoke which rises in light flakes, instead of making me think of the vent-holes of Vesuvius, recalls to me culinary preparations and dish-water: finally, the telegraph pole, which I perceive at a distance above the old tower of Montmartre, has upon me the effect of a vile gallows whose arm rises above the city. Thus offended by everything which they meet, my eyes fall upon the mansion which faces my attic.

The influence of the first of the year makes itself visibly felt there. The servants have a look of earnestness that is proportioned to the importance of the presents received or to be received. I see the proprietor crossing the yard with the morose countenance which forced generosities give, and the visitors increasing, followed by porters who carry flowers, boxes, or toys. All of a sudden the great carriage-gate is open; a new calash, drawn by thoroughbred horses, stops at the foot of the steps. Those are doubtless the New Year's gifts presented by the husband to the mistress of the mansion, for she comes herself to examine the new equipage. She gets into it soon with a little girl streaming with laces, with plumes, with velvet, and loaded with gifts which she is going to distribute as handsels. The carriage-door is shut, the windows are raised, the carriage departs.

So everybody to day exchanges good wishes and presents; I alone have nothing to give or to receive. Poor, solitary, I do not know even a preferred being for whom I could offer prayers. Let my wishes of a happy year go then to seek all the unknown friends lost in this multitude which rustles at my feet!

To you first, hermits of the cities, for whom death and poverty have made a solitude in the midst of the crowd! Melancholy laborers condemned to eat, in silence and abandonment, the bread gained each day, and whom God has deprived of the intoxicating anxieties of love or friendship!

To you, excited dreamers, who go through life, with your eyes turned toward some polar star, walking with indifference upon the rich harvests of reality!

To you, worthy fathers, who prolong the evening in order to nourish the family; poor widows, weeping and working by the cradle; young men, ardent to open for yourselves a way in life large enough to load there by the hand a chosen woman; to all you valiant soldiers of labor and sacrifice!

To you finally, whatever may be your title and your name, who love what is beautiful, who have pity for that which suffers, and who walk forth in the world like the symbolic virgin of Byzantium, with your two arms open to mankind!

Here I am suddenly interrupted by chirpings, continually becoming more numerous and louder. I look around me; my window is surrounded by sparrows that are picking up the crumbs of bread which, in my distracted meditation, I have just crumbled upon the roof. At this sight a flash of light crosses my gloomy heart. I was wrong just now in complaining of having nothing to give. Thanks to me, the sparrows of the neighborhood will have their New Year's gifts!

Midday.—There is a rap at my door; a little girl enters and salutes me by my name. I do not recognize her at the first approach, but she looks at me—smiles. Ah! it is Paulette! But I had not seen her for almost a year; Paulette is no longer the same; the other day she was a child; to day she is almost a young lady.

Pauletto is lean, pale, miserably clothed; but there is always the same eye wide open and looking straight before her; the same mouth smiling at every word, as if to solicit your friendship; the same voice, rather timid and yet caressing. Paulette is not pretty; she passes even for ugly; I myself find her charming. Perhaps that is not because of what she is, but on account of myself. Paulette appears to me through one of my best memories.

It was the evening of a public festival. The illuminations were making their ribbons of fire run along our monuments; a thousand streamers were floating on the breezes of the night; the fire works had just kindled their spouts of flame in the middle of the "Camp de Mars." Suddenly one of those inexplicable terrors which strike multitudes with madness falls upon the pressed ranks; they cry, they rush; the weakest stumble, and the wild crowd crushes them under their convulsive feet. Escaped by miracle from the melee, I was going to withdraw, when the cries of a child about to perish held me back; I enter again into this human chaos, and, after some extraordinary efforts, I draw out Paulette at the peril of my life.

That was two years ago; since then I had seen the little one again only at long intervals, and had nearly forgotten her; but Paulette has the memory of the good. She comes at the renewing of the year to offer me her wishes for happiness. She brings me, besides, a wall flower in bloom; she herself has planted it and cultivated it; it is a possession which belongs entirely to her, for it has been acquired by her pains, her will, and her patience.

The violet has bloomed in a coarse vase, and Paulette, who is a paper-box maker, has wrapped it with a flower pot cover of varnished paper, embellished with arabesques. The ornaments might be in better taste, but you perceive in it considerate good will. This unexpected present, the modest blush of the little girl, and her stammered congratulation dissipate, as a ray of sunshine, the species of fog which enveloped my heart; my ideas pass quickly from the leaden tints of evening to the rosiest hues of morning; I make Paulette sit down and question her freely.

The little one answers at first in monosyllables; but soon the roles are reversed, and it is I who interrupt with short interjections her long disclosures. The poor child leads a hard life. Orphan for a long time, she has remained, with her brother and sister, in charge of an old grandmother who has "reared them to poverty," as she is accustomed to say. Nevertheless, Paulette helps her now in the making of the pasteboard articles, her little sister Perrine is beginning to sew, and Henry is apprenticed in a printing office. Everything would go well but for the losses and want of work, not for the clothes that are wearing out, but for the appetites that are increasing, but for the Winter that compels one to buy his sunlight Paulette complains that the candle lasts too short a time and that the wood costs too dearly. The fireplace of their garret is so large that a log produces in it the effect of a match; it is so near the roof that the wind drives back into it the rain, and that one freezes there on the hearth in Winter; moreover, they have given it up. Everything is limited henceforth to an earthen heater upon which the meal cooks. The grandmother had indeed spoken of a stove for sale at the retailer's on the ground floor, but he wanted seven francs for it, and the times are too hard for such an expense; the family has, in consequence, resigned itself through economy to being cold!

In proportion as Paulette talks I feel that I am more and more going out of my gloomy depression. The first revelations of the little box maker have begotten in me a desire which has soon become a project. I question her about her occupations for the day. She tells me that upon leaving me she is to visit with her brother, her sister and her grandmother various customers to whom they owe their work. My plan is immediately arrested; I announce to the child that I shall go to see her in the evening, and I dismiss her, thanking her anew.

The wall flower has been placed upon the open window, where a ray of sunshine bids it welcome; the birds are warbling on the casing, the horizon has cleared, and the day, which began so gloomy, has become radiant. I go through my room singing, I dress myself hastily, I go out.

Three o'clock.—All is agreed with my neighbor, the chimney builder. He repairs the old stove which I had replaced, and agrees to make it entirely new. At five o'clock we are to set out to put it in the house of Paulette's grandmother.

Midnight.—Everything has passed off well. At the hour appointed I was at the home of the old paper-box maker still absent. My Piedmontese has set up the stove while I was arranging in the large fire-place a dozen sticks of wood borrowed from my Winter supply. I shall get off with warming myself by walking, or with going to bed sooner.

At every step which resounds on the staircase I have a palpitation of the heart; I tremble lest they may interrupt me in my preparations and may spoil my surprise. But, no; there is everything in place—the stove, lighted, roars gently; the little lamp shines upon the table, and the oil can has taken position upon the shelf. The chimney builder has departed. This time my fear that they will come has been transformed into impatience that they do not come. At last I hear the voices of the children; here they are pushing the door and rushing in. But all stop with cries of astonishment. At the sight of the lamp, of the stove, and of the visitor who stands like a magician in the midst of these wonders, they recoil almost affrighted. Paulette is the first to understand; the arrival of the grandmother, who has come up less quickly, completes the explanation. Tenderness, transports of joy, thanks!

But the surprises are not ended. The young sister opens the oven and discovers some chestnuts, which have just roasted; the grandmother has just placed her hand upon the bottles of cider which adorn the cupboard, and I draw from the basket which I have concealed a savory tongue, a pat of butter, and some fresh loaves.

Now astonishment becomes wonder; the little family has never been present at such a banquet! The table is set, they sit down, they eat; it is a complete feast for all, and everyone on his part contributes to it. I had brought only the supper; the box maker and her children furnish the joy.

What bursts of laughter without motives! What confusion of questions which do not expect answers, of answers which do not correspond to any question! The old woman herself shares the silly mirth of the little ones! I have always been struck with the ease with which the poor man would forget his misery. Accustomed to live in the present, he profits by pleasure as soon as it presents itself. The rich man, surfeited by habit, allows himself to be enticed with more difficulty; he needs time and all his comforts in order to consent to be happy.

The evening passed as an instant. The old woman related to me her life, sometimes smiling, sometimes wiping a tear. Perrine sang a roundelay of former times with her fresh, childish voice. Henry, who carries printers' proofs to the celebrated writers of the day, told us what he knew of them. Finally, it was necessary to separate, not without new expressions of thanks on the part of the happy family.

I returned slowly, enjoying with full heart the pure memories of this evening. It has been for me a great consolation and a great lesson. Now the years may be renewed; I know that no one is unfortunate enough to have neither anything to receive nor anything to give.

As I was returning I met the new equipage of my rich (female) neighbor. She, who was also coming back from some evening entertainment, leaped from the carriage step with a feverish impatience, and I heard her murmur, "At last!"

I, upon leaving the family of Paulette, I had said, "So soon?"

OUR DEPENDENCE UPON CHRIST.

Our dependence upon Christ is plainly delineated in Scripture biography, of which Paul is a notable example. In reading his life we study a most beautiful character. I hardly think Paul's life was ever surpassed in divine beauty and grandeur, except by the life of Christ himself. And, as we are Christians, and desire to lead beautiful and noble lives, it is only natural that we should try to ascertain why and how Paul was enabled thus to live. We know no human being could live so in his own strength or wisdom, and we know, too, that Paul was only a human being like ourselves. The secret of Paul's wonderful power was this: he had put on the whole armor of Christ. And we find in I. Cor. i, 24, that Christ is the power and wisdom of God. So Paul was powerful because he was filled with the power and wisdom of God.

A human life may be compared to a little boat out on the ocean of time. We are making a dangerous voyage over unknown waters. We know no more of the obstacles and dangers on our journey from earth to eternity than the seaman who is sailing over waters he has never seen before, and of which he had never so much as heard, until he launched his boat upon its bosom, does of the clouds, and storms, and breakers he will encounter before he reaches his destination.

We are all the children of circumstances, and circumstances, too, over which we have no more control than the sea captain has over the winds, and the stormy waves, and the many other dangers which so often threaten the destruction of his vessel. We don't always realize our entire dependence upon a Supreme Being. But just let the storms of sorrow fall, the waves of adversity surround us on every side, shutting out every ray of light and hope, and weakening and shattering our mortal frame, then we begin to realize how very helpless and insignificant we human beings are when left alone. We feel then how essential it is to our success and happiness that we lean on the almighty arm; that we gather strength from his strength, and knowledge from the rich, exhaustless fountains of his Word. Is it any wonder that poor, weak human beings are sometimes, when trusting and leaning on self, wrecked and ruined? The way is all darkness to them. They are like one lost out in a storm on a dark night—they know not what to do, or how to do it. They knew not the way themselves, and failed to accept a guide. Let us not blame such, but pity them. Yes, from the very inmost recesses of our hearts let us love them and pity them, because they have been so overcome, and are in such distress, and are so far from God and happiness; and let us do all in our power to help such fallen ones to rise. We know nothing of the long chain of circumstances which combined to drag them down to the depths they occupy; neither can we realize what would have befallen us had we been surrounded by those self same circumstances; had we been met by those self same temptations, for we know not the way any more than they. Our only salvation from such a fate is Christ. Let us accept Christ, and live by and for and with Christ. Let us go straight forward in the faithful discharge of such duties as lay plainly before us, doing with all our might whatsoever our hands findeth to do, and trust completely the faithfulness of our guide, giving up everything—ourselves, our lives, all that we are or ever hope to be—into the all powerful hands of God, for Christ, and he alone, can pilot us safely across life's restless, stormy waters. We have never gone this way before, but he has, and he knows every "breaker that would ground our little boat." He knows every "bay so shallow, where it would be death to float." Yes, he knows every danger, of whatever kind it may be, and he knows, too, exactly how to steer our vessel so as to make every obstacle and every danger an advantage, and not a disadvantage. If collisions must come, and storms must fall, he knows just how to meet them in such a way as to make them a blessing, and not a curse; in such a way as to strengthen the vessel instead of weakening it; help the vessel instead of hindering it. Then, should we not trust him in all our trials and tribulations, feeling that they are allowed to come for our own good and his glory? Should we not, like Paul, glory in tribulations; in the very things that so vex and grieve us; that are such very heavy burdens, and so hard for us to bear, because it is for the glory of God for them to come, remembering that he has promised, and his promises are faithful; that "all things shall work together for good to them that love the Lord"? In speaking of something that was a great burden, and very humiliating to him, something which he called his "thorn in the flesh," Paul says: "For this thing I besought the Lord thrice, that it might depart from me. And he said unto me, My grace is sufficient for thee: for my strength is made perfect in weakness." Then says Paul: "Most gladly, therefore, will I rather glory in my infirmities, that the power of Christ may rest upon me." And he goes on further, and says: "Therefore, I take pleasure in infirmities, in reproaches, in necessities, in persecutions, in distresses for Christ's sake: for when I am weak, then am I strong." So all Christians are strongest when they most fully realize their own weakness, and depend entirely upon Christ for power, and wisdom, and for guidance in all things.

WOMAN'S PARSONAGE AND HOME MISSION SOCIETY, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

ITEMS OF INTEREST FROM AUXILIARY CORRESPONDING SECRETARIES.

Mrs. G. H. Galloway, East End, Meridian: "We did not observe the Week of Prayer. Good many of our members refugeed, and did not return in time. Hope we will be able to observe it still. [Do not fail to observe it in January.—Conference Corresponding Secretary.] Sent a box valued at $15 to yellow-fever sufferers on the coast, and helped relieve fifteen very needy persons in our midst."

Miss Fitzpatrick, Natchez: "Owing to the fact that auxiliary was not fully organized, we did not observe the Week of Prayer. It was with the deepest regret that I learned of the death of Miss Helm, and I, like you, say the loss is irreparable."

Mrs. T. B. Holloman, Natchez: "Our Natchez Auxiliary is working well. Only fourteen members have enrolled, but we have good average attendance, and promise of several new members at next meeting. At our last meeting we held memorial service in honor of Miss Helm. We are studying this month the Cuban work. Financial report of Conference very encouraging."

Mrs. J. R. Ellis, Fannin: "We sent Mrs. Holloman $9.86 dues. Held eleven meetings this year. Nineteen members on roll, two local members, three new members. Have done local work to the amount of $12. Have ordered Wolff record books."

Mrs. W. A. White, Biloxi: "Our society, on account of the fever, did not hold any meetings last quarter. To-morrow will hold regular meeting, and will send off dues for the quarter. We do not know whether our church will remain a station or not, but we want a parsonage in either case. We need a preacher's home here. If we do not have our minister here constantly, we will lose much ground already gained. We now have on hand $250. We hoped to swell these numbers considerably this Fall, but so many of our people have suffered from the fever we feel somewhat discouraged. We would greatly appreciate any help or influence you could give us in securing aid."

Mrs. A. E. Biberon, Long Beach: "The yellow-fever scare very greatly affected our meetings; became so scattered were only enabled to have one meeting during the quarter, and that relating to home work. Sent our pastor at Bay St. Louis $25. We did not observe the Week of Prayer. At the time there was too much excitement among us. I presume it will be observed in the near future, at which time I hope we will be able to make a suitable thank-offering for our deliverance." [Do not fail to observe it in January.—Conference Corresponding Secretary.]

Mrs. W. R. Stuart, Ocean Springs: "I enclose a meager report of our auxiliary. Little or nothing has been done during these days of fever and quarantine. Almost every member passed through the ordeal of yellow fever, and recovered, myself included. You will please accept the reports as the best under the circumstances." [The Seashore auxiliaries certainly deserve praise for their reports after the severe ordeals they have passed through. I hope others will follow their example in sending prompt reports under all circumstances.—Conference Corresponding Secretary.]

Paulding Auxiliary: "We observed the Week of Prayer. Valuable service was rendered by the laymen, and their earnest and instructive talks resulted in good. Collection by adult auxiliary, $3.45; young people, $3 55. The two united and made Mrs. D. E. Langford a patron to the 'Preachers' Wives' Loan fund.'"

HISTORIC PONTOTOC.

As everyone is fully aware, Mississippi has no mountains, but somewhere must be the highest point from the sea-level. As the State is very low, it has doubtless been unnoticed, even by many who repose upon its height, that Pontotoc Ridge is the highest altitude one can reach on Mississippi's soil. It is but 516 feet high. The beautiful and quiet little city of Pontotoc, the county site of a county by the same name, lies in peaceful repose upon this elevation. This quiet and lovely city sleeps upon the height, surrounded by picturesque hills and beautiful valleys, looking as if nothing of interest ever happened within its realm. Quite the reverse, for a great portion of the history of our State can not be recited without frequently mentioning Pontotoc. Those tall old oaks and elms which bow their graceful heads about to the breeze have witnessed many a scene which man has often tried to describe.

It was but a little distance from Pontotoc where Hernando De Soto went into winter-quarters the Winter of 1540. It was in January of the next year when a famous battle was fought between DeSoto's men and the Indians. DeSoto commanded two hundred of the Indians to go with him as burden-bearers, which caused them to revolt. Imagine the Indians shooting blazing arrows upon the haughty Spaniards' tents where now sleeps lazily one of Mississippi's most beautiful little cities!

Around in these towering hills is where once the red man roamed and hunted, molesting not the pale-faced white man save when the white man molested him; but, being molested, it was the Indian's whole desire to seek revenge—and seek it he would, or lose his life.

Here between two massive hills winds a beautiful little brook which shall ever be famous in history as Pontotoc Creek, the place where the treaty with the Chickasaws was made on Oct. 20 and 22, 1832.

The beautiful stream wound on towards the ocean, and Autumn birds sang in the forest as around Pontotoc they now sing, when all the chiefs and warriors of the tribe assembled. There was a sign of perplexity on every face, and warrior whispered to chief, and chief to warrior. The white man who sat upon the throne wanted their lands. They were perplexed. Once they never would have consented, but now their tribe was small, the white man's was large; so they must surrender their homes, surrender their old hunting-grounds, surrender the mounds under which slept many generations—all must be given to the white man, and they must move far away towards the sunset, where the white man said there were fairer fields and more abundant hunting-grounds. They surrendered their lands; but, bearing such an ardent love for their native hills, they would not leave, till a supplemental treaty was made three years later, when, amid sorrowful war tunes, they marched far away from their loved home west of the Choctaws in the Indian Territory, where their descendents still live. We might quote here a verse we have often seen quoted, which reads:

"But they are gone with their old forests wide and deep.
And we have built our homes upon fields where their generations sleep."

FROM THE WORK.

HERMANVILLE, MISS.

I was returned by Bishop Wilson and his cabinet to the Hermanville circuit for the third year. Many thanks to the Bishop and his cabinet for so good a work, and many thanks also to the good people of Hermanville circuit for kindness shown and for expression of love and appreciation of my humble efforts for them. I hope to do the very best year's work of my life. May God help me to do it! Pray for me.....My collections were very much behind, for which I am very sorry, but could not well help it. The yellow fever, quarantine, etc., and then a heavy parsonage debt which I found on the work, and have been trying to pay out. I found a debt of $700 or $800 and the people very much discouraged, and some of the churches had quit trying to pay on it; so we raised what we could year before last, and then last year, just closed, we determined to try to pay it out at once, and so made a desperate effort and, I think, succeeded very well. We raised nearly $500; then the Ladies' Parsonage and Home Mission Society, through the efforts of Miss Addie Purnell and Mrs. Sudie Parker, gave us $50, which helped us very much. God bless the good ladies of the Parsonage and Home Mission Society. We ought to help them in their very important work. So my collections were very much behind, not [illegible] but I promise they shall not be so far behind any more. We have a good work and a good people, and when the parsonage debt is off, it will be a good paying work. We have one of the nicest parsonages in the Conference, and it will soon be paid out of debt. God bless all the people and the work.

A. D. MILLER.

FROM BELZONA.

I am here at my post. My people have given me a warm reception, as good people always do, and we are beginning our year's work with much promise. Bro. W. D. Bass came down with me and held a week's meeting, which resulted in the addition of one man to the church and more than fifty dollars to the pastor. I think we will have other additions to follow. W. D. Bass is fine help to a pastor in more ways than one. He stands by both preacher and people. My people seem to be very intelligent, and perfectly willing to do anything that they can to help along the good cause. I can hardly tell Baptists and Presbyterians from the Methodists, as they all attend church alike. All seem to appreciate us as pastor alike, and all contribute to my support alike. We haven't but few here but who belong to the church, but those on the outside seem to be very genteel and nice and contribute liberally to the church when called upon. I contemplate a happy year with this people. My wife has not come as yet, but will be here soon to take her place in the parsonage. Blessings upon the ADVOCATE and its editor. I shall do all I can for it this year. J. H. BASS.

ARKABUTLA, MISS.

We are here for the third year. We have commenced our work in earnest, and while there are many difficulties that appear here and there, yet we feel very much encouraged by the promise of Christ to his disciples and their successors—"Lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world." If we would pay less attention to the difficulties, either real or imaginary, and recognize the fact that Christ is present in his church to bless his people and to give efficiency to the efforts put forth by them for the perfecting of believers and the salvation of sinners, we would succeed better I am sure. Therefore at the beginning of this year, as preachers and people, let us look to Christ in all we do and expect great things, as I believe we have a right to do. Let us honor God with our faith, for it shall be unto us according to our faith. Work we must, but works without faith are fruitless. Let us quit fighting one another and all unite in a real, earnest, continuous fight with sin and Satan, and at the end of the year we will all rejoice together because of the harvest. So may it be! G. H. JACOBS

"It creates no wealth, it earns nothing, it lives upon the earnings of other trades; it adds nothing whatever to the wealth or power of the State, nor to the prosperity or comfort of the people. This trade is wasteful, like war; it destroys more of the wages of the people and the useful industries than "war, pestilence and famine combined;" it creates more than three-fourths of the poverty, pauperism and crime of the country and more than one-half of the insanity; it inflicts a premature and shameful death upon more than sixty thousand people annually; it transforms hundreds of thousands of good, industrious citizens into drunkards, vagabonds, and tramps; it sends an infinite misery into hundreds of thousands of homes; it puts the people down and keeps them down; its effect is to make the people ignorant, coarse, vulgar, brutal enemies. Such are part of the certain effects of this trade."

"Have you not mistaken the pew, sir?" blandly said a Sunday Chesterfield to a stranger as he entered it. "I beg pardon," replied the intruder, rising to go out. "I fear I have; I took it for a Christian's."—Exchange.

CULTIVATE CHEER.

It was a favorite saying of Bancroft, the historian, who was a vigorous old man at ninety, that the secret of a long life is in never losing one's temper. The remark was simply a concrete way of expressing the hygienic [illegible] until lately, has scarcely been considered in the training of children. Hitherto we have regarded fretfulness, melancholy and bad temper as the natural concomitants of illness. But modern science shows that these mental moods have actual power to produce disease. No doubt in most cases imperfect bodily conditions are the cause of irritable and depressed feelings, yet sometimes the reverse is true, and a better knowledge of physiological laws would show them to be effect rather than cause. The fact that discontented and gloomy people are never in good health is an argument in favor of the theory that continual indulgence in unhappy thoughts acts as a poison and creates some form of disease. Moreover, such people radiate an unwholesome influence, which, like the atmosphere of a malarial region, one can not help inhaling. They also lack hope and energy and are far more likely to succumb to prevailing epidemics than those of a cheerful temperament. A variety of motives, therefore—our personal well-being, regard for the dear ones of our households, and loyalty to the Divine Master, who forbids our taking anxious thought—should inspire us to cultivate a sunny disposition.—Congregationalist.

A poor son of Ireland came to his priest and asked for permission to read the Bible.

"But," said the priest, "the Bible is intended for the priest and not for such men as you."

"Is that so?" said Mike. "But I read in my Bible that we are to instruct our children in the way they should go, and the priests have no children."

"But, Mike," said the priest, "you can not understand the Bible. It is not intended for people like you."

"Ah, father," said Mike, "if I can not understand it, it will not hurt me. And what I do understand does me good."

"But listen, Mike," said the priest, "you must come to church, and the church will instruct you. The church will give you the milk of the Word of God."

"But where does the church get that," said Mike, "if she does not get it from the Bible? Excuse me, father, but then I would rather hold on to the cow."—Southern Churchman.

Who would not rather have a son or a friend the victim of the robber or the assassin than of the liquor-seller? If the robber steals his money or his property, he leaves him still a man, honored and respected. If the assassin slays him for his money, he is still fondly remembered and loved as before. But the victim of the liquor-seller, robbed of his manhood as well as of his money, is loathsome even to his friends while he lives, and a source of inexpressible grief when he is dead, an agonizing sorrow from which there is no relief but in forgetfulness of his debauched life and hopeless death.—Selected.

Bishop John H. Vincent says: "Better the church that rings with the cry of beggars at the Beautiful Gate; of souls aglow with the divine life at Pentecost; of souls that know their sins forgiven—than a church that, to serve propriety, sacrifices piety, and rebukes, as did the Pharisees of old, the hosannas of the children in the temple, or the hallelujahs of the disciples when the tongues of fire fell from heaven upon their heads."

THE TWO WAYS.

There are two ways of defending a castle—one by shutting yourself up in it, and guarding every loophole; the other, by making it an open centre of operations from which all the surrounding country may be subdued. Is not the last the truest safety? Jesus was never guarding himself, but always invading the lives of others with his holiness. There never was such an open life as his; and yet the force with which his character and love flowed out upon the world kept back, more strongly than any granite wall of prudent caution could have done, the world from pressing in on him. His life was like an open stream, which keeps the sea from flowing up into it by the eager force with which it flows into the sea. He was so anxious that the world should be saved that therein was his salvation from the world. He labored so to make the world pure that he never even had to try to be pure himself.—Phillips Brooks.

It depends on who does the preaching, as to whether the devil sleeps in church.

There is no braver man than the one who has the courage to do right.

The pathetic story of Romeo and Juliet is repeated every day in modern life, with the exception that Juliet does not die by poison. She dies because of her own neglect or ignorance.

Neglectfulness causes much of woman's peculiar sickness. Neglect of the minor troubles causes serious complications. The irregularities, the bearing, dragging ache, the debilitating drains that mark the progress of feminine diseases, are passed lightly over or are borne in ignorance of their cause. Their continuance means death or insanity. This is all unnecessary. So-called female weakness can be cured. It can be cured quickly and permanently, and right in the privacy of the home without the humiliating local treatment so universally insisted upon by physicians. Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription does this and more. It acts directly on the delicate organs concerned and makes them strong and healthy. It banishes the usual discomforts of the expectant period and makes baby's coming easy and almost painless. It tones and strengthens the nerves. At all medicine stores.

W. R. Malcolm, Esq., of Knobel, Clay Co., Ark., writes: "My wife for perhaps four months previous to the birth of our child took the 'Favorite Prescription.' This strengthened her entire system and child-birth, to her, was very easy, being attended with little pain. Our baby Ruth is thirteen months old and she has never been sick a day, not so much as had the colic; she is hearty and stout, and pretty as a picture—pretty because she is healthy, and we very much blame Dr. Pierce's family medicines for it.

We keep Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, the 'Favorite Prescription' and 'Pleasant Pellets' in our home and use them. We have been married almost three years and I have called a physician into my family but one time—at birth of our baby."

Rosy cheeks. The rich, pure, red blood of health makes them. Keep the blood pure and you will have them. Constipation causes impure blood. Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets cure it promptly and permanently, and never gripe. They are purely vegetable and perfectly harmless. No other pill acts so naturally and perfectly. Druggists sell them.

A church ought not to be a field, but a force—a mighty army working for God.

We must be conscious of our own weakness before we can be strong in the Lord.

Some people seem to think they can make their lives clean by throwing mud at others.

The more thoroughly a man believes in heaven, the better citizen of earth does he become.

We must pass through the valley of humiliation before we can ascend the Mount of Transfiguration.

Every human being is intended to have a character of his own; to be what no other is and to do what no other can.—W. E. Channing.

If growling was ever profitable, either in dollars and cents, or in spiritual results, the muse of history failed to make a record of the fact.

The man who will live above his present circumstances is in great danger of living, in a little time, much beneath them.—Joseph Addison.

DEBT.

Contracting debts is as easy as rowing down stream. Paying them is often as difficult as pulling oneself out of a quagmire. The readiness with which many people run into debt is a sad commentary upon the spirit of the times. It looks as if the growth of wants and luxurious habits were far outrunning the wage earning power of the majority of the people. Economy and sturdy independence, we fear, are not held in as high esteem as they should be. A large class of persons seem bent upon enjoying the good things of this life without manifesting a corresponding concern about paying for what they get. The debts of a good many appear to trouble them far less than they do those to whom they are owed. Some dress elegantly and fare sumptuously, who, if their just debts were all paid, would be left penniless. Yet they persist in living in style and luxury as long as their creditors will let them.

Well has it been said that "debt means slavery." It is a burden that weighs down the spirits, lessens self respect, stifles independence and chills enthusiasm. An honest man when deeply involved in debt can hardly help being troubled in spirit, or having an air of dejection. The man who wishes to keep out of trouble, and maintain his integrity, should set his face like flint against it. Few have had stronger convictions on this subject than Horace Greely, whose advice is in every way worthy of being followed. "Hunger, cold, rags, hard work, contempt, suspicion, unjust reproach are disagreeable," said he, "but debt is infinitely worse than them all. Never run in to debt. Avoid pecuniary obligation as you would pestilence, or famine. If you have but fifty cents and can get no more a week, buy a peck of corn, parch it, and live on it, rather than owe any man a dollar."

There are times in the lives of most men when it seems impossible to avoid going in debt on account of misfortunes, sickness, lack of employment, etc. In such a case the obligations incurred should be as light as possible, and as soon as the necessity is removed, the "pay-as-you-go" policy should be inaugurated. There are multitudes, however, and among them, shame to tell, some professing Christians, who get all they can on promises to pay, and then let their creditors whistle for their money.

Making debts when one can avoid it is not only foolish, but in many cases positively dishonest. Some rather than practice temporary self-denial and suffer hardships allow themselves to become deeper involved financially, trusting to luck or the kindness of their creditors to help them out. Extravagance and thoughtlessness are responsible for no small portion of the financial troubles that men bring upon themselves. Too many look upon economy as disgraceful, while the incurring of debt they regard as a convenient and commendable means of getting along. We agree heartily with the writer who said, "It is coarse thinking to confound spending with generosity, or saving with meanness." Better is a dinner of herbs and a proud consciousness of owing no man anything than a grand feast and dread of angry creditors. If people would make it a rule not to buy what they can not afford, as well as what they do not need, much misery would be prevented. Oft times, however, the impecunious and the debt-burdened are the least careful in their expenditures. Some who owe their doctors and their merchants heavy bills, and who plead total inability to pay, somehow manage to take the whole family to the circus or the theatre, and liberally patronize the confectionery dealer.

Many persons run into debt because they keep no regular account of what they spend. If the money spent for trifles and unnecessaries were always jotted down, it would often serve as a check upon extravagance. What a deal of trouble could be prevented, if people of all classes would make it a rule not to live beyond their income.

No man has any right to buy what he has not a reasonable hope of paying for. One of the things specially forbidden in our General Rules is "taking up goods without the probability of paying for them." Paying what we owe is as plain a Christian duty as prayer or the reading of the Scriptures.

Speculation is another frequent cause of financial embarrassment. In their haste to be rich many think the ordinary methods of business too slow, and so make rash investments, or resort to the pool-room and the stock exchange, hoping to win a fortune at one swoop. The man who wishes to keep out of debt should beware of speculation. The majority after such ventures are like sheep that have been fleeced, and little pity do they deserve.

Now and then preachers are blamed—some of them very unjustly—for becoming involved in debt. A few of them doubtless are extravagant and unwise in their habits of living, but in most instances the blame rests with the people whom they serve. The majority of ministers get pitiably small salaries, which are usually not paid till the end of the year, and then rarely in full. Hence they must run an account or starve. A preacher, however, had better live on prison fare than get the reputation of not paying his debts. Such a reputation once established means an end of all usefulness.

The ready settlement of one's financial obligations, or in case of insolvency, an earnest effort to meet them, is one of the strongest proofs of Christian integrity. No Christian will rest content until he has done his best to pay every cent he owes. Many a man who now meets his current expenses makes little or no effort to pay bills of long standing. It is folly for such a man to think himself either honest or religious. Like Zaccheus, he must rectify the past. The example of Sir Walter Scott, who, finding himself at the age of fifty five, $600,000 in debt, labored with might and main till the end of his days in a determined effort to pay all he owed, is worthy of emulation by every debtor. The honor of his name was to him more precious than rubies.

The year just past has been an exceptionally hard one on the Southern farmers, thousands of whom have, in spite of themselves, come out behind on their crops. They deserve sympathy, for the low price of our chief product could not be foreseen. Yet they need not despond. No man who has health, pluck and good habits need remain long in debt, unless he has been recklessly extravagant. The industrious, economical and persevering, as a rule, will find their way out. Let us see to it that "we owe no man anything, but to love one another."

MISS HELEN RICHARDSON.

A very large audience gathered at Rayne Memorial Church last Sabbath afternoon to hear an address from Miss Helen Richardson, of McTyeire School, Shanghai, China. Her theme was woman's work for woman in China. The address was highly entertaining, and replete with useful and stimulating information. She speaks with great ease and self-possession, and has sufficient strength of voice to be distinctly heard by a large audience. She clothes her thoughts in choice language, and her manner is such as to convince everyone of her sincerity, and of her entire consecration to the noble work in which she is engaged. She seems filled with the Spirit. Her address, we are sure, will be prolific in good results. She will return to China in the Summer, accompanied by her sister, who goes to re-enforce the noble band of women who are working for the Christianization of their sisters in that land of pagan darkness.

LOYALTY TO ONE'S OWN CHURCH.

Church loyalty is an admirable characteristic, and should never be wholly missing in any man who calls himself a Christian—any more than patriotic loyalty in the case of the soldier who follows his country's flag. As the national ensign and the pennant of the corps and the flag of the regiment each and all appeal to the best sentiments of the soldier, so regard for the church militant as a whole and zeal for the denomination and ardor for the local congregation will all have a place in the breast of the devoted follower of Christ.

In how many ways can not church loyalty be shown! Faithful attendance on the means of grace, from principle and irrespective of the personality of the preacher; loyal support of the needs of the congregation and of the church at large and of benevolent causes; conscientious scriptural observance of the Lord's day; a readiness to testify against sin and to rebuke evil and evil doers; a careful watch on the tongue lest by heedless words and incautious criticisms or utterances that lack complete knowledge, the cause of the local congregation or of the wider work be brought into reproach; a readiness to co operate by sacrificing time and by using talents in all forms of good work that must receive attention—these are but a few of the practical channels in which church loyalty must flow. To make these things habitual is not burdensome to the man who is out and out for Christ. He realizes that the church needs his loyal support, just as it needs that of the best and most gifted and most advantageously situated. And he soon finds out that the sending forth of his own powers energetically and freely in accordance with the impulses of loyalty will not remain without a good influence upon himself. The reaction on his own character is wholesome. Neither now nor hereafter is he without reward.—The Moravian.

THE PREACHER'S AMBITION.

The ambition of every preacher should be to have power over men. By this we mean power to persuade men to do right. He should study how best he may acquire this power more and more. Should study what impresses men, and so far as lawful and right, he must seek to make use of what impresses men. One of the first things he ought to find out is that a genial and pleasant spirit is winning. He ought to find out that courtesy is winning. He ought to find out that a manifestation of a hearty interest in the welfare of others is winning. He ought to know by himself that a dictatorial and captious spirit is not winning. If he will only think, he will know that he was never won by a man who appeared to dictate to him. The great secret is, a great love for men and a great love for God, coupled with a knowledge of how best to make this love show itself to those we wish to move. Here is where wisdom is needed. James tells us how to get wisdom. "If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God that giveth liberally to all men and upbraideth not, and it shall be given him."—Baptist News.

HELP FROM CHURCH EXTENSION.

IMPORTANT NOTICE.

All churches that have applied, or expect to apply, to the General Board of Church Extension for aid at its approaching annual session are requested to take notice of the following rule which this year goes into effect:

"Rule 26. Hereafter all applications to the General Board for consideration at the annual meeting must be approved by the Conference Board, or its Executive Committee, at a meeting to be held during the first half of March in each year, except in cases of unforeseen calamity occurring too late for compliance with the rule. The Baltimore Conference Board may approve at its regular annual meeting held during the Conference session."

Applications coming within this rule that have already been sent to the office at Louisville, Ky., will be sent back to the Conference Boards for reconsideration at these special meetings, so as to place all on the same footing. The rule provides for no appeal from the decision of the Conference Board to the General Board.

Send your application to the Secretary of your Conference Board of Church Extension, and address all letters concerning it to him to be laid before the Conference Board in March. All applications should be in his hands by March 1. Blank forms for applications for churches can be obtained of him or of me at address given below.

TO SUBSCRIBERS.

We dislike exceedingly to lose a single subscriber, but we are instructed by the Publishing Committee to conduct the business of the office as nearly as possible on a cash basis. This being the case, we shall be under the necessity before long of cutting off a number of names, unless payment is made.

Our heart thrills with hope for the conversion of pagan nations. But our very deep solicitude is to see the United States made a Christ-like nation, with the law books of the land purged of all enactments contrary to the spirit of the gospel, with righteous and godly men in all the public offices, with politics cleansed, with justice in the land, with religion stripped of its worldliness and the churches thronged with humble worshipers, with fraternity binding all classes together, with every form of business based and executed on Christian principles, with love for God and man excluding the rulership of all lower loves. Is that day coming?—Michigan Christian Advocate.

No minister should insist that he be regarded as a standard of orthodoxy when, like the eel, he slips from your grasp. Neither can he insist on being respected as a sound exegete when his views are totally at variance with the accepted doctrinal standards, and by which good faith requires that he be guided. To be consistent, he must not array his pretended scholarship against settled dogmatic truth, lest he may be called a crank. Hence, in case our doctrinal standards are left to the mercy of an unscrupulous expositor, the young teacher becomes like a weather vane to be blown around as the superior force of the wind may direct.—Rev. A. G. Mendenhall.

Nothing is more deplorable than the shallow optimism that pictures this world as sailing over Summer seas to blessed isles, if only men would believe it to be so. Our true progress does not come in that way. It is rather a steadfast and courageous beating up against tempestuous winds and rugged seas, now to this side and now to that of the straight line we fain would follow; sometimes losing on this tack, sometimes only holding our own upon the other, but gaining on the whole; not able to see it always, except as day after day observation of our relation to the steadfast things above shows it to us.—Edward M. Chapman.

Individuals are largely influenced by what they read and the conversation they hear. It enters into the very life and finds expression. First, in their words; second, in their actions, and, third, in the very expression of the countenance. How careful then should we be in the selection of the literature we read and the company we keep. "Of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh."—Rev. J. G. Reed.

NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE NOTES.

One month only has passed since Conference adjonrned, bnt, notwithstanding the many changes of preachers that were made, the machinery has all been adjnsted and work is progressing on every line. What a wonderful system is onrs for maintaining and extending the Redeemer's kingdom! So far as heard from the appointments have given general satisfaction, and the year's work begins encouragingly. If preachers and people will walk close with God and maintain Christian fellowship and co-operation in the work, abnndant prosperity to onr Zion will be the result.

Rev. J. S. Oakley, the new presiding elder, takes hold of the work on Durant district with a zeal according to knowledge. Though this is to him a new role, he executes the office, not as a novice, but as a skilled workman. The evidences are that he is the right man to succeed the much-beloved Mitchell, who had just closed a quadrennium of faithful and fruitful service on the district, and whose memory will ever be cherished by all with whom he served and associated during these years.

This scribo has been very busy since Conference, filling orders for books and in going to and fro that knowledge may be increased. In his itinerancy he had the pleasure of falling in with the Mississippi Conference in session at Jackson, and was delighted with the brethren during his stay with them. They treated him with all brotherly kindness and courtesies, notwithstanding the omission of his name with those who "delighted" the Conference "with their presence" (one of whom, by the way, was not present, viz., Rev. J. H. Mitchell).

I endorse all that "Rex" says on "Methodist Hymnology" in the last ADVOCATE, except his criticism on the Young People's Hymnal. I must take issue with the brother on this point, and commend this song book as worthy of being used in our churches in connection with our Standard Hymn Book. While it is not all that I would have it be, yet it comes nearer my ideal than any other book of its class within my knowledge. We are supplying our people with it, and thus supplanting others of less merit. The more it is used the better it is appreciated; at least, that is our experience and observation in North Mississippi.

G. W. BACHMAN.

Kosciusko, Miss.

CENTENARY COLLEGE.

The second term of our present session begins about February 1, and will close about the middle of June. A boy who wants a good start for next session would do well to start in with the beginning of the second term. Expenses for the half session or second term need not exceed eight dollars for board, washing, and tuition. Will our pastors please call the attention of parents to this notice? C. W. CARTER, President.

Jackson La.

Here is a whole sermon in a sentence by Hannah More: "He who can not find time to consult his Bible will one day find that he has time to be sick; he who has no time to pray must find time to die; he who can find no time to reflect is most likely to find time to sin; he who can not find time for repentance will find an eternity in which repentance will be of no avail; he who can not find time to work for others may find an eternity in which to suffer for himself."

A COUGH SHOULD NOT BE NEGLECTED. "BROWN'S BRONCHIAL TROCHES" are a simply remedy and give immediate relief. Avoid imitations.

RALLY! RALLY!

DEAR CO-WORKER: Will you not make one earnest effort during the month of January to increase the subscription to "Our Homes"? How much more would our dear sainted Miss Helm appreciate a monument of this kind than one out of marble or stone. Let us show our appreciation of our dear sister and her successful establishing of the organ of our society by paying heed to her last request through its columns, that we increase its circulation to 10,000, thus bringing its presence into the homes of Methodism, and thereby forcing our people, by the light and information they shall receive, into the work of our Woman's Parsonage and Home Mission Society, that we may hasten on the good work so gloriously begun. May we follow her as she followed Christ, being ever ready that when "the bridegroom calleth we may go forth to meet him and enter into the joy of our Lord!" January memorial numbers are five cents a copy. Yours in the work,

MARY WERLEIN.

If you want one of these belts CUT OUT COUPON and send to us with your waist measure in inches. Don't delay. Order today if possible, otherwise you may forget it.

PATIENCE WITH THE LIVING.

Sweet friend, when thou and I are gone
Beyond earth's weary labor,
When small shall be our need of grace
From comrade or from neighbor;
Passed all the strife, the toil, the care,
And done with all the sighing—
What tender ruth shall we have gained,
Alas! by simply dying!

Then lips too chary of their praise
Will tell our merits over,
And eyes too swift our faults to see
Shall no defect discover.
Then hands that would not lift a stone
Where stones were thick to cumber
Our steep hill path, will scatter flowers

Sweet friend, perchance both thou and I,
Ere Love is past forgiving,
Should take the earnest lesson home—
Be patient with the living.
To-day's repressed rebuke may save
Our blinding tears to-morrow;
Then patience, e'en when keenest edge
May whet a nameless sorrow!

'Tis easy to be gentle when Death's silence shames our clamor,
And easy to discern the best
Through memory's mystic glamor;
But wise it were for thee and me,
Ere Love is past forgiving,
To take the tender lesson home—
Be patient with the living.

OBEY AT ONCE.

In a certain town of New England a pet dog lately met his death through disobedience. He was the property of a poor man, a veteran of the Civil War, who was extremely fond of the little animal. The dog, too, loved his master very much, and was accustomed to follow him from place to place. One day when the man was at a neighbor's house the dog waited for him outside, and, unfortunately, sat down to rest on the track of an electric road. His owner presently heard a car coming, and called, "Tim, Tim!" But Tim seemed to think that he would be safe for a moment longer. He sat still and was killed in an instant by the swiftly moving car. If that little dog had only obeyed at once he might be running about and enjoying himself still. More than that, his poor master might yet be having his companionship which now he greatly misses.

This is a sad story, but a sadder one was recently among the list of accidents in the daily papers.

A dear little boy four years old was living with his mother on the fifth floor of a flat house in New York. One afternoon, thinking that he was tired and needed to rest, she rocked him lovingly to sleep, laid him carefully upon his bed, and then went back to her household tasks, having reason enough to suppose that her child was safe. But after awhile there was a noise in the air-shaft, which is, as perhaps you know, an open space running from top to bottom of a flat-house, for the better circulation of air.

The little fellow was awakened by the sound, arose from his bed, climbed to the window opening into the shaft, and looked to see what was going on. His mother watchful of his safety, heard the child's movements and hurried to the room where she had left him.

He was nearly on the window-sill, and in greatest danger. His mother called, "Come back! come back!" but he gave no heed. She put out her hand to grasp him, but too late. Even as her arm was stretched out to save him, he fell—down, down, down, five stories to the ground. Wasn't it too bad that he didn't mind, and come back? The poor mother's arms are empty. She has no dear little boy to rock to sleep.

There is One more loving than father or mother can be who sees when the children are in danger of telling untruths, or of getting angry, or of being selfish or disobedient. He calls to them through his Word: "Come, ye, children, hearken unto me. I will teach you the law of the Lord." The only way to escape sin and to be happy in this life or in the next is by listening to that Voice and obeying that law. Dear children, it you will be safe, obey at once.—Mary J. Porter, in Christian Intelligencer.

WHAT TO READ.

Solomon said: "Of making many books there is no end." The power of the printing-press, either for good or for evil, can hardly be overestimated.

No one can hope ever to be able to read the one-thousandth part of all the books in existence, and as no one can afford to waste time and to poison the mind with stories of imaginary crime and other trash, it would be well to read such books and periodicals as have the reputation of teaching profitable lessons. Accounts of noble deeds, worthy acts, Christian lives, and only such fiction as really enriches the imagination, is a brief outline of what one can afford to read.

Good books are cheap, and it is the duty of everyone to own some. If you are able to own but few, be sure that they are select. We need not take up space here to suggest a list of books suitable for young people to read. The Sunday-school editor will take pleasure in supplying all who write for it a catalogue containing names and descriptions of a long list of books which have been carefully examined with a view to recommending them to the young. Some of these libraries cost less than a family of children would spend foolishly during a Christmas week. It is true they are called Sunday-school libraries, but every family would do well to have one or more of them in the home. Besides the libraries, there are hundreds of other books which can be had, one at a time, at prices marvelously low. With so many good books that children can understand recommended, there is little excuse for ignorance.

Every boy and every girl should own a Bible, and read it every day. We often hear of criminals on the scaffold declaring with the last breath that when they were young they read bad books, and advising boys to let such books alone. We have never heard of a criminal saying that reading the Bible when he was young brought him to such a bad end. One of the worst men we ever heard of said, just before he was executed, "Tell the boys to let bad books alone, and read the Bible."—Sunday-School Visitor.

FOR OUR GIRLS.

Among the qualities most to be desired in a young girl's character is a high sense of honor. I wish I could impress on every reader the need of being always above everything petty or small, so that one would not for a single moment ever be tempted to do a mean or underhand thing, to speak unkindly of a friend, or to repeat a conversation which was confidential.

It may happen to you, for instance, to be visiting in the home of a relative or friend, where there may be a little friction at the table, or where some anxiety arises about the course of a member of the family. No matter what you see or hear, in such circumstances, you are bound, if you are an honorable person, to be silent about it, neither making comments nor looking as if you could tell something if you chose, nor in any way alluding to what is unpleasant at any future time. A guest in a home can not be too careful to guard the good name of those under its roof, for it is an honor to be a guest in the first place, and honor is demanded in return.

Again, a nice sense of honor in matters connected with money is very important. Polly is treasurer of a society, and has the care of the funds. She must never for an instant, or in an emergency, lend these funds to other people, or borrow them for her own use. I knew a girl—Polly was her name, by the way—who was indneed, being treasurer of a certain guild, to lend her brother for one day the money she had in her care. The brother was older than Polly, and a very persuasive person. He said: "Why should you hesitate? I'll bring it back to you to-night, and it will oblige me very much if I can take that fifty dollars and pay a bill I owe before noon to-day." Foolish Polly permitted her scruples to be overruled. The money was not brought back, and but for her father's kindness in making it good, she would have been disgraced as a dishonest treasurer. She told me long afterwards that the lesson had been burned in on her mind never to take liberties with money which she held in trust.—Harper's Round Table.

PETER COOPER.

Peter Cooper was a poor boy, and had very poor health. He had but little chance to get an education. He went to school only one year in his whole life, and in that year he had to stay at home many days.

His father was a hatter, and at eight years of age young Peter spent his time in helping to earn a living "in pulling hair from the skins of rabbits, which his father killed, to make the hat pulp."

When he was about seventeen years of age he went to the great city of New York to see what he could do there. For some time he found nothing to do, but kept walking the streets in daytime trying to find employment. At length he met a carriage-maker, who took him as an apprentice for five years, giving him his board and two dollars a month.

We can see from this that he could have but few of the comforts or even necessaries of life. But in the midst of toil and privation he was heard to say: "If I ever get money enough, I will build a place where the poor girls and boys of this great city of New York may get an education free." He was prospered, and lived to accumulate enough to build an institute, which bears his name—Cooper Institute. Free schools of science, art, mathematics and practical engineering are open to youths of both sexes every evening; lectures are given, and a free reading room and library are open to the public at all hours. Who can estimate the great amount of good it is doing yearly for the poor, who, but for him, must live in ignorance?—Sunday-School Evangelist.

DO NOT DREAM.

Lives ofttimes go out in dreaming. The light expires while plans are immature. Energy is wasted in vision. Fancies of the brain consume too much time in taking on shape. Well-dreamt Edens are bewitching. Fragrance of unseen flowers is pleasant to our day thoughts. We sleep under the starlight of poetry. Our ears are filled with the sound of angel wings. We dream, dream, dream. We dream of large plans and conquering hours; of ambition's fires and hope's success. God wants activity. Action is everywhere. In air and sea and earth; in glowing star and fluttering leaf, everywhere God reveals motion. "Do!" is the one great word of heaven's vocabulary. The wound of the world needs the healer. The tear of the sorrowful needs the sympathizer. The brain of the weary needs the comforter. The breath of disaster at the same time summons the helper. Mighty forces are waiting everywhere for the active touch, the manly grasp of the one losing himself in dreams. The crown glitters for the doer.—Northwestern Advocate.

Kidney and Bladder Troubles Quickly Cured.

Men and women doctor their troubles so often without benefit, that they get discouraged and skeptical. In most such cases serious mistakes are made in doctoring and in not knowing what our trouble is or what makes us sick. The unmistakable evidences of kidney trouble are pain or dull ache in the back, too frequent desire to pass water, scanty supply, smarting irritation. As kidney disease advances the face looks sallow or pale, puffs or dark circles under the eyes, the feet swell and sometimes the heart acts badly. Should further evidence be needed to find out the cause of sickness, then set urine aside for twenty-four hours; if there is a sediment or settling, it is also convincing proof that our kidneys and bladder need doctoring. A fact often overlooked, is that women suffer as much from kidney and bladder trouble as men do.

Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root is the discovery of the eminent physician and scientist and is not recommended for everything, but will be found just what is needed in cases of kidney and bladder disorders or troubles due to weak kidneys, such as catarrh of the bladder, gravel, rheumatism and Bright's Disease, which is the worst form of kidney trouble. It corrects inability to hold urine and smarting in passing it, and promptly overcomes the unpleasant necessity of being compelled to get up many times during the night.

The mild and the extraordinary effect of this great remedy is soon realized. It stands the highest for its wonderful cures. Sold by druggists; price fifty cents and one dollar. So universally successful is Swamp-Root in quickly curing even the most distressing cases, that to prove its wonderful merit you may have a sample bottle and a book of valuable information, both sent absolutely free by mail, upon receipt of three two cent stamps to cover cost of postage on the bottle. Mention NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE and send your address to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghampton, N. Y. This generous offer appearing in this paper is a guarantee of genuineness.

BRAIN STIMULANT.

The best possible thing for a man to do when he feels too weak to carry anything through is to go to bed and sleep as long as he can. This is the only recuperation of brain power, the only actual recuperation of brain force, because during sleep the brain is in a state of rest, in a condition to receive and appropriate particles of nutriment from the blood, which take the place of those which have been consumed by previous labor, since the very act of thinking burns up solid particles, as every turn of the wheel or screw of the steamer is the result of consumption by fire of the fuel in the furnace. The supply of consumed brain substance can only be had from the nutritive particles in the blood, which were obtained from the food eaten previously; and the brain is so constituted that it can best receive and appropriate to itself those nutritive particles during the state of rest, of quiet, and stillness of sleep. Mere stimulants supply nothing in themselves; they goad the brain, force it to a greater consumption of its substance, until it is so exhausted that there is not power enough left to receive a supply.—Medical Journal.

NO HEALTH IN FAT.

Sir Henry Thompson, one of the most celebrated English surgeons, takes very advanced grounds on the subject of the eating habits of modern life. He says that from facts coming constantly before him, he is obliged to accept the conclusion that more mischief in the form of actual disease and of impaired vigor and shortened life accrues to civilized man from erroneous habits in eating than from the habitual use of alcoholic drinks, considerable as he freely acknowledges that evil to be. Indeed, he declares it to be his conviction that more than one-half of the diseases of the meridian and latter part of life among the middle and upper classes of society are due to easily avoidable errors in diet. He points with emphasis to the fallacy of the generally accepted idea that the growing stoutness of middle life is due to vigor, or an index of healthful conditions. The typical man of eighty or ninety years, still retaining a respectable amount of energy of body and mind, is lean and spare, and lives on slender rations.

MOSS—Mrs. Mary J. Moss (nee Mixon) was born in Dallas county, Ala., June 15, 1825; was married to Henry L. Moss, Jan. 12, 1843; moved to Mansfield, La., in 1854, and died there Nov. 29, 1897.

This is the brief record of a long life whose full record will not be revealed until the revelation is made in the undimmed light of eternal day. Few people have so completely filled life with a happy combination of secular and religious activity. Every household and family duty had its proper attention, and every religious duty was faithfully performed. Sister Moss, like every other true Christian, while she exhibited a symmetrical and well-rounded life, excelled in some particular lines of religious work. The instincts of her spiritual nature seemed to draw her specially toward the poor, and many of the indigent and distressed of earth will rise up in the last day to call her blessed. The saying of the Master, "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto the least of these," etc., was abundantly illustrated in her life. She was pre-eminent in her fitness for nursing the sick. Many whom she nursed in illness and by whom she watched to the last, will give her loving greeting on the other shore. The writer of this tribute records with grateful heart her unceasing kindness to him and his in seasons of severe illness during his four years' pastorate in Mansfield. She was always her pastor's friend, and loyally supported all the institutions of the church.

The last time she left her home was on a visit to her pastor and family. She left the parsonage, made one other call, and went home to die. She lingered long, but the grace that sustained amid the duties and trials of a busy life sustained also during the long period of suffering and waiting. Her pastor visited her often during her last illness, and the writer, in company with him, saw her a few times. The sustaining and comforting grace of God was always evident in her manifest spirit of submission to the divine will. The night before she died she had all the members of the family summoned to her room, and told them that while she had strength she wanted to talk to them for the last time. She exhorted them to fidelity in the service of God, that they might, after having lived pious and useful lives, be prepared to meet death without fear. Surely the rustling of holy wings might have been heard in that quiet home-sanctuary as the aged matriarch delivered her dying charge to her children and grandchildren. Now she sweetly sleeps in Jesus, and has left behind her upon the earth the aroma of a holy life. May "our last end" be like hers!

J. M. Brown.

POSEY—Sister Lucy Ann Posey was born March 11, 1835, and died at her home near New Prospect Church, Rankin county, Miss., Sept. 11, 1897. She joined the Methodist Church at Salem Church, Rankin county, in 1873, and was a faithful member of the same until her death. She leaves a husband and five children to mourn their loss, but not as those who have no hope, for she died a most triumphant death. Yes, she has passed through the pearly gates into the glory world beyond, to rejoice with the angels forever.

Sister Posey was a woman of sterling character, beloved by all who knew her. Her highest happiness was realized in submission to God's will. As a wife, she was to her husband a true helpmeet in all the struggles of life; as a mother, wise, patient, tender, and faithful, rearing her children in the fear of God. Her last words were, "Children, meet me in glory." It was the misfortune of her husband to be absent at the hour of her death.

"A precious one is gone,
A voice we loved is stilled;
A place is vacant in the home
Which can never be filled.
God, in his wisdom, has recalled
The boon his love has given;
And though the body slumbers here,
The soul is safe in heaven."

J. H. Fossman, P. C.

MANSFIELD—Whereas, It has pleased Almighty God, in his wise providence, to remove from our midst our dearly beloved sister and co-worker, Mrs. Sarah Ranfield; therefore, be it

Resolved, That in her death the Ladies' Aid Society of Elwards loses a most faithful member, strong supporter, an earnest Christian worker. We will miss her counsel and help in every work undertaken by the society. We bow in humble submission to the will of God, realizing that our loss is her eternal gain.

Resolved, That we extend our heartfelt sympathy to the bereaved ones, praying that God of all comfort may bless and comfort their hearts in this hour of great sorrow; and we invite the daughters of our sister to unite with the society, to take their mother's place and help carry on the work so near and dear to her heart.

Resolved, That these resolutions be spread on the Minutes of the society, and a copy sent to the family of the deceased.

Mrs. J. R. Chisum, for Com.

VINSON—Among the many prominent Christian women which Rankin county has given to the world, Sister (or, as better known in this country, Grandma) Vinson was one of the most useful.

Sister Elizabeth Melvina Vinson was born Feb. 27, 1812, and died at her son-in-law's, Coley Eckols, on the night of Jan. 5, 1898.

Yes, she has passed over the valley of the shadow of death. One by one the links that bind us to this hard world are broken. Grandma was a loving Christian woman, full of kindness and loving devotion to all her kindred and friends. To-day, if she could speak to her loved ones, she would say, "All is well; grieve not for me." She leaves four children to mourn their loss. We here extend our sympathy to all the sorrowing ones, and exhort that we all so live that we may meet the dear ones in heaven.

Dear Father in heaven, sustain and help those that are bereaved, and give them grace to bear it! is the prayer of their former pastor,

J. H. Fossman.

ADDISON—Died at the home of his father, in Cory, Miss., Jan. 2, 1898, of pneumonia, Wm. Y. Addison, son of Dr. W. J. and Mary F. Addison, aged twenty-three years and nine days.

Bro. Addison was a young man possessed of a noble disposition, honorable in all he did, loved and highly respected by all who knew him. While his last hours were characterized by intense physical suffering, he had peace of soul, and told his father, "I shall be satisfied if you meet me where I am going."

He had for many years been a faithful member of the Methodist Church, and by his untimely death the church loses a valuable member, the community a worthy citizen, and the family a devoted son and brother. He leaves a father, brother and sister, and a host of friends, to mourn their loss. May they meet him in the bright beyond!

WAITING TO BE ASKED.

Some one inquired of a stranger who had come into a new place to live why she had not cast in her lot among the people of God. Her answer was, "Nobody ever asked me."

Modest people do not like to go where they are not invited, and where they fear they may not be wanted. It is very well to say people are free to come if they will; but there are timid, hesitating souls, who fear to put themselves forward and press in where they long to be, and it is the business of Christians to give them earnest and hearty invitations. "The spirit and the Bride say, Come! and let him that heareth say, Come!" and so invite others to accept the gracious call.

The unbeliever, when he determined to have his house filled with guests, did not set the door open and allow them to come and go as they pleased, but he sent his messengers into the highways, the lanes and the streets, not only to invite, but to urge; not only to urge, but to "compel them to come in."

There is a sweet compulsion which is allowable and is often most welcome. There are many bashful people who need to be urged; who hesitate even; accepting a first invitation, but only need a little pressure to bring them in; and if we are to follow the plan of the heavenly Master, we must not only invite people to Christ, but we must entreat and urge them to come in, that the Lord's house may be filled with guests. He is calling "whosoever will," and is waiting to receive all who come; but it is for us to know how wide is the invitation which he extends, and how hearty the welcome that he gives to those that do come; to tell what we know, and invite the timid, the trembling and the doubting, and emphasize the Master's call, and bid them welcome to the marriage supper of the Lamb.

"Whosoever hearetn, shout, shout the sound,
Tell the joyful tidings all the world around,
Whosoever will, may come."

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

GETTING YOUNG MEN TO CHURCH.

The problem of the young man is one of the great problems of the times. There are various solutions. Some theorists will say that young men want sermons which are "up to the times," and which stimulate mental activity. Perhaps some do, but my judgment is that young men want the plain gospel, preached from the heart and backed up by a high grade of Christian living in the church. To catch young men, we must not lower our standard, but raise it. Peasant a Christianity which means something. Do not think that the gospel needs to be apologized for or concealed from immortal minds, to win their love. If faithful preaching does not win the young man, then faithful work will; or if that fail, faithful prayer, it must be remembered, is an essential ingredient in faithful preaching and work. Some young men will still resist the Spirit of God, but when they do, do not find fault with and reject the pure gospel for some device lodged to be more "fetching." The fault is with the young man, and not with the truth, or the manner of presenting it. In adapting truth, do not substitute error. It is often impossible to give men and women the strong meat of the Word, but when we use "milk" we should be sure that it is not chalk and water.—The Lookout.

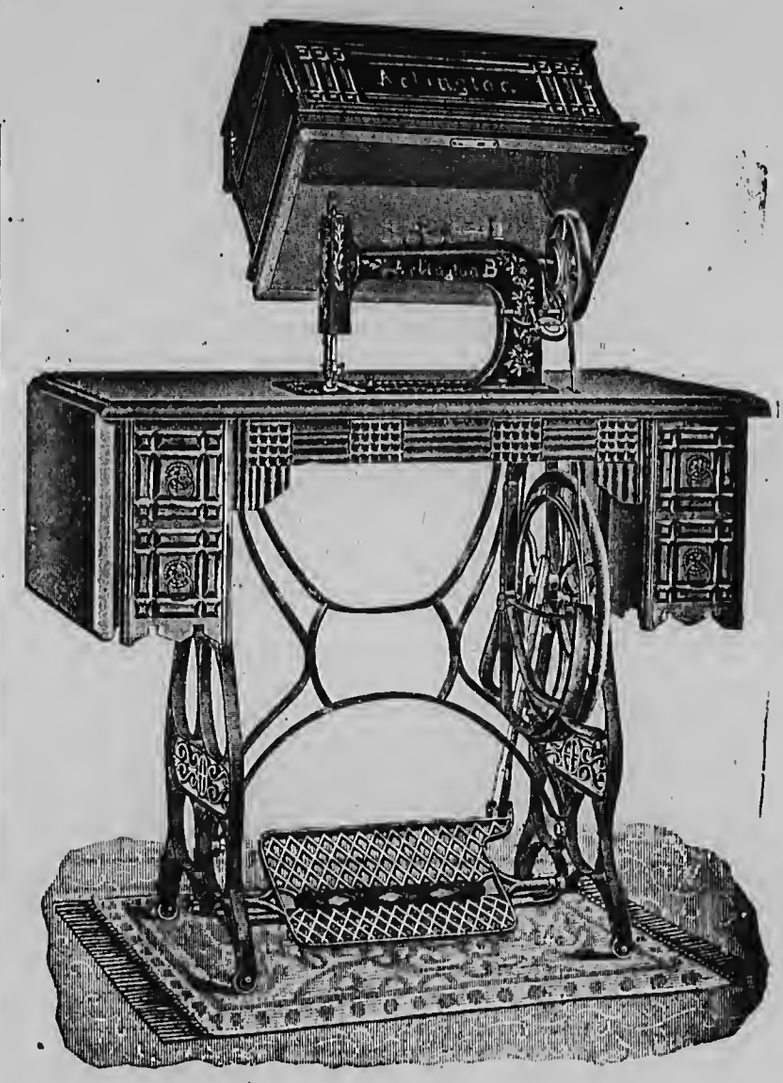
Our Machine Offer

New Improved High-Arm "Arlington B" Self-Threading Sewing Machine.

A recorded certificate of warranty for 10 years accompanies each machine. The "Arlington B" is complete in every detail, combining all modern and late improvements, such as automatic bobbin winder, self-threading shuttle, self-setting needle, upper spring tension, etc.



The "Arlington B" self-threading sewing machine has a large high arm, its mechanical appearance is perfect, its adjustment is absolute, positive take-up, convenient foot rest, with the best style furniture, either oak or walnut; in addition to which each machine is furnished with the best steel combination attachments free, as follows: One tucker, one foot ruffler, one set of plain hemmers (five different widths up to seven-eighths of an inch), one binder, one shirring plate and one under-braider, packed in a handsome velvet lined case. It is also furnished with one foot hemmer, one screw driver, one wrench, one oil can with oil, one gauge, one package of needles, six bobbins and one instruction book.

The Head is strong and substantial; has large space under the arm for handling bulky goods, is finely japanned and protected by a hard finish. Has so few bearings and friction points that it is easily oiled and kept clean.

Needle Bar is round, with adjustable bearing polished and fitted, insuring great wear, and can run a long time without oiling. It has a slack dip motion, relieving the strain upon the thread when the shuttle is passing through the loop. Using the adjustable take-up, controlling the threads perfectly on all grades of work.

Improved Automatic Bobbin Winder which is so positive and reliable in its action that an imperfectly wound bobbin is an impossibility. So simple that a child can easily operate it. This valuable attachment renders possible a perfect control of shuttle tension.

Self Threading—The "Arlington B" is self-threading, requiring no change from light to heavy work. Uses double thread, and makes the lock stitch.

The Needle is the same as used on the New Home machine, and is self-setting both as to height and position with reference to shuttle, with short blade and long shank, insuring great strength; finely polished.

Self-Threading Shuttle—A perfect steel cylinder shuttle with delicate and perfect tension, open at one end to allow the bobbin to be inserted without displacing any of the parts; runs loose in the shell, without spring centre or point bearings, thus insuring an even tension; can be threaded in the dark, and easily understood.

Loose Pulley for winding the bobbin without running the machine requires no change or adjustment, nor is it necessary to remove the work from the machine.

Parts Subject to Wear are made of the finest steel, case hardened, light and noiseless and are very durable.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

Every central labor body in California, except the Building Trades Council of San Francisco, has adopted ringing resolutions against the proposed annexation of Hawaii.

A joint committee from the "Magazine Club" and "Round Table" met in the State Library in Jackson, Miss., to take steps toward establishing a permanent library for the city of Jackson.

On Jan. 14, the Publishing House of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, paid the balance of the bonds remaining outstanding of an issue of $300,000 made in 1878. This payment of $9000 retires the bonded debt of the Publishing House.

The opposition of Senator Gear, of Iowa, and Senator Thurston, of Nebraska, to the Hawaiian annexation treaty has been attributed to the fear that annexation would interfere with the beet industry in this country. Secretary of Agriculture Wilson is likewise said to base his opposition to annexation on this ground, beet sugar being a favorite scheme with him. Nothing is said or thought about the effect of annexation on the cane sugar industry.

The latest official death list shows a total of forty-three lives lost in the tornado which swept through Fort Smith, Ark. Not less than seventy others are injured, a large number of whom are seriously hurt and several are expected to die.

It is announced that the British steamer "Indrani" has been chartered to load 2000 bales of cotton and a quantity of pig iron at Mobile, and afterwards to come here and fill out with 8000 to 10,000 bales of cotton. This cargo will be delivered at Yokohama and Hiogo, Japan.

The usual annual session of the Tuskegee Negro Conference will take place in Tuskegee, Ala., Wednesday, Feb. 23. The Workers' Conference, which is composed of officers and teachers in the various colored schools of the South, takes place Feb. 24 at Tuskegee. These conferences present an opportunity for the study of the condition of the negro that is afforded nowhere else.

Senator Lodge has called on the Secretary of Agriculture to inform the Senate all about the consumption of sugar in the United States and especially of the effect of the importation of Hawaiian sugar upon the beet sugar production in this country. This information is desired, on account of its bearing upon the objection raised by certain Western senators to annexation on the ground that it would injure the beet sugar industry.

A number of the more prominent colored men of New Orleans and Louisiana have prepared a memorial for presentation to the Constitutional Convention, which meets here next month, asking that body to give special consideration to the matter of education, to the end that all may be afforded a chance to learn to read and write, and thus fit themselves for citizenship. The memorial recites the present condition of education in the State. There are, it is shown, 1848 colored teachers in the public schools, compared with 4690 white teachers, and 895 schools for colored children, as compared with 1999 for the white children.

FOREIGN.

The police precautions have been redoubled in the vicinity of the United States legation and around the residence of the United States minister in Madrid, Spain.

The King of Italy has conferred the Order of St. Maurice and St. Lazarus on Dr. Felix Formento, of this city.

The consumption of wine in Great Britain is about half a gallon per head of the population, while in France it is about thirty gallons.

Austria and Germany have intimated their willingness to attend the proposed conference at Brussels for the abolition of the sugar bounties. France is also showing an inclination to join, so an early meeting is probable.

Twice during the past week Emperor William called at the Russian embassy and had long conversations with Count von Osten-Sacken, the Russian ambassador. It is learned on good authority that the conversations were solely on the far eastern questions.

The export of sugar to the United States from Germany has suffered enormously through the Dingley tariff act. In fact, it has almost stopped. During the last quarter of 1897 only $27,000,000 worth of sugar was shipped from Hamburg, the principal sugar port of Germany.

REV. CHRISTIAN KEENER.

BY REV. ALFRED E. CLAY.

We owe no more sacred duty to the living than we owe to the dead. The military hero borne on his catafalque amid a summer of flowers, his riderless steed following in the mournful procession, is worthy of both the eulogy and threnody his more fortunate comrades make over his grave. He who dies a true patriot at his post of duty is worthy of every flower woven into chaplet or wreath, and laid by tender hands upon his casket or his breast. To the hero and the patriot this country of ours has not been slow to do honor. Our public parks and squares, and the alcoves of colleges and galleries of art, in their ever-increasing number of the effigies of such men in marble and bronze, are at least a slight recognition of men whom the people have thus delighted to honor. But the heroism of bravest soldier and the patriotic self-immolation of most devoted citizen pale beside the qualities of life exhibited by the humblest Methodist preacher, who, for a score of years, makes a full proof of his ministry on a circuit in Louisiana. Our people have been slow to record even slight meed of praises to our worthiest men dying in the trenches on the itinerant field.

I fear that even we ministers fail to catch the true spirit of appreciation of our brothers, even when they are dead. "And their works do follow them," Paul said, and we often lay them down in the sepulchre with the bones of the author. Repugnant as is fulsome flattery beside the bier of the dead, true worth should receive its just endorsement.

Love lifts the physical shadow that obscured the life of our brother, Christian Keener, for nearly a dozen years, and sees him as he was. Other hands may form an obitnary of the illustrious man, and give the names of the works and the dates of his occupancy; I only wish to speak of this man of God as I knew him then. From the hour when we first met until his death we loved each other. His was a commanding presence; erect, and about six feet in height he stood. His stout hand-grasp revealed his warmth of heart. His steel-blue eyes beamed with affectionate and benevolent regard upon his friends. He attracted man to him. He held his friends. He had an immeasurable influence over men considered depraved and incorrigible. Many a man abandoned by ministers and friends, and given over to reprobacy of heart, has come under the magic of his Christly influence, and to day lives a power and influence for good on earth, or is now companioning with the uplifter in the streets of the celestial city.

Little children loved him, and his child friendship was demonstrated, not by the evanescent and sickly words uttered in Sunday-school, but by an every-day regard for and interest in their books and toys as well as in their catechisms.

He was the most thoughtless man of self I ever knew. In the last years of his active ministry he impressed me as a man absolutely swallowed up in the mission of his life. I have known him to fast for many a day, and make long and tedious pilgrimages, having no thought of self. I believe that these journeys when hungry, and the incessant activity of the man, the ceaseless plunging of his valorous heart to do impossible things for God, brought on the physical collapse. I have seen him bespattered to the hat with mud, having ridden thirty or forty miles after breakfast, alight at our humble parsonage after night-fall, and almost physically restrain the housewife from setting for him the humblest fare.

He was a Board of Church Extension in himself. Able, practical, aggressive Methodist Churches sprang up wherever he went. He could plan the church, make out the bill of lumber, and, if need be, build the church and then raise most of the money to pay for it. The grunters and groaners and the religious croaker found no companionableness in him. He was most cheerfully optimistic. His influence soon pervaded the officials, and what seemed impossible soon was done. Hundreds are worshiping every Sabbath in houses of his erection, and in most of these places a church-house the officials thought an impossibility. But when they saw their leader at the carpenter's bench, or working with saw and hammer on the building that was to be, they saw and believed.

He was a biblical scholar of no mean attainments. What time he found from the most active ministry for study I do not know. I only know that he displayed rare insight and wonderful exegetical power in the published Sunday school lessons. His sermons were also marked by a clear conception of the truth. He was never sensational, but at times he rose to the very highest reaches of sacred oratory. Many souls were converted under his ministry. He was as great an altar worker as I have known among ministers. He was no mean singer, though I have seen him singing when I knew that he realized that his voice was not nearly interpreting the song that was singing in his heart. I once saw a saloon keeper holding fast to the back of the bench to keep from going up to the altar. Christian saw the man and whispered in my ear, "We must get that man." He started the song,

"Sinner, say will you go
To highlands of heaven?"

Before two verses of the song had reached the throne the man had yielded, ran to the altar, was converted, and beating time to the music with his redeemed fist.

As a pastor, he was one whose visits were acceptable to both rich and poor. He carried the spirit of a true and comely Christian gentleman wherever he went. He neglected no poor washer-woman. Every child in a neighborhood loved him. In his pastoral work he was always about his Master's business. Wherever he went the education of the children, the literature of the household, the spiritual and temporal welfare of the families, were always the dominating subjects of conversation.

In those days I prophesied of him great future distinction. He had in him, in an eminent degree, all the qualities that are needed to form a chief shepherd and leader of the hosts of God; but in the very zenith of his promise and usefulness for this life God ordered it otherwise. During all the years of his physical disability, until near the very end, his chief delight was in humbly worshiping his God.

God gave our brother a most loving, loyal and helpful wife in his early ministry, who survives him. Through all these years of suspense from work, and waiting for the directions of the Master, how tenderly and lovingly he was cared for by that good wife! The procession of the living joins that of the dead at the other side of this earthly ferry, and Christian stepped into the flood, and was neither abashed nor alone. On the other side—oh, glorious thought—what a change! And even as the mist, touched by the warm fingers of the sun, moves from the valley and vanishes, so soon shall the mists and mysteries of this life, touched by the bright rays of the Sun of Righteousness, be lifted, and we shall know even as we are known.

May the consolation of the gospel of peace, as a benediction, fall upon the hearts and minds of his loved ones in this hour!

"Forbearance has ceased to be a virtue," you say. What if God should so conclude concerning you?

LORD TENNYSON'S POETRY.

BY MISS SALLIE WHITE.

Considering the multitude of books written, it becomes more difficult every year to obtain a really abiding and sure foothold in the temple of literary fame. It can not be doubted that very many books and fragments, which are really worthy of preservation, are nevertheless destined to perish. As generations pass, and books and authors become more numerous, the sifting process will go on without pity and remorse, and the proportion of books set aside to live through the ages will grow continually less and less. Whether, in view of the nature of things at present, and as they will continue to be, Tennyson will still be read two or three generations, much more two or three centuries hence, is not easy to prophesy certainly. During his many years of thought and labor he has reared a splendid edifice of his great literary renown, which is broad and apparently firmly founded and strong. Judging from one of the lyrics of "In Memoriam," Tennyson himself was not very sanguine upon the subject, if, indeed, he cared much about it:

"What hope is here for modern rhyme
To him who turns a musing eye
On songs, and deeds, and lives that lie
Foreshorten'd in the tract of time!

"But what of that? My darken'd ways
Shall ring with music all the same;
To breathe my loss is more than fame,
To utter love more sweet than praise."

There are, of course, some qualities in writing that may contribute to its permanence; qualities belonging to what is permanent in our nature and life, to what is not liable to change with the mere passing of generations. Many books are written for their own particular time. They may be valuable and precious contributions to the literature of the day, but they soon pass out of sight and are forgotten. Their places are supplied by books such as are being continually written. To writers who deal worthily with great subjects of abiding human interest lasting favor is accorded. For instance, Milton, whose works treat of thoughts and facts that lie at the foundation of all religion and life; Shakespeare, who deals with the great passions of humanity, with the pathos and the tragedy, and the comedy, too, that belong to life as such, and are, in reality, inseparable from it; or even, like the great dramatist again, with some of the nobler chapters of history, presenting the heroic actors in forms in which they seem to live again, and showing the secret workings of their mighty hearts with the agonies and ecstasies of their experiences. Or suppose topics of real and living interest to be treated in a style so simple and sweet as to meet the tastes of nearly all men alike, to win the ear and catch the heart of the gentle and simple, the learned and unlearned, of people that live in palaces and people that live in cottages, like the writings of Bunyan and Defoe.

We would then say, there is much in Lord Tennyson's works that is likely to ensure them preservation, and for a long time to come. It will be long before we have such a rendering of the beautiful legends of Arthur and the Round Table as will supersede "The Idyls of the King." The laureate has presented the legends in a modern dress, translated into the speech of our time; the poetry is beautiful and fascinating. These legendary gems of price are exquisitely set in the finest gold of true poetry. We hold that this series of poems—by no means his best either—to have a fair chance of preservation. Many of Tennyson's poems deal with just those passions of the heart and just those experiences of life, the treatment of which, provided it be marked by individuality and power, never wearies and never grows old, while in his hands they are dealt with constantly with as much force as truth and simplicity and tenderness. Such a poem as "In Memoriam" deals, moreover, with thoughts and experiences, with doubts and questionings, that are the same with noble minds and hearts in every age. It has been predicted that "In Memoriam" would certainly cease to be read whenever an age should come that should know its own mind about religion and religious problems. But we fear that age, in this sense, is far distant yet. It is characteristic of religious problems that they spring up in every man's breast the very same doubts and perplexities. The doubts may have been solved and set at rest for others a hundred times over, but they none the less need to be solved and set at rest for him. Those others may have won the victory of hope and faith, but their experience is not at his command. He must fight his own fight of faith, and win his own victory. Tennyson, in these poems born of sorrow and anguish, gives expression to these apprehensions and distresses and mortal conflicts of the soul, and shows how he, at least, has fought his way to calm and peace, to more than resignation, to actual triumph and victory. With minds of the deeper and more thoughtful cast, apt to be exercised by problems and questionings such as these, and capable at the same time of appreciating the beauty of poetical expression and form, it is likely to be long indeed before "In Memoriam" ceases to charm.

Another question is closely connected with the one we have just discussed: What rank does Tennyson hold as a poet? All will admit that he is a true poet; that he has a sweet and rare poetical gift; that he thinks in poetry, and that it is so far a native language to him, and that he speaks this language with true eloquence and force, his thoughts often assuming forms of surpassing beauty and pathos and power. The following is his own expression:

"I do but sing because I must,
And pipe, but as the linnets sing:
And one is glad; her note is gay,
For now her little ones have ranged;
And one is sad; her note is changed,
Because her brood is stol'n away."

In another place he says his muse is

"But an earthly muse,
And owning but a little art,
To lull with song an aching heart,
And render human love his dues;

"But brooding on the dear one dead,
And all he said of things divine
(And dear to me as sacred wine,
To dying lips is all he said).

"I murmur'd, as I came along,
Of comfort clasp'd in truth reveal'd;
And loiter'd in the Master's field,
And darken'd sanctities with song."

And yet again:

"But, for the unquiet heart and brain,
A use in measured language lies;
The sad mechanic exercise,
Like dull narcotics, numbing pain."

Here everything indicates naturalness, sincerity, truth; the poetical expression springing, as it were of necessity, from the true poet's feeling.

Where, it has been asked, is Tennyson's "Lear," his "Hamlet," his "Paradise Lost," his "Faerie Queen," his "Cain" even, his "Manfred," or his "Marmion"? To this it must be answered, there are acknowledged poets of high rank concerning whom the same questions might be asked equally in vain. But it does not follow that because a poet has wrought no such transcendant creations as some of these, he may not be entitled to the crown of greatness in his own chosen line. His creations may be beautiful, and pure, and true to nature, and still there may be nothing of greatness or, say, of sublimity about them. Poetry is not one thing merely, of one particular and sharply defined sort. The varieties of true poetry are all but infinite. Tennyson is not great in the sense in which Shakespeare is great; but, then, who is? What other English writer, in the same line, deserves to be mentioned in the same breath with Shakespeare? Milton takes a far narrower range, but then he soars to heights that even Shakespeare never reached. Spenser's great allegory stands unrivalled and alone. Byron, probably, of modern poets, comes nearer than any to both the range of Shakespeare and the sublimity of Milton; but he is removed by a whole heaven from the sweet purity of the author of the "Faerie Queen." Scott is great among the greatest of fiction writers, and, within limits, is unquestionably a true poet as well. His verse is wholesome and fresh as the air of the mountains he loved. But it is altogether objective, and does not admit a moment's comparison with the poetry of Tennyson. Scott's verse is full of movement, action; Tennyson's is subjective, pensive, looking inward. The two move in totally different planes.

GEORGIA LETTER.

BY REV. GEO. G. SMITH.

I get most of our papers, and, as I am a gentleman of elegant leisure (a little too elegant for my weal), at certain times in the year I read them all. As I do not pay for them, I feel under some obligation to write for each of them now and then. The weekly religious press gives one an opportunity to reach a very large congregation, and when he feels it a duty to try to do something to push on the great work, he certainly ought to be glad to take advantage of the opportunity it gives. Our papers are not able to pay contributors, and if I wrote for pay, I should come very unfrequently before the people. The Sunday School Department does pay for the work done, and so does the Review. One can study up a subject for a month, and write an article on it for the Review, and possibly get it admitted, and possibly get $10 or $15 for it, but it is a rare thing for an ordinary man to get a hearing in its pages. Dr. Tigert once said he was short on subscribers and long on contributors. I do not think we have a single paper but the Nashville that pays for its contributions, but is that a reason why one should not write and do his best? Are we not getting too commercial in our ways, anyhow? If a young lady plays the organ, or a fine male tenor sings in the choir in our large cities, she and he must be paid for it. In some places the Sunday-school superintendent is paid, and from pastor to sexton no one does anything without expecting backsheesh, unless he has an axe to grind. I am surely the last man to speak harshly of those who expect remuneration for their labor, and men who write books or articles as fairly earn what they get as any other bread-winner; but I am speaking now not of working for pay, but of working alone for it. All men who know the NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE know that nothing but the most careful and economical management can keep it on its legs, and they know it would pay if it could, and while it commands a list of contributors equal to most, its list is filled by its friends. I have read no letters with greater interest than those sprightly letters of Miss Kearney's which it has published, despite her views on woman suffrage, which are a little too advanced for me. If she will guarantee that only good women shall vote, I may go with her in order to keep bad men from ruling; but when hell vomited its worst elements into the Atlanta streets to repeal the prohibition law, black wenches, with red badges pinned on their dresses, dragged by the arms their drunken paramours to the polls, and made them vote for whisky. I suppose in Utah those refined ladies who were so anxious for maternity that they were willing to be the third choice of the pious Mormons would, if they could, bring back the old regime, and they are not likely, as jury women, to find men guilty of polygamy.

My old friend, "Gilderoy," I see is still hammering away on questions that have engaged his thought ever since he read Bledsoe's "Theodicy." His horror of the old Calvinism in which he was brought up, and his anxiety to defend Arminianism, keeps him always on the alert, and woe be to the evangelist or second blessingist who comes to work in his neighborhood. Everybody reads his letters and everybody recognizes the good sense that (when he don't philosophize) marks what he says. Theodicies from Plato to Bledsoe have been dangerous things to meddle with, and we are mighty apt to run upon rocks when we begin to rationalize too much. The old hardshell said once: "The apostle says, Without controversy great is the mystery of godliness; but, my brethren, I am a-gwine to show you, with a little controversy, that 'haint no mystery about it." The rationalism of intelligence always reaches heterodoxy, and rationalism of all kinds tends in the same direction. We must confine ourselves to the domain of facts and the letter of the word, and let secret things still belong unto God. No one can logically take a perfect God and make an imperfect man. No man can logically find any true conversion which does not perfect a character. I once said to Dr. Boland, "Boland, do you mean, when you say that every converted man is perfect, what Mr. Wesley means by perfection?"

He said, "No, I mean what the Bible calls perfection."

"Oh, well," said I, "that shifts the question entirely. Mr. Wesley says, and all churches say, 'Without holiness no man can see the Lord,' and he meant by holiness what he calls Christian perfection, and you say as he does, 'Without holiness no man can see the Lord,' and you mean by holiness something entirely different. Now," said I, "if you had said you meant by holiness entire sanctification or Christian perfection, I should have asked you whether no man was a Christian unless he reached that state. If you had said 'No,' I then would have asked you how many people had you ever seen who had reached it, and I should have said I had never seen one. Christians, good Christians, I had seen, and thousands of them, but perfect men according to the standard of the plain account I had never seen."

If St. Augustine had ever dreamed to what conclusions his premises would have led his after followers, he would have hesitated long before he expressed himself so strongly on free grace, human depravity, and baptismal regeneration. I do not think we can make a logical world, for facts are continually crossing and confounding our logic, and especially when that logic has a dash of poetry in it is it untrustworthy. We have let some words so frighten us as to make us shut our eyes to facts, or caused us to bury, like the ostrich, our head in the sand to shut out unpleasant sounds. We are so anxious to avoid the charge of being pessimists, so anxious to make our people feel comfortable, that we are in danger of blindly ignoring perils that are all about us. On the other hand, we may be so impressed with the perils that we about conclude the ship is lost and make no effort to right it. Things are in a deplorable condition. Murder, robbery, drunkenness, adultery, fraud, are fearfully common; but, considering the population of the land, there is less of all these among white people than there ever has been since I can remember. There are more good young Anglo-Saxons now than I ever knew, and yet how few are they in comparison to the whole. But it is folly to sit idly down and bemoan conditions. We have got to meet them. The tidal wave of rationalism that swept Germany and France and Holland, and afterward England and Scotland, will sweep through Methodism. It can not be turned back; it is here now. While we are thanking God we are not as others are, nor as this publican (Calvinist), men are creeping into our high places, North and South, who are as very heretics as ever Wm. Ellery Channing was, and if we try to uncover them, we meet the cry, "Heresy hunter and persecutor, censorious pessimist."

Well, some of us old fogies will soon be gone, and the gospel according to Emerson, Ian Maclaren, and Tolstoi, will have its trial, or I am mistaken, and then will come the wretched failure, and later the awakening, and the early years of the new century will see a revival such as the world never saw before. Many theological dogmas will sink out of sight, and appear no more, and a theology which will hold to the fundamental truths of Christianity alone will be the theology of the world.

The Westminster Assembly was the ablest religious council the world ever saw, and its Confession of Faith one of the grandest products of reverent Christian intellect, but it has had its day. The Thirty-nine Articles which went before were wonderful in their truthful utterances, but they, too, are of old time. When John Wesley gave us, a hundred years ago, the Twenty-three Articles of our faith, he made a compilation and doctrines equalled by nothing since the Apostles' Creed. This, I think, will be the theology of the twentieth century. But enough for the now.

CONTENTMENT.

My Lord, how full of sweet content
I pass my years of banishment!
Where'er I dwell, I dwell with thee,
In heaven, in earth, or on the sea.
To me remains nor place nor time;
My country is in every clime;
I can be calm and free from care
On any shore, since God is there.

While place we seek, or place we shun,
The soul finds happiness in none;
But with a God to guide our way,
'Tis equal joy to go or stay.
Could I be cast where thou art not,
That were indeed a dreadful lot;
But regions none remote I call,
Secure of finding God in all.

JACOB'S VICTORY AT PENIEL.

It is evident from the words of God (Gen. xxv, 23) that he intended Jacob to have the birthright. Jacob's sin was in practicing deceit and lying, to secure the blessing from his father, instead of letting God work out his own plans. Man is never justified in doing evil, even to accomplish good ends. Jacob fled from his home to go to Padonaram on account of Esau's hatred and threat to kill him (Gen. xxvii, 41). He went, however, with his father's blessings—"And God Almighty bless thee, and make thee fruitful, and multiply thee, that thou mayest be a multitude of people; and give thee the blessing of Abraham to thee and to thy seed with thee; that thou mayest inherit the land wherein thou art a stranger which God gave to Abraham."

There is no mention of his repentance to his father or to God, but it may be inferred, as the words above quoted show his father's approval, and the vision of the ladder and angels and God's words following show that God was with him. (See chapter xxviii, 11, 12) That God continued to bless him. (See Gen. xxxi, 3, 13, 42, and chapter xxxii, 1, 2.)

On his return Jacob sent messengers to Esau to the land of Seir. The object was, "that I may find grace in thy sight." The messengers returned and reported that: "We came to thy brother Esau, and also he cometh to meet thee, and four hundred men with him. Then was Jacob greatly afraid and distressed." (Gen. xxxii, 6, 7) In Jacob's earnest prayer to God he said, "Deliver me, I pray thee, from the hand of my brother, from the hand of Esau: for I fear him, lest he come and smite me, and the mother with the children." (Chapter xxxii, 11.) Jacob sent a royal present to Esau, saying, "I will appease him with the present that goeth before, and afterwards I will see his face; peradventure he will accept of me." (Chapter xxxii, 20) Jacob felt that he was unable to meet Esau with merely human power, and his last and great hope was to pray God to control his brother's wrath, and give him a forgiving heart, and hence the victory at Peniel. "For I have seen God face to face, and my life is preserved." (Chapter xxxii, 30.) When the happy meeting took place Jacob said to his brother, "I have seen thy face, as though I had seen the face of God, and thou wast pleased with me." (Chapter xxxiii, 10.)

REPLY TO BRO. VAN.

MR. EDITOR: Permit me to say a few words in reply to the Rev. Van's last effusion in regard to Paul's thorn in the flesh.

I have read his piece twice, and read it carefully, and I can see nothing, absolutely nothing in it, except a lot of assertions such as that Paul had his eyes banged up, his nose broke, his head covered with sticking-plasters obtained from the Travelers Ins. Co., his legs knocked out of plumb, so that he wabbled when he walked, and was in such a condition generally that he could not play the dude in the pulpit, cut a swell in "sassiety," and be looked upon as a beauty by the addle-pated lunatics of his day! Nice estimate of the character of the most learned, the most faithful, the most intelligent and the most like his Divine Master of all the apostles, not excepting the gentle John, who leaned upon the Master's breast at the "Last Supper"!

Where did this astute theologian and historian find out that Paul was traveling round on his circuit all bunged up like a prize fighter? Where did he learn that Paul went from Lystra up into the third heaven, and where is the connection between the events at Lystra and the numerous passages quoted? Who informed our remarkable friend that Paul's teeth were in bad order, or that his parishioners had knocked some of them down his throat? Where did he get the information that the passage in Galilee—"Ye see how large a letter," etc.—means large LETTERS, used on account of defective vision? What right has he to assume that the apostle to the Gentiles was as big a fool as the ones he refers to in this paragraph: "How many pulpit orators, of sensitive, high strung natures, would fail to ask God to relieve them from such drawbacks (as the destruction, in a measure, of their personal beauty)—as they would consider them—in the prosecution of their work?"

Now, if Paul ever gave such trifles as his personal beauty a thought, while in the discharge of his duty, as an ambassador of Christ to a lost and ruined world, then I shall no longer respect either his ministry or his character as a sensible man. He never gave such matters a thought, and the only reason our Van has to think so, is found in the fact that he judges the apostle by some of our modern dudish preachers, who have more style than brains and more cheek than piety. No man has a right to measure Paul by such small potatoes as are these, and I hope Bro. Van will not repeat the offense. Forgive me for trespassing on your kindness and space to say something in reply to nothing. This sort of thing makes me tired!

Yours truly, REX.

THE PARABLES OF JESUS.

BY W. S. HARRISON.

With the Sermon on the Mount they occupy the highest plane of religious thought. Like the sermon, they explain the nature of the kingdom of God. The sermon is a plain statement of the principles of the kingdom; the parables afford illustrations of those principles. In their beautiful imagery the parables hold the very essence of the gospel. They are, in the main, probable narratives conveying spiritual truth. Each explains and illustrates some special phase of that ever present reality in the mind of Jesus—"the kingdom of heaven." The parable "is an earthly story with a heavenly meaning." The simile, the proverb, the parable, the fable and the allegory are kindred forms of figurative language. Comparison is their main feature, and constitutes their value. Comparison is the most natural, the easiest method of conveying and receiving instruction. The mind loves to dwell on the similitudes of parallel lines of thought; consequently these forms are as old as human speech, and are imbedded in all literatures. But the parable has been made for ever sacred by the teaching of Jesus. It is the method selected by divine wisdom for holding before the minds of men in all nations the most precious truths of the gospel. The parables are drawn from the common things of every-day life. The simple manners and methods of oriental life become the vehicles of grandest thoughts. The sower sowing his seeds, the mustard seed growing to a mature plant, seeds growing silently and mysteriously while men slept or observed, the woman raising her bread with leaven, the man receiving his guest at midnight and seeking to borrow loaves to feed him, the fishermen casting their net into the sea, the wealthy man giving a marriage feast, the laborers toiling in the vineyard, the son going astray, the sheep wandering from the fold—all become emblems and illustrations of the different phases of the kingdom of God. Never were sublimer truths clothed in homelier garb. It was God-like to pass the water of life to thirsty lips in vessels so familiar and homelike.

In all this we are impressed with the simplicity, the naturalness, the spontaneity of the great Teacher. The scenes of the passing moment, the incident just at hand, the scenery lying before the eyes—these become the parables of Jesus. Thought leaped from the fertile brain and wreathed a similitude of truth around the homely occupation, and the picture became the heritage of the ages. Thus, in the parables of Jesus, we at once learn the whole structure of Syrian life, and catch glimpses of that life which is the consummation of earth's best hopes.

Thus the gospel, like the Master himself, comes to us in humble garb. It is all the more precious because it comes on the common level of the largest bulk of mankind. It is befitting, since God has so arranged the world that the great majority of men must be poor; that the gospel should be clothed in the imagery belonging especially to the lowly, the toilers of the world. Thus the gospel dignifies the common man and his common pursuits. The farmers, the fishermen, the shepherds, the vine-dressers, the prodigal and the sinful received especially the sympathetic regard of the Man of sorrows. Their daily toils have been forever enshrined as the imagery of that system of truth which is to-day the motive power of the world's truest advancement.

FAITH.

In Deuteronomy the Lord says: "I will hide my face from them, I will see what their end shall be: for they are a very froward generation, children in whom is no faith." (Deut. xxxii, 20.) It seems evident that a lack of faith was the moving cause, as it relates to this people, from which God acted. Faith plays a conspicuous part in man's salvation, an elevating part in his redemption—in fact, it is a fundamental leverage by which the mind is exalted to receive both pardon and purity. "But without faith it is impossible to please him: for he that cometh to God must believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him." (Heb. xi, 6.) Without faith, then, it is impossible to please God. But faith, in and of itself, produces fruits: fruits, both of morality and of spirituality; of morality as the consequent results of exalted aspirations and ennobled ideals; of spirituality as a result of the enlivening and quickening of one's ambitions, spiritual perceptions, and desires. The preaching of a gospel of faith purifies the most foul mental and moral atmosphere. Many a person, by the power of a living faith, has lifted one's self out of self into a higher and nobler realm of living; from out the lowlands of disappointment, folly, and sin, into the marvelous light, where the will asserts itself once more, and where new resolves are made and kept. "Faith in Jesus has been the inspirer of the noblest purposes and the grandest achievements. It is the sweetener and sanctifier of home life. It gladdens, purifies, and blesses social relations. It imparts to life its beauty, power, and glory. It ennobles and dignifies human intercourse and energy." But who can exalt one's self in and of one's self? Such exaltation comes from man, and is of man only; but he that betters his condition by the power of faith has hold of an infinite source of power that can not but exalt. Even so a wilful transgression is sin, and sin, unpardoned, soon brings a realizing sense of guilt, and a sense of guilt brings condemnation; whence the preaching of a gospel of faith purifies, in that it demands, on the part of every recipient, a renunciation and forsaking of every vile idol, and in that it is the instrumental cause of replacing, in the stead of such idols, a god patterned from more exalted ideas and purer thoughts. In other words, the forsaking of immoral sins, the purifying of society and the saving of the bodies, minds and the souls of men, is bound to flow from, or to follow in, the wake of the faithful preaching of a living faith in the atoning merits of a risen Lord. What more sad spectacles are recorded by history than the misspent lives and lamentable deaths (a death of despair) of the votaries of the world who have lived and died without faith? "So belief cometh of hearing, and hearing by the word of Christ." (R. V.—Rom. x, 17.) Faith is the assent of the mind to the truth of God's revealed will. "Therefore we conclude that a man is justified by faith without the deeds of the law." (Rom. iii, 28) Is there any more practical results seen to-day from preaching than from the preaching of a new and living faith—a faith that uplifts and exalts? Can we doubt the need of faithfully preaching the doctrine of faith as an essential factor in Christian life? By the preaching of faith we mean especially that preaching where faith is exalted in any of its offices. What has the preaching of faith done for Scotland, Wales, and Switzerland under the Calvinists? What a reformation has the preaching of faith wrought in Germany under the ministry of Martin Luther!—and what is the preaching of faith doing for this "federal republic" of ours? See the vitalizing and quickening influences following in the wake of Holy Ghost and fire baptized ministers and evangelists. See this! "We must discountenance the whole system of salvation as preached by traveling evangelists. In this system no account is taken of heredity or the fact that nature never forgives."—Rev. Thomas Van Ness, Unitarian, of Boston.

Not long since I sat in the audience of a "Methodist" congregation and heard a sermon to this intent, viz.: "That some of our people could not be as holy as others; that the habits of life, the moral training, and the intellectual accomplishments (or rather non-accomplishments) of many were of such a nature as to prevent their enjoying the highest state of grace."

Verily, many and strange doctrines are being preached in our midst. In the early ages, so we have read, that men shut themselves up in monasteries, in order that they might cut themselves off from the world and its contaminating influences, and that, thereby, they might seek and obtain purity of heart and holiness of life. "I pray not that thou shouldest take them out of the world, but that thou shouldest keep them from the evil." (John xvii, 15) "What objections have we to a system of ethics, or a nicely constructed moral code saving; provided, at least, that it is judiciously imposed upon, and properly instructed to its subjects?" That man can be saved by a system of ethics may be received (in a limited sense) only in so far as one's outward life is concerned; but that one can, or ever was thus saved, in a spiritual sense, we deny; it being repugnant to Scripture, and contrary to the experience of man in all ages.

That there are certain moral and social atmospheres that prove more productive of Christian virtues, and are even accessories to the upbuilding of Christian character, we admit; but that any moral code, any social atmosphere, or any system of practical or intellectual culture is essential to the very highest state of grace in the divine life, we can not believe. The time to protest has come. Shall we make God dependent upon us and our "man-made machinery" in order that he may save? "Is God's arm shortened, that he can not save?" Nay, verily, salvation comes through faith, and not by works.

IN MEMORIAM.

The day was cheerless; heavy clouds obscured the sky. It was as though nature had buried the sun, and, in grief too deep for tears, bemoaned her desolation. The wind, in ceaseless monotone, sighed through the branches of the lofty pines, whose immortal greenness alone suggested the hope of resurrection from the dead. All things else seemed to say, "Death is an eternal sleep." Through the ice-laden air we wended our way to commit the sleeping dust to its mother earth, for we had seen an "end of all perfection." Death, the king of terrors, as though envious of our treasure, had borne away, in spite of our tenderest care, our dearest and best; death, the kind releaser, had unbound the fettered spirit; death, the great revealer, had shown to us the self-sacrificing devotedness, the patient continuance in well-doing, the brave gentleness in persecution, and bade us follow the immortal life as we now followed the mortal body. Before us we could see the peaceful "God's acre" surrounded by the solemn sentinels of the forest, which seemed to stretch their arms in silent benediction over the hallowed spot, and we thought on the "trees of the Lord which are full of sap," and of "the cedars of Lebanon which he hath planted." The weird beauty of the scene was intensified by the pure white flowers and green shrubs which love—that the grave could not divorce—had planted there in mockery of the triumphs of the chiseler's art. Here, amid the symbols of God's strength and his tenderness, we left our loved one to rest until the day dawn, and we turned back to our lonely fireside, where we,

In cheerful sadness, the appointed time await
Our changeless change inside the Golden Gate.

LUCY FLOWERS.

Meadville, Miss.

MRS. J. C. CAVETT.

We, the Ladies' Aid Society of Central Methodist Church, of Meridian, Miss., are sorely grieved in the removal of Mrs. J. C. Cavett, one of our most valued and useful members. Having been a worker in our society for more than ten years, we have found her to be abundant in good works, faithful ever in performance of duty, never refusing to do anything in her power to further the interests of our society; always punctual, ever ready to share the responsibilities of our labors and endeavors, and efficient and zealous in filling the various offices of the society.

We gladly commend her to the good people of Jackson, where she has cast her lot, and pray she may be a blessing to them, and they a blessing to her.

WOMAN'S PARSONAGE AND HOME MISSION SOCIETY, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

DEAR SISTERS: As this is the last quarter of the fiscal year closing March 1, 1898, we must put forth our greatest zeal to bring up full reports. Mrs. Hargrove states that these reports stand for our Conference in the next, or twelfth annual report, ten thousand copies of which are to be scattered over the Conferences of our Church, South.

Dear sisters, let us determine to report an increase over last year, and with a united effort we can do it, and not have the mortification to know that we have flagged in our zeal in so great a cause. The reports before this only showed 17 auxiliaries reporting, when 28 should have come to the front; and out of 3 juveniles, only 1 reported.

It is made imperative upon me to entreat every corresponding secretary and treasurer to report by the first of March, whether you consider it worthy of report or not.

We do earnestly request, and believe it to be for the best of all, that every "Pastor's Aid Society" should also fall into line, and become connectional on the first of March, 1898, for it would have a fine influence, and stimulate us to do a greater work than ever, and we believe it would not detract from any home work needed, but infuse a zealous liberality into all our people.

It would infuse a determination into all our members to make up for neglected opportunities. Selfishness should not project its uncanny visage anywhere along the lines of Methodistic labors for the good of others, for no one "liveth to himself, and no one dieth to himself."

It is very important that every treasurer collect all back dues and make full report of all local work done during the year.

We will take this opportunity to urge the vice-presidents to organize the children and young people, and set them to work, and thus raise up reports for future labors, and to take the places of those who, from various causes, drop out of our ranks.

LUCINDA B. HELM—FEB. 6, 1898.

HONOR TO WHOM HONOR IS DUE.

There is scarcely a woman in Southern Methodism to whom its ministry owe so much as to Lucinda B. Helm. Indeed, the denomination is indebted to her heroic efforts in securing parsonages. One day in the year is sacredly set aside by the Woman's Parsonage and Home Mission Society as Loan Fund Day. The next one occurs Sabbath, Feb. 6, 1898, when contributions will be sought for the Lucinda B. Helm Loan Fund. If this date is not available, another can be selected. The church will honor itself in honoring the woman whose gentle ministry has become so effective.

We, therefore, can not do less than beg the church and its ministry to join in the exercises of that day. Emphasis should be given the fact that every cent contributed will constitute a permanent fund, saved from the exigencies of fortune and devoted to perpetual work for God. We ask every church, whether it has a Woman's Parsonage and Home Mission Society or not, to join in the observance of the following program.

Any contributor who can not send to a Conference Woman's Parsonage and Home Mission Society's treasurer may direct contributions to the General Treasurer, Mrs. W. D. Kirkland, No. 2301 West End avenue, Nashville, Tenn.

WHY DID THE CHURCH MAKE THE SUNDAY-SCHOOL A PART OF ITS MACHINERY?

The modern Sunday-school is not of man's discovery or invention; much less is it of his creation. It is a growth; as truly and legitimately so as the good tree that dispenses its blessings in foliage, flowers, fragrance and fruit. Both are the outcome of good seed in good soil. The germinal idea of the Sunday-school—soul-culture—hidden in the heart of man from the beginning, and hinted at in primeval sacrifices, becomes clearly historic in God's commendation of Abraham, the father of the faithful: "For I know him, that he will command his children and his household after him, and they shall keep the way of the Lord, to do justice and judgment; that the Lord may bring upon Abraham that which he hath spoken of him."

Household religion is the root of all organic religious life and activity, and the duty of teaching the young in the principles of religion stands as a distinct and unequivocal clause in the original constitution of the church of God.

In his valedictory address Moses, acting under the divine sanction, rehearsed the law of Sinai, and speaking with equal authority, said: "Hear, O Israel: the Lord our God is one Lord; and thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thine heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy might. And these words, which I command thee this day, shall be in thine heart; and thou shalt teach them diligently unto thy children, and shalt talk of them when thou sittest in thine house, and when thou walkest by the way, and when thou liest down, and when thou risest up."

To whom was this language addressed? To parents? Certainly. To parents only? No, but to Israel—"all Israel"—to the church of God. Then, as now, there were orphanage and other conditions adverse to moral and religious culture not provided for in statutes governing the family. Then, as now, the pity of the Lord was equal to the occasion.

"Thou, Israel, shalt teach thy children"—teach them the law of the Lord—"teach diligently." How frequently this injunction was repeated in the after history of the Jewish Church, and with what emphasis is well known to every Bible student.

Whatever may have been the aim of the primitive Sunday-school, and however vague the conceptions of the pioneers in this cause, the grand purpose of this agency is now so clearly revealed that he must be spiritually blind who fails to perceive it; or, seeing, culpably stupid if he ignores it. It is, first, to bring souls to Christ; and, second, to build them up in Christ. Mistaking this point insures a series of blunders in Sunday-school operations which must discount every effort, if they do not culminate in downright failure.

To trace out and establish in the minds of scholars the boundary line between right and wrong; to assist conscience in restraining those who would go beyond that line, and in reclaiming those who have gone beyond it; to bring them "to the obedience of Christ" through faith in him as the atoning sacrifice for sin, the perfect example of right-being and right-doing—this, in humble reliance upon the Spirit's help, is the first great aim of Sunday-school work.

This work is but fairly begun when scholars are converted and join the church. All antecedent effort has been expended in securing a good foundation. Digging down through the rubbish of sin, removing prejudice, cutting away the pride of unbelief, ofttimes sitting wearily in the shadow of disappointment—perhaps sick at heart through hopes long deferred—then taking counsel of the Great Architect; with renewed energy and wiser methods, following closely the ground-plan of godliness; at last the sure foundation-stone—the rock of our salvation—is fully revealed.

What gracious opportunities are here afforded? Recovered from their wanderings, and "having tasted the good Word of God and the powers of the world to come," the spiritual appetite of the lambs of the fold is whetted to keenest desire for things heavenly and divine. This "hungering and thirsting after righteousness" is most conclusive evidence of new spiritual life—a sure prophecy that growth will follow future nurture.

The benefits accruing to the young Christian through the agency of the Sunday-school, when it is properly employed, are simply incalculable. Here, upon a plane neither so high as to excite his fears nor so low as to disappoint his hopes, all his renewed powers, mental and moral, are brought into active and harmonious exercise. The easy yoke does not chafe, nor the light burden oppress the eager spirit. Thus trained, the transition from one sphere of usefulness to the next higher is accomplished by imperceptible degrees. Unconscious of the process, the babe in Christ grows unto the maturity and strength of spiritual manhood. Let it never be forgotten that the purpose of the Sunday-school is "not only to bring the lambs into the fold, but also to keep them there," by such wise ministrations to their wants as shall at once secure their steady growth in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ.

The first, best school of religion is not the Sunday-school, nor any other church agency, but the Christian home. But there are obligations resting upon the church which this fact can not diminish or affect in any wise. The church can not do the work of the home. This idea is constantly emphasized. Let this also be duly stressed: the home can not do the work of the church. If all professedly Christian homes were what they should be, the Sunday-school would still be an indispensable auxiliary to religious training. That its value in such case would appreciate a hundred-fold in the estimation of parents, is certain; but our homes are not what they ought to be, and, in all human calculation, will never be. The church must do its utmost to make its Sunday-school department equal to the demands which this fact imposes.

It is the duty of every church to organize a Sunday-school. In point of fact, it would be hard to find a congregation worthy the name of a church without a school, for with the abundant facilities at hand, and wanting in this particular, it would, to that extent, be manifestly lacking in one of the elements which go to constitute a true church.

It is the duty of the church to give its Sunday-school a generous support, first, by attendance. Little difficulty is experienced in securing the attendance of children. They are usually glad of the opportunity. The trouble is with their seniors, of whom, according to the principles of the gospel and common reason, better things should be expected. Strange to say, the elder church members are, as a class, harder to bring in than any other, except "case-hardened sinners." And much of the trouble experienced in holding the young men and young women is due to the absence of their elders, whose freedom from restraint they covet, and whose bad example they are not slow to imitate. We shall never be able to hold them so long as their fathers and mothers teach them to break away. He was a wise man who, in reply to the question, "How may we retain the young people in our school?" said, "By building a wall of old people between them and the door."

Looking at Sunday-schools as they exist among us, we find them divided into two principal classes: union and denominational. There are thousands of union schools throughout our country, part of them originating in local efforts of individual Christians of various branches of the church, and persons friendly thereto. They are self-constituted, self-supporting, and self-governing—entirely independent of ecclesiastical or other jurisdiction. The remainder, aside from being organized by missionaries of the American Sunday-School Union, and for the most part receiving material aid from it, are in all essential features similar. Union schools are best only where they exist by virtue of necessity. The necessitating circumstances, reduced to their simplest form, are as follows: 1. Where some particular church can not, or, 2. Where some church will not establish a school. In which case we can not but say, "God's blessing be upon those who go forward to lead the young to Christ, and his followers to a deeper work of grace, through the study of his Word in a union school." In such a case the dog-in-the-manger cry of "church schools, or none," is as heartless as it is senseless.

There will be—of necessity there must be—in many localities union schools, or none. And it is the bounden duty of Christian people in the vicinity to aid in making them as efficient as possible until such time as it becomes evident that they should be put under church supervision. Then let Christian magnanimity have full exercise.

Union schools are not the best—so pronounced by all leading Sunday-school men. There is not a society on earth proposing to perpetuate the system further than necessity compels its adoption. Never organize a union school except as a last resort. Then stand by it like a man until you see your way clearly to something better.

The right of a congregation to a preacher of its own faith and order is everywhere allowed. The securing of a representative minister is held to be a duty. But the right and duty of a congregation with reference to the organization of a Sunday-school in its house of worship is a mooted question in some neighborhoods to this good hour. Its glaring absurdity forbids discussion here. The day is speedily coming in which public opinion will require every church owning or controlling a house of worship to maintain in it a good school, in default of which it will shortly be compelled to sell out to a congregation that will. If preaching is needed, so is Sunday-school instruction; and wherever regular appointments for preaching are maintained the duty of Sunday-school organization follows legitimately and imperatively. Every church needs a Sunday-school, and every Sunday-school needs a church.

NOTES FROM COMO STATION.

Our first Quarterly Conference was held last Saturday, and our presiding elder was with us, and preached twice on Sunday to the pleasure and profit of preacher in charge and people. Como station is "gilt edge," and on the up grade. Assessment for preacher increased over last year, and preacher and presiding elder paid in full for quarter. Conference collections partly collected, and we are just waiting for district stewards to make apportionments, and will pay in full. This is my second year with this intelligent, appreciative people, and prospect is good for a successful year's work. R. O. BROWN, P. C.

VALUE OF A RELIGIOUS WEEKLY.

The regular weekly visits of a live religious paper in a home where children are growing up is a moulder of character for good the power and value of which it is impossible to compute. Young people grow up very largely the creatures of their environment. Surround the children with the influences of a pure, harmonious, attractive home, well supplied with wholesome religious reading matter, and they, in nearly every case, will grow up noble-minded, honest, upright citizens. But let the home be low, coarse, vile, unattractive, supplied with dime novels and vulgar, fictitious reading matter, and they are almost certain to grow up with low ideals of human life, and fall, into the ways of vice and crime. Now this is not a mere whim or fancy, but the statement of a fact of vital importance to parents—a fact which experience has demonstrated in thousands upon thousands of instances; and they are the truly wise, kind parents who recognize this fact, make their homes pleasant, and supply their children with a good religious paper. The minds of children are naturally active. It is right that they should be so. They are like a dry soil thirsting for the dews and the refreshing showers. They must, they will, have something to feast upon. If good reading matter is not put into their reach, they will sooner or later supply themselves with that which is vicious. If home is not made pleasant and attractive, they will drift out into vile associations. If what they read is debasing, and those with whom they associate are corrupt, they are sure to fall in love with these things, and drift down to ruin. The only safeguard against such a disaster is the course indicated above. Fathers, mothers, are you supplying your boys and girls with a good religious paper and good books? If you are, they will not fail to rise up and call you blessed.—Religious Telescope.

We know as little of the universal plan of God as the dullest private soldier does of the great campaign of the general-in-chief. We see only in part, and if we are guided by our own short-sighted vision, we can not but fall into confusion and despair. Just as the humblest soldier stands at his post and does his best, believing that his work is caught up and incorporated into the whole and made potent for victory, so we should do our simple duty with the infallible persuasion that it has gone into a mighty combination and will prove effectual for good.—Texas Advocate.

HATES THE SALOON.

Would God place in my hand a wand with which to dispel the evil of intemperance, I would strike the door of every saloon, of every distillery, of every brewery, until the accursed traffic should be wiped from the face of the earth. My anger is first against society men who have the power to stop this great evil, next against the distillers and brewers, and then the saloon-keepers.—Archbishop Ireland.

A man will defend his honor with his life. What is more dishonorable than unnecessary failure? Thousands of men make failures of life and die premature deaths, leaving wives and children unprovided for, because of their reckless neglect of health. No man can do good work or be successful in business who suffers from billousness, digestive and nervous disorders such as sick headache, giddiness, dizziness, drowsiness, cold chills, flushings of heat, shortness of breath, loss of appetite, fullness and swelling after meals, wind and pain in the stomach, costiveness, blotches on the skin, loss of sleep, disturbed sleep, frightful dreams and nervous and trembling sensations.

These are but the forerunners of some dread disease like deadly consumption, or fatal nervous prostration. Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery is the best medicine for hard working men and women. It cures all cases of weak stomach, impaired digestion and disordered liver. It gives keen edge to the appetite, makes the digestion perfect and the liver active. It makes rich, red, pure blood and builds firm, healthy flesh. It builds new, healthy, muscular tissue in every vital organ. It tones the worn-out nerves. It strengthens the muscular system, and invigorates and vitalizes the whole system. GOD IN ALL NATURE.

But in its light my soul can see

STARTING EARLY.

Now that we are well entered upon a new Conference year, it is of prime importance that pastors everywhere should begin to bestir themselves in the matter of raising funds for the various benevolences of the church. The brother who waits until the year is half gone before making any effort in this direction is almost certain to come out behind. The secret of success in this, as well as many other undertakings, is in beginning promptly, and working pertinaciously all through the year. Though a great deal of cash may not be obtainable just now, subscriptions, which are the next best thing, can be gotten, and will facilitate the raising of the collections no little.

It is a mistake to suppose that people have no money to spare at this season of the year. Many who are by no means rich will in the next few months spend considerable sums for luxuries and unnecessaries. The theatres and circuses will be liberally patronized, and not a few dimes and dollars will go where they ought not. If our benevolent claims are duly and properly presented, some of this waste can and will be saved, and the people will be taught useful lessons in self-denial. Liberality and self-denial ought to be regular and systematic, not spasmodic or occasional. Hence the importance of giving frequent opportunity of contributing to the Lord's cause. Many a church member can give ten, or twenty-five, or fifty cents per week or month for missions, who could not, or would not, give the sum total in a lump.

The brethren of the Mississippi Conference last year had an object-lesson as to the value of early collections in the case of Rev. J. G. Galloway, who served the Edwards charge, which in the Fall suffered a visitation from yellow fever. Notwithstanding this great calamity, which completely paralyzed business and put a stop to all church work at that place for two months or more, and laid low in the grave several of the ablest and best members of the Methodist Church, the pastor reported the assessments for missions and for the Conference fund paid in full, and only about twenty five per cent. deficit on the other collections—all because he pressed these claims in the Spring

We hope the stewards in the various charges will profit by this suggestion that we make to the ministry. Without prompt, persistent, system atic effort on their part to raise the assessment for the pastor, his salary will come up lacking, and he will suffer much trouble and hardship in consequence. How can your pastor avoid going in debt if little or nothing is raised for his support until Fall? A little more promptness and earnestness in providing for the pastor's material wants would remove many a burden, and bring up many a deficient salary. The new preacher usually receives a warm welcome, but it is not always remembered that moving is expensive, and often necessitates many sacrifices on the part of our faithful laborers, who choose not their own fields of labor. The old saying, "He gives twice who gives quickly," may well be applied to those who are prompt in looking after the support of their pastor. It is far easier to raise so nothing each week or each month than to try to collect the whole assessment just before Conference. To procrastinate means to fall behind. "A stitch in time saves nine."

SUNDAY TRAINS.

A short time since we published an extract from the message of Gov. McLaurin to the Mississippi Legislature in which he recommended restricting the running of Sunday trains. This is a just and wise suggestion. There is no question that much of the present Sunday freight traffic could be dispensed with advantageously both to the employed and to public morals, and with no loss to the railroads. No legal difficulties are in the way. Other States have such legislation. Trains carrying live stock and perishable goods need not be interfered with, but all other trains ought to be prohibited.

That man's physical nature, to say nothing of the moral objects of the Sabbath, requires one day's rest in seven, has been clearly demonstrated in a scientific way; and legislation that secures to men the right to Sabbath rest is demanded not only by humanitarianism, but by the principles of justice. Men should be protected in their right to all the means of physical rest and moral well-being.

In such legislation there is nothing puritanical. There are in the employ of the railroads in the United States alone nearly a million men, the great majority of whom are denied the blessed privileges of the Sabbath. Do they not need the rest and opportunities for worship as much as any other class? And are they not entitled to it on principles of justice and humanity? Is the Sabbath meant only for the rich? The riveting of the shackles of Sunday toil upon the necks of railroad men is but a foreshadowing of what will befall all classes of workmen unless the public conscience be aroused in vigorous protest against it. The fact that the running of Sunday trains is a long-established custom is no reason for its perpetuation. The longer the delay in agitating for reform at this point the harder will be the task and the greater the evil.

No one need be surprised that many of the secular papers are opposed to this movement. Reformatory movements of this character are very rarely initiated by the secular press. In morals the average newspaper makes no attempt to mould, but simply follows public opinion. The church must first sound the alarm and take the lead.

A great deal of the present Sunday railroad traffic is both unjustifiable and preventable, and should be prohibited by the State, not only for the benefit of the employed and their families, but also for the sake of public morals. Such flagrant and extensive desecration of the Sabbath as characterizes the railroad business of our land is certain in the course of time to produce disastrous results socially as well as morally.

If it be deemed unadvisable to stop all Sunday trains, the number should be reduced to a minimum, and legislation providing for this would result in great good. Such legislation should be had in every State.

DELAYED CLIPPINGS.

Filling as we do the double position of publisher and editor, we have not found time for some weeks past, on account of pressure of work growing out of attendance upon three Conference sessions, to give our exchanges a careful reading. Hence the following whose reproduction in our columns would have been more timely at an earlier date were overlooked. But acting on the principle that "it is better late than never," we publish them a little out of time.

At the meeting of the Publishing Committee, Dec. 1, Rev. W. C. Black, D. D., was re elected editor and publisher of the NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE for three years. Dr. Black is a good writer, discriminates wisely in the selection of matter for his paper, and deserves a liberal support.—Central Methodist.

Thanks, Bro. Meek, for your kind words. We hope the preachers in our territory will act upon your suggestion and give us during the current year a large increase of circulation.

THE SHEIK OF THE SCRIBES.

The NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE has a hero at its helm. Dr. Black has carried it forward to success in the face of difficulties that defeat stout men. His patronizing territory was ravished by drought, by the overflow, by yellow fever, and by palsy of trade. Editor Black is far to the front of his fellows of the inkhorn. We uncover and salute the Knight of the Delta, victorious over the drought, the deluge, and the devil.—Richmond Advocate.

Dr. Lafferty is a little previous in supposing that we have entirely vanquished the devil. He is still rarely a lively corpse in these parts, but we deal him a blow whenever opportunity offers.

LYNCHING.

The public mind is of late being directed to the subject of lynching and lawlessness in a way quite unusual. The study is a calm and dispassionate one. It is no longer vexed and rendered impossible of sober review by complications of sectional and partisan recrimination. The suppression of lynching is the universal desire. It is everywhere recognized as a great unfinished problem of our American civilization and social order. The mob spirit is the plague spot which must be eradicated from our public moral sense. Time was when the lyncher and the whitecapper found a certain security in a public sense blunted by repeated wrongs and outrage. That time is passing, and the latent sense of right and order in the public is awakening to the fact that the mob sows a thousandfold more crime than it avenges or prevents. The point of view from which the problem is now being studied is not of the justice or injustice of the mob's action, but of the inevitable effect on public morals of the rank lawlessness involved and of the often barbarous and inhuman methods employed. To a humanitarian, this is the most important fact of the whole problem. I have given careful study to these effects for a series of years, and in different sections, and always and everywhere with the same results. Public morals, individual conscience and the collective life of separate communities have been affected for evil, and evil only. I have two cases especially in view, but I have studied many others. About thirty years ago, in an interior county of Alabama, a human being, accused of a horrible crime, was, in spite of many and earnest protests, publicly burned alive. Two years ago, from the lips of a gentleman reared to manhood in that county, but who now occupies an honorable official station in another State, I have a detailed account of the effects of that deed of lawlessness, observed during a number of years, on its perpetrators and their children, even unto the third generation. That orgy of barbarism had an immediate and continuously besotting and brutalizing effect on all who lived in guilty remembrance of its awful details. The abettors sowed a harvest of dragon's teeth, which has for a third of a century issued in an army of violent men, whose bloody deeds encumber the criminal records of the county and give it an evil eminence more hurtful than many crimes such as that which was meant to be avenged.

In a public square of a large Western town, and not fifty paces from the door of the county courthouse, for many weeks during an Autumn of this decade, might be seen a great black spot, the charred ashes of a holocaust that had consumed a brutal wretch, the victim of an infuriated mob. The monster richly deserved death. Of that there could be no doubt, and the Autumn rains soon obliterated from the sands the evidence of the mob's pitiless vengeance. But what can remove the plague spot which that awful transaction left on the moral character of the men and youth who participated in it, and on the still younger generations who witnessed it, not by hundreds only, but by thousands? I speak advisedly, having studied the whole affair on the ground. I have also in my possession correspondence and notes, which, after the lapse of years, confirm the most terrible predictions concerning the consequences of that mad deed. Let it not be thought that these cases are exceptional because of the exceptional character of the penalty. The principle is the same—lawlessness. I could present statistics showing how industrial prosperity and commercial solidity have withered and disintegrated under the blight of the mob. It is not only a debaucher of morals, but it is a disorganizing and a demoralizing force in material affairs. The great financial institutions have boycotted and ruined more than one provincial center because of its sympathy with lawlessness and mob rule.

In putting my hand to this protest against the mob, and to this demand for its suppression, I do not act alone. I stand for many thousands of the best people in this and all the States, in my own and other communities. I had the honor to introduce into the late session of the Mississippi Conference a resolution strongly condemning lawlessness and mob violence, which was unanimously adopted. I have also addressed, through the Evening News of this city, a plea to the Executive of this State and to the Legislature, now in session, to calmly and seriously consider a measure for the suppression of lynching. I do not presume to dictate to the makers and administrators of our laws; but this is a question too utterly national and unpartisan to suggest mincing and cavil in reply. Lynching can be prevented. It must be prevented. A sufficiently serious effort in that direction has not yet been made Sentimental and sectional reasons have influenced us long enough. Let us act. We can not afford to see the young men of the present and future debauched and brutalized in an attempt to defend virtue and honor against our criminal neglect of proper legal enactments. Improve the laws and force them into the shape demanded by the urgency of agonizing necessity. The celerity of the mob should be imitated by the State. Prompt arraignment, prompt trial and prompt execution of judgment will meet the mad, but just protest of the mob. I have been bold enough to offer certain suggestions to the law making body, the sum of which is, that our criminal courts should be vested with extraordinary powers for the immediate apprehension and trial of the perpetrators of the crimes of rape, assassination and unqualified murder; or, what would perhaps more thoroughly emphasize the spirit of urgency involved, a special tribunal for this purpose should be erected. The State can learn from the mob the value and significance of prompt action. The law's delay is the lynchers' license. While the sword of justice rusts in its scabbard, the faggot, the six shooter and the lyncher's rope will rule with fitful riot. Are the men of the present brave and progressive enough to apply the remedy to the cure of this evil? A civilization can not be maintained by sentiment. Its true defense and guarantee of perpetuity is law.

HORACE M. DUBOSE.

WILL PAY A HUNDREDFOLD.

I believe a good religious paper an invaluable auxiliary to the pastor in all departments of church work. It saves him a world of labor, silently educating his people on all the great interests of the cause of Christ, quickening the latent forces, and preparing the way to make his pulpit exhortations and instructions effective. It makes fifty-two pastoral calls every year. It supplies useful and wholesome religious teaching for every member of the family. It does its work day and night, Summer and Winter, never tiring, never growing impatient. It makes intelligent, fruitful, liberal, helpful souls. It will pay the preacher to spend time and money in putting the religious paper into every home in his congregation—pay a hundredfold.—E. D. Power, in Christian Standard.

Our local news columns contain an account of an important discovery by three eminent bacteriologists of this city. The chief value of this to the public is the fact that it will enable physicians to make at once a positive diagnosis of a case of yellow fever. Last year even eminent physicians of large experience in the treatment of yellow fever were often in doubt for a considerable time; and this state of things helped to spread the fever. This discovery will mark an epoch in the history of this form of pestilence.

By invitation we attended on Tuesday, the twenty-fifth, a reception given by the various ladies' associations of the First Presbyterian Church, of this city, to the pastor of the said church, Rev. B. M. Palmer, D. D., in commemoration of his eightieth birthday. The reception was a most elegant affair, and was attended by an immense throng of people of all ecclesiastical creeds and all ranks of society. No man in the city of New Orleans is more highly honored or wields a more potent influence than does this distinguished pulpit orator, the Nestor of Southern Presbyterianism.

Rev. H. J. Harris, a superannuated member of the Mississippi Conference, and perhaps the oldest man in it, died on Friday, Jan. 13, at the home of his daughter in Tampa, Fla., after an illness of about five weeks. From a private letter from his daughter, Mrs. A. E. Wyatt, we quote as follows: "He was ready and willing to go, and fell asleep in Jesus after being perfectly unconscious for fifty-seven hours. He died without one single struggle. Pray for us in our sad affliction." His remains were brought to Centerville, Miss., for interment. A suitable memoir will doubtless be prepared in due time.

The article on Sunday-schools which appears on our third page was written by A. M. Mayo, of Lake Charles, La. It has been in our office for many months. As it bore no signature, and as we had no clue to the authorship, in accordance with a long-established rule of the office, we did not publish it. Within the last two weeks we ascertained the authorship. It was read before the Opelousas District Conference last year, and its publication was requested by the Conference. These facts, however, were unknown to us until now, although we published last Summer a notice giving the title of the article and making inquiry as to its origin. We invite special attention to it.

THE STEWARDS OF COLUMBUS DISTRICT.

DEAR BRETHREN: As we begin work of this year suffer a word exhortation. First, you are to ke an allowance for the support of ur pastor. Don't suffer some nar- w minded member of the church u represent to control you in this tter, but in the fear of God make best allowance possible, and go work in good faith and with the termination to collect it; and re- mber, the more you collect in the rly part of the year the easier it ll be for you to collect all. If you it until the last of the year, as ny do, you will be sure to come t behind, and thus discourage the urch. In the second place, your stor will be dependent on you for pport for himself and family. If u fail in your duty, you will eatly embarrass him and cause the ork thereby to suffer.

The law of our church contemates that we pay quarterly, and if ch steward would make the proper fort, it could be done without any eat deal of work. Where a mem- r pays five dollars, get him to pay e dollar and twenty-five cents per arter, and it will be much better r him and the pastor; so, whatever e amount assessed each member, t him to agree to pay it in this y.

Remember, when the pastor fails to get his money, he can't meet his obligations, and his influence is weakened; so please, brethren, don't suffer this. I have known some good men who are well able to pay at any time to hold back until the very last. I don't know why, unless they want to make all they can out of the money before they let it go. You will have all these things to meet, and if it is understood that every member of the church is expected to pay quarterly, and at the end of each quarter let the steward read out before the church what each one has paid, all will soon fall into line, and the steward will have but little work to do, and the pastor will not be concerned about his salary. Let each steward provide himself with the steward's book, and he will have very little trouble to keep an accurate account of all money raised for the support of the ministry, and can tell in a moment who paid it. I would suggest to the preachers, if your stewards have not provided themselves with these books, it would be well for you to get them and give them to your stewards. One preacher has been doing this for several years, and he says these little books are worth from fifty to one hundred dollars every year to him.

Now, brethren, let's all begin in good faith to do the best year's work that we have ever done. Much faith, much prayer, much effort, will insure success. R. A. BURROUGHS, P. E.

A MISTAKE CORRECTED.

MR. EDITOR: In the notice which I left in your office to be published, your types make me say this absurd thing: "Expenses for the half session or second term need not exceed eight dollars for board, washing and tuition." There is not a college in the world can do that. We do some wonderful things at Centenary, but we can not give a boy board, washing and tuition for four months and a half for eight dollars. If you will correct it by multiplying the eight by ten, you will have it correct.

WHO ARE OUR DEAD?

BY BENNO KIRSCHBAUM.

Who are our dead?
Not those we lay to rest,
With folded hands, beneath the daisies' sod;
Our hearts break not. Returned to God,
We know their fate is best.

Our dead are those Whom, once knit to the heart,
Some cruel fate, or time, or chance, has reft
Out of our life, and we are left
In silence and apart.

—Philadelphia Ledger.

GOOD BOOKS AND GOOD PEOPLE.

BY J. P. M'CASKEY.

We need to know a few good people living—but very many of the dead. Books! In them we find most of the people we revere, and many for whom we feel a personal affection. Do you know Hannah, in the Old Testament? She is one of the women I want to see in the next life. Do you know Roxana Foote? She is another. Deep-souled mothers both, three thousand years apart in time, but kindred souls, and so three thousand years are nothing. If they have met they have learned long since to know each other, and the later born has doubtless sought her elder sister. Books! What, indeed, were the world of men without books!

Hear Alexander Smith: "Across brawling centuries of blood and war, I hear the bleating of Abraham's flocks, the tinkling of the bells of Rebekah's camels. O men and women so far separated, yet so near, so strange, yet so well known, by what miraculous power do I know you all! Books are the true Elysian fields where the spirits of the dead converse, and into these fields a mortal may venture unappalled."

And John Ruskin: "All the while this eternal court is open to you, the chosen and the mighty of every place and time! Into that you may enter always; in that you may take fellowship and rank according to your wish; from that, once entered into it, you can never be an outcast but by your own fault. No wealth will bribe, no name overawe, no artifice deceive the guardian of those Elysian gates. Do you deserve to enter? Pass. Do you ask to be the companion of nobles? Make yourself noble, and you shall be. Do you long for the conversation of the wise? Learn to understand it, and you shall hear it. But on other terms? No. If you will not rise to us, we can not stoop to you. Bread of flour is good; but there is bread, sweet as honey, if we would eat it, in a good book."

Good books are often good people at their best and so—very good to live with. "Such as are thy thoughts," says Marcus Antoninus, "such also will be the character of thy mind, for the soul is dyed by the thought." How to influence thought wisely is then the grave question. We stand as teachers where it is the one serious business of our lives to give direction to the lives of others. How shall we do this, how can we do it, best? No command of yours or mine will cause boy or girl to abandon any evil habit, profanity, obscenity, dishonesty, idleness, folly of any sort. Such command is from the outside only, and, to be regarded even in appearance, must be supported from the outside by dread of penalty. We must go deeper, and by other means than this, or we fail.

The winsome lady who holds court in her modest school-room, her courtiers seldom forgetting that they are little ladies and gentlemen, does this only because she has their hearts; and their hearts she can have only as she can control their thoughts; and their thoughts she controls only through her own fine personality, and by constantly putting into their receptive minds suggestions pleasing and wholesome. She lives out her own beautiful and earnest life with them. By quiet example, by personal appeal, by song and story she reaches them. She knows the best in literature and in life, and she gives them of her best, and they go out from her with a wealth of treasure in heart and mind that for not a few of her pupils will be cumulative for a lifetime. She holds, with Froebel, that "all education not founded in religion is unproductive;" and, with Warner, that "Good literature is as necessary to the growth of the soul as good air to the growth of the body, and that it is just as bad to put weak thought into the mind of a child as to shut it up in a room that is unventilated." She does not try to teach so much, but she has many an immortal poem and many a good thing in prose, from the Bible and elsewhere, as familiar in her school as is the old multiplication table. Is such a teacher good to live with?

A FRIEND'S ADVICE.

And what it led to.

It is not a common occurence that a friendly word should be the means of giving nearly forty years of happiness and health to the person heeding the advice it carried. This was the case with Mary Lingard. At twenty-five she was dragging out her days in misery. At sixty-one she finds herself so active and strong she can do work that would shame many a younger woman, and looks back on thirty-six happy, healthful years of industry. But let her tell her story:

"Thirty-six years ago I had great trouble with my liver. The doctors allowed that there were tumors growing on it, and they blistered my side in an effort to give me relief. I was at that time earning my living as a tailoress, but for five years, between the pain in my side and the blisters I was in constant misery, and work was a drag to me, with no prospect of relief; fortunately for me, however, a friend advised me to take Dr. Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and finally persuaded me to take a regular course of it. When I first commenced taking the Sarsaparilla my side was so painful that I could not fasten my dress, and for a time I did not get any relief, but my friend advised me to persevere and relief was sure to come, and come it did. This happened, as I say, thirty-six years ago. My liver has never troubled me since, and during these years I have passed through the most critical period of a woman's life without any particular trouble, and to-day, at sixty-one years of age, I am active and strong, and able to do a day's work that would upset many a younger woman. Ever since my recovery I have taken a couple of bottles of Dr. Ayer's Sarsaparilla each spring, and am quite satisfied that I owe my good health to this treatment. I give this testimonial purely in the hope that it may meet the eye of some poor sufferer."—MARY LINGARD, Woodstock, Ont.

Dr. Ayer's Sarsaparilla has won its way to every corner of the world by the praise of its friends; those who have tried it and who know they were cured by the use of the remedy. There is nothing so strong as this personal testimony. It throws all theories and fancies to the winds and stands solidly upon the rock of experience challenging every skeptic with a positive "I know." Ayer's Sarsaparilla with its purifying and vitalizing action on the blood is a radical remedy for every form of disease that begins in tainted or impure blood. Hence tumors, sores, ulcers, boils, eruptions and similar diseases yield promptly to this medicine. Some cases are more stubborn than others, but persistence with Dr. Ayer's Sarsaparilla usually results in a complete cure. Mary Lingard began with a bottle, and went on to a course of Dr. Ayer's Sarsaparilla. When she was cured she realized that a medicine that could cure disease could also prevent it. So she took a couple of bottles each spring and kept in perfect health. There are thousands of similar cases on record. Some of these are gathered into Dr. Ayer's Curebook, a little book of 100 pages which is sent free by the J. C. Ayer Co., Lowell, Mass. Write for it.

"LAYING ASIDE EVERY WEIGHT."

A successful worker in one of our rescue missions is a lady who was formerly a society belle, but who has now consecrated her brilliant social and intellectual gifts and her beautiful voice entirely to the Lord's work among the lost and degraded. She once remarked that she clung to dancing and card-playing for years after she made a profession of religion; and that her real joy in the Christian life did not come until these things had been given up altogether. One evening about two weeks after she had made this full consecration, she went into a little mission room, and was there asked to say something helpful to a poor wreck of a man who had been for many years a gambler. The man looked at her suspiciously.

"Do you play cards?" he asked.

"No."

"Do you dance?"

"No."

"Do you go to the theater?"

"No; not now."

"Very well," he said, "then you may talk to me. But I won't listen to one word from your fine folks who are doing, on a small scale, the very things that have brought us poor wretches where we are."

"Can you not believe," added the lady who told the story, "that the joy of being able to teach the way of life to that lost soul was more to me than all the poor little pleasure I had given up for Jesus' sake?"—Unidentified.

IN TIME OF NEED.

A venerable friend, past her fourscore years, and serenely looking toward the mile-stones still before her on the road, related this incident to me from her personal knowledge. She had a neighbor, fifty years ago, the widow of an eminent clergyman. This gentlewoman, struggling to bring up her family on very small means, found herself, one wild January day, in a bleak New England town, with a scanty supply of coal in her cellar. Had coal been plenty, it would have been a comfort, and yet just then it would have done her little good, for the furnace was very much out of order. Bundling the children up as warmly as she could, the mother sent them to school, and then went to her room, and knelt by her bed in an agony of prayer. Even as her tear-wet face was bowed on her hands, a knock resounded through the house, and going to the door, the lady met a stranger, who pressed upon her a roll of bills. "I haven't time to explain," he said, "but, madame, it's an old debt I owed your husband, and here it is with interest." The coal-bin was supplied, and the furnace repaired, and around the father's Bible that night mother and children knelt, and acknowledged the goodness of their ever-loving, ever-caring God.

I could multiply such stories, and testify to their truth. Not always stories of relief from pecuniary embarrassment. I know of other cases of help in time of need. Have I not seen the husband, bound in the shackles of intemperance, arise and shake them off, and stand, Christ's freed man? Have I not known the invalid whose days were apparently numbered, at the summons of love, or in a crisis of the domestic life, put on strength enough to live a little longer, and a little longer still, till her dear ones could do without her presence and counsel? The instances are as many as the chain of God's loving kindness is long. It is our faith that fails—not God's willingness, nor his ability.—Margaret E. Sangster.

BOYS WANTED.

The Western Christian Advocate publishes this statement made by an officer of a Liquor League:

"The success of our business is dependent largely upon the creation of appetite for drink. Men who drink liquor, like others, will die, and if there is no new appetite created, our counters will be empty, as will be our coffers. Our children will go hungry, or we must change our business to that of some other more remunerative.

"The open field for the creation of this appetite is among the boys. After men have grown and their habits are formed, they rarely ever change in this regard. It will be needful, therefore, that missionary work be done among the boys, and I make the suggestion, gentlemen, that nickels expended in treats to the boys now will return in dollars to your tills after the appetite has been formed. Above all things, create appetite."

This means that boys are wanted to become drunkards in order that the liquor business may not fail and the children of liquor dealers "go hungry" when the men who are drunkards now are dead.

How many boys who read these lines want the position? If you do not want it, there is but one way to be sure you will never fill it, and that is never to take the first glass.

A FELLOW FEELING.

The attention of a South Side lady was attracted to a little girl sitting on the front steps, sobbing as if broken-hearted. She said with tears running down her cheeks:

"Oh, me! I does want my mamma so bad!"

Just then a little calf came crying piteously down the street.

"Poor 'ittle calfie," she said. "Is your mamma gone to the card party, too?"—Index.

Hygiene.

MILK.

BY A MEDICAL PRACTITIONER.

Some people err by looking upon milk as a beverage rather than as a food; the result is, they consume large quantities with their meals, thus overloading the stomach with food unconsciously. If one will constantly bear in mind that milk is a food, the stomach will be much less likely to suffer from overwork.

When one comes to deal with the invalid, and orders a milk diet, he is often met with the assurance that the patient can not take milk at all. This is rarely actually true, for, if milk in one form has disagreed, there is no reason why some other preparation of it should not be given a trial.

Some people complain of its constipating effect, while others object to the taste; while yet others object to it simply on general principles.

For such patients it is not always well to start off with pure, rich milk, but to commence giving it in small quantities, well diluted, directing the person at the same time to drink it slowly, rather to sip it than to take it down at one draught. If milk is taken slowly, it can not form those large, hard curds that are so indigestible. A liking for it may be cultivated sometimes by boiling a teaspoonful of black coffee in each cup of milk, and thus one seems to be taking coffee, when in reality he is taking milk. Some people are able to take it if it is just brought to a boil, and then a pinch of salt and a little pepper added; others will take it if it is brought to a boil, and then has a few oysters and their juice poured in—the oysters may be removed before serving. The flavor may be disguised by preparing the milk as tomato soup. Some people will take it in large quantities if it is fed to them in the form of junket. This may be easily prepared by sweetening a pint of milk with sugar; it is then put in a warm place, or very gently heated, after which it should be poured into a shallow dish, and have mixed with it a teaspoonful or two of rennet wine. A slight curd will form, and the dish should then be put in a cool place. The junket should be served cold, with a little cream and sugar, and a little grated nutmeg, if preferred.

Then cornstarch, boiled rice, tapioca, etc., may all be prepared with milk, and thus the invalid may be well nourished without even knowing he is taking milk.

Some people can digest milk better if it is mixed with lime-water, while others relish it very much when mixed with ærated water, and this certainly improves its digestibility. By adding some gelatine and a little flavoring, milk may be served as a delicious jelly.—Guardian.

CANON FARRAR ON A UNIVERSAL RELIGION.

Canon Farrar has been interviewed by a writer for The Chautauquan (July), and the first question propounded was whether he believed we should ever have a universal religion. He answered:

"I have no doubt of it. Christianity will be the only religion of the far future, and we are fast coming toward a universal religion. Have you ever thought how rapidly the Christian religion is growing? Three centuries after Christ, of all the people in the world, only one in every one hundred and fifty was a Christian. Now one-third of the world's population bows down to the Christian God. Our missionaries to-day are in every part of the globe. They are beginning to make themselves felt in places where for years they have labored under the greatest disadvantages. In Hindustan there is a vast number of Christian churches. The Fiji Islands have become Christian, and a great work is now going on in New Zealand and elsewhere. The opening up of the interior of Africa means that Christianity will follow the explorers, and I can see the time coming when a great corps of Christian workers will be pushing the standard of Christ into the most remote corners of the globe.

"'But how about the spread of infidelity?' I asked. 'We have in America many infidels. England and the other parts of Europe are full of unbelievers, and it is said that the Japanese and the Hindus, when they give up their own religion through missionary teaching, often become agnostics and lose faith in everything.'

"'I don't believe infidelity is increasing,' Canon Farrar replied. 'One unbeliever makes, as a rule, more fuss than a number of believers, and he becomes conspicuous by the fewness of his kind. Why, in England the people believe more and more intelligently every year; and as for the theosophists and Buddhists of this country—you could get them all in this room and have some space to spare about the corners. It is not true that the majority of Hindus or Japanese who are converted become infidels. The most of them who give up their own religion at the teaching of the missionaries become Christians, and many of our best and most faithful workers are found among those of the so-called heathen nations.'"

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

Oh, that the age could learn afresh the grandeur, the beauty, the nobleness, the loveliness of purity. This grace includes all others and measures all others. More than all things else the world about us needs to be taught the meaning of Christian knighthood, the beauty of holiness.

Let our maidens learn that of all culture and of all adornment the loveliest and best is heart culture in holiness.

Show me a woman who has this hope, indeed, and I will show you a Madonna soul on which the beatific and beautifying light has shone and is still shining.—Samuel Smith Harris.

LOPER—Mrs. SUSAN ANN LOPER, the subject of this sketch, was born in Perry county, Miss., Aug. 6, 1833. She was the daughter of Hodgen Uriah Millsaps and Sallie Carter, his wife, and was the youngest of their children. She did not remember her mother, who died when the little girl was scarcely two years of age. The family removed at that period to Jasper county, where this youngest of the household grew up surrounded by the fondest love of father and brothers and sisters. Her father died when she was thirteen years of age, and after that period for several years her home was with her brother-in-law, Judge Henry Mounger. Her education was obtained in the schools of the county, which were of an excellent character, and at Summerfield, Ala., then a noted institution presided over by Dr. A. H. Mitchell.

Those who knew her in her beautiful young womanhood will recall that vision of loveliness, that charm of manner and grace of disposition that called forth the admiration of all who saw her. She had the best natural qualities both of person and character, and to these were added many of the gifts of fortune, so that her lot in life seemed a most prosperous and happy one. While yet a girl she gave her heart to God and became a member of the church.

In March, 1853, before she was twenty years of age, she was married to A. F. Dantzler, Esq. To them were born six children, of whom four are yet living—two sons and two daughters. It was a happy home over which she presided until the storm of war broke in 1861. Then followed the sorrow of those days when her husband, a noble gentleman, an apt scholar, a distinguished lawyer, a true Christian, a member of the Mississippi Legislature, and, finally, a gallant soldier, went forth to the defence of his country, and fell in the dreadful attack on Corinth, Oct. 3, 1862, while leading a company in the Thirty-seventh Mississippi Regiment, of which he was captain. Years of sad widowhood passed, but years of usefulness, of activity in the management of affairs; years marked by faith and courage, by devotion to duty, and by the true mother's care for her children.

Many years afterward, in 1875, she was married to Capt. F. B. Loper, of Newton, Miss., a most worthy gentleman, late treasurer of the county, whose death preceded her own about three years.

It can be truthfully said of her that she was a true Christian, a devoted wife, a fond mother, a kind neighbor, and a woman who did well all the work of life. She deeply loved the Savior, expressing that love sometimes in words, but always in act and life.

Here was always a home of hospitality. Young people loved to gather there. She had large sympathy with the poor and suffering. She was charitable in her speech and judgment, and could always make a plea for the erring or the unsuccessful. She went through the world doing good, and growing to an older age with a calmness and dignity and grace of character rarely witnessed.

For the last months of her life she was with her daughter, Mrs. Galbreath, at New Canton, Tenn., intending, however, to spend the present Winter at her home in Mississippi; but ill-health detained her, and at last it was seen that her Lord had called her, and she must go on a farther journey.

In her last sickness, which extended through weeks marked by suffering, grace was given her to bear all, and she was meekly resigned to the will of God. She trusted in the blessed Savior with perfect confidence and love, repeating often, and sometimes trying to sing, the hymn, "Jesus, lover of my soul." The words of the 103d Psalm were precious to her, as also St. Paul in the Epistle to the Hebrews: "And let us run with patience the race set before us, looking unto Jesus, the author and finisher of our faith." It was under the inspiration of these promises, and in the light of perfect faith, that she was enabled to say, "I feel like I could step right over."

Thus peacefully she passed away on Sunday morning, Nov. 7, 1897, and entered into the blessed home that remains for the people of God. Her body was laid to rest, as she requested, in the cemetery at New Canton, where, beneath the shadow of the great hills, it waits till He shall come and morning break. E. H. MOUNGER.

WILSON—Mrs. KATIE WILSON, youngest child of Henry O'Bairn and Pamelia Brown, was born Nov. 17, 1874, at Athlone, Red River, La., and gradneted at Millwood, Jackson, La., in 1891. She was married to Thos. J. Wilson, Dec. 23, 1896, and died in Jeanerette, La., Sept. 23, 1897. She was a member of the M. E. Church, South; was converted at ten years of age. Her father died before she was of age to lisp his name. Her stepfather, Bro. Porter, preached her one year.

It was this writer's privilege to know her in her childhood, and again during her married life, the whole of which she spent in Jeanerette, and to know her as a devout, humble, true and faithful Christian. Her religious worth was best known to those who knew her best in home life. No one could come in contact with her and not feel the force of her piety. She did not fail to attend upon the church services when at all convenient, and was a constant reader of the Word of God and her church paper, the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

Her death was sudden and unexpected. One day, as the sun was sinking in the west, she remarked to her sister Rosa that it would be beautiful to go home to God at such a grand sunset hour, and sure enough the next evening, as the sun went down, she passed away. Amid a large crowd of weeping friends we laid away to rest this blessed saint, with her sweet babe of few hours' life at her bosom, to await the glorious resurrection morn. She was devotedly nursed by her kind husband and loving sister, besides many friends recently endeared by her beautiful Christian character.

May our dear Lord graciously comfort her loved ones, and bring them to live with her in glory! Her pastor, F. M. BLOCKER.

Jeanerette, La.

ARMSTRONG—SUSIE ARMSTRONG, wife of R. R. Armstrong, and daughter of Rev. H. and Mary Farmers, was born in Montgomery county, Miss., and died Nov. 8, 1897, at her home in Attala county, Miss. Her death was caused by being thrown from a buggy as she was returning home from prayer meeting. She never recovered from the shock. She was a consistent member of the M. E. Church, South; a good neighbor, affectionate wife, and kind mother. To know her was to love her. She was a model Christian. In her death Shiloh Church has lost one of its best members, the community one of its best friends, her home one sweet spirit and bright light. While she never left a dying testimony, she left living testimony. She was one of the sweetest-spirited woman I ever knew. She leaves a husband and four children to mourn over her departure. May God's Spirit guide their tender hearts and feet in their mother's footprints! May the grace of God sustain the father and friends in their bereavement!

Elbow-grease

(with a little soap) used to be the thing to clean house with. Now-a-days it's Pearline. Pearline is easier and quicker and better than elbow-grease. One reason why millions of women prefer Pearline, rather than anything else, in cleaning house, is that it saves the paint and woodwork. But the principal reason, of course, is that it saves so much work. 548

Beware Peddlers and some unscrupulous grocers will tell you, "this is as good as" or "the same as Pearline." IT'S FALSE—Pearline is never peddled; if your grocer sends you an imitation, be honest—send it back. JAMES PYLE, New York.

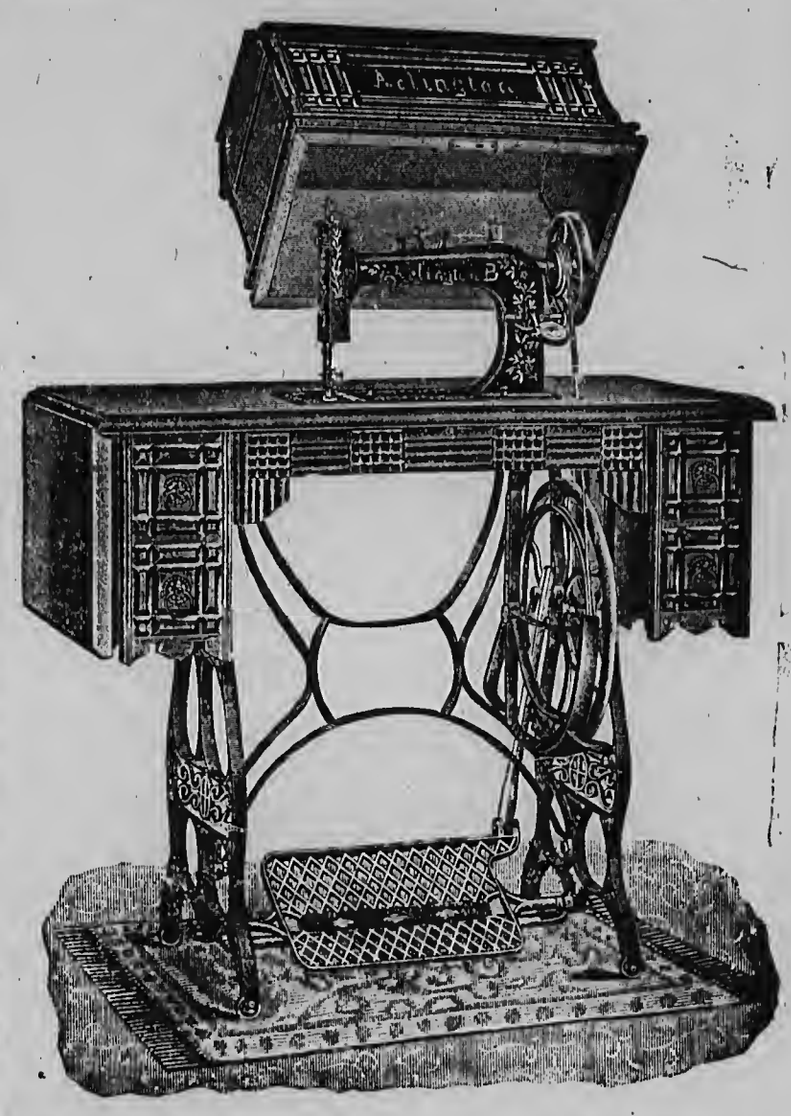
Our Machine Offer-

New Improved High-Arm "Arlington B" Self-Threading Sewing Machine.

A recorded certificate of warranty for 10 years accompanies each machine. The "Arlington B" is complete in every detail, combining all modern and late improvements, such as automatic bobbin winder, self-threading shuttle, self-setting needle, upper spring tension, etc.



The "Arlington B" self-threading sewing machine has a large high arm, its mechanical appearance is perfect, its adjustment is absolute, positive take-up, convenient foot rest, with the best style furniture, either oak or walnut; in addition to which each machine is furnished with the best steel combination attachments free, as follows: One tucker, one foot ruffler, one set of plain hemmers (five different widths up to seven-eighths of an inch), one binder, one shirring plate and one under-braider, packed in a handsome velvet lined case. It is also furnished with one foot hemmer, one screw driver, one wrench, one oil can with oil, one gauge, one package of needles, six bobbins and one instruction book.

THE HEAD is strong and substantial; has large space under the arm for handling bulky goods, is finely japanned and protected by a hard finish. Has so few bearings and friction points that it is easily oiled and kept clean.

NEEDLE BAR is round, with adjustable bearing polished and fitted, insuring great wear, and can run a long time without oiling. It has a slack dip motion, relieving the strain upon the thread when the shuttle is passing through the loop. Using the adjustable take-up, controlling the threads perfectly on all grades of work.

IMPROVED AUTOMATIC BOBBIN WINDER which is so positive and reliable in its action that an imperfectly wound bobbin is an impossibility. So simple that a child can easily operate it. This valuable attachment renders possible a perfect control of shuttle tension.

SELF THREADING—The "Arlington B" is self-threading, requiring no change from light to heavy work. Uses double thread, and makes the lock stitch.

THE NEEDLE is the same as used on the New Home machine, and is self-setting both as to height and position with reference to shuttle, with short blade and long shank, insuring great strength; finely polished.

SELF-THREADING SHUTTLE—A perfect steel cylinder shuttle with delicate and perfect tension, open at one end to allow the bobbin to be inserted without displacing any of the parts; runs loose in the shell, without spring centre or point bearings, thus insuring an even tension; can be threaded in the dark, and easily understood.

LOOSE PULLEY for winding the bobbin without running the machine requires no change or adjustment, nor is it necessary to remove the work from the machine.

PARTS SUBJECT TO WEAR are made of the finest steel, case hardened, light and noiseless and are very durable.]

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

The semi-centennial celebration of the discovery of gold in California commenced on Monday, and will continno throughout the week.

President and Mrs. Sanford B. Dole, of Hawaii, arrived in Chicago on Jan. 23. A distinguished party greeted the President of the little island republic on his arrival.

Gold is said to have been discovered near New Bedford, Mass., and the cotton mill operatives on strike are said to be much excited thereat. The ore was struck in digging a well, and is said to have assayed $40 to the ton.

Gov. Foster has announced the appointment of the following gentlemen to constitute the new Louisiana State Board of Health: Drs. Souchon, Sexten, Reynaud, H. S. Lewis and J. J. Castellanos, and Messrs. J. C. Denis, J. W. Castles, S. O. Thomas and J. D. Hill.

The total value of Western grain shipped abroad through the mouth of the Mississippi river last year was $19,926,000, and the total foreign commerce of the port of New Orleans, including imports and exports, was something more than $120,000,000.

A press club has for many years been a pen project with many earnest and public-spirited journalists in this city. Last week the dreams of these earnest workers of the local press were fully realized in the inauguration of a club whose large membership insures it success from the very outset.

The situation regarding the relations between Spain and the United States is at present so strained that an attack upon Americans in Havana, or an attempt to injure the United States minister at Madrid, would compel President McKinley to take such steps as would make war inevitable.

The appellate division of the Supreme Court of New York State has appointed a "committee on character." The committee consists of James C. Carter, Elihu Root and William B. Hornblower, and will look into the character of applicants for admission as attorneys and counselors of the several courts of the State.

For more than a week past the Hawaiian annexation treaty has been debated behind closed doors in the United States Senate, and to all appearances the end of the debate is not yet in sight. While interest in the treaty has been somewhat overshadowed by the recent news from Cuba, it is likely to be revived by the arrival in Washington in a few days of President Dole, the chief executive of the Hawaiian Republic.

Local medical circles are excited over the discovery of a successful manner of ascertaining whether or not a patient has yellow fever. The discovery was made here in New Orleans by local physicians, and a sufficient number of successful experiments have been made to invest the tests in the minds of physicians with an importance second only to the discovery of a yellow fever preventive. Drs. P. E. and J. J. Archinard and R. S. Woodson have for the past three or four months been busily engaged at work in the laboratory of the State Board of Health upon the pathology of yellow fever. The most important part of their work has been the application of the agglutinative test to the germ of yellow fever.

J. M. WREMS, P. E.

The Cuban question monopolized a large share of the attention of the National House of Representatives last week. An effort has been made to secure action on the Senate belligerency resolution, and members desirous of making capital at home have seized the opportunity of making fiery and bellicose speeches in favor of Cuban independence. One ardent sympathizer offered a resolution providing for the sending of a minister to the Cuban republic, and another proposed a treaty of amity and commerce with the Cubans.

"I have been a victim to terrible headaches," writes C. F. Newman, Dug Spur, Va., "and have never found anything to relieve them so quickly as Ayer's Pills. Since I began taking this medicine the attacks have been less frequent, till they have ceased altogether."

THE WHOSOEVER WILL RESCUE MISSION.

A CONTINUOUS REVIVAL FOR TWENTY-ONE MONTHS.

The history of the Whosoever Will Resone Mission is little short of marvelous. It shows what can be accomplished by one man thoroughly consecrated to God and filled with the Holy Spirit.

In March, 1896, Bro. J. Henry Haag started the Whosoever Will Rescue Mission in the slums of the city of New Orleans. Space forbids a detailed account of his wonderful conversion. Suffice it to say that, born of an old and wealthy family of this city, he very early in life began sowing his "wild oats," and at the age of twenty-four his habits of life were such as to bring the blush of shame to the cheeks of those who loved him best. Strong drink, the gaming table, and all the other long train of vices that follow in their wake, took a strong hold upon him, and he was utterly unable to shake them off. The tears, the prayers, the remonstrances of a loving mother were unavailing, as were also those of a devoted wife. At times, when he realized to what depths of degradation he was sinking, he summoned to his aid all his resolution, all his force of character, in a determined effort to reform, but after a few days, or possibly weeks, of sobriety he lapsed into still greater indulgence. Coming home one night after a period of unusual excess, the unexpected presence of his father drove him into a frenzy of rage, during which he conducted himself in a manner so violent and abusive as to partially sober him. He fully realized for the first time his awful condition. He walked the floor for hours. As resolutions of amendment formed in his mind, he remembered the many broken vows of the past, and felt that the task was a hopeless one. He was despondent, despairing, desperate, and, with a sudden resolution to end it all in death, he sought the means of self-destruction. His devoted companion interfered and thwarted his purpose. Memory brought to mind his mother's prayers, his mother's God, and in an agony of remorse and wretchedness he laid, in utter abandon, his young life, with all its burdens, all its cares, at the feet of the Son of God. The darkness gave place to light, the burden of his heart rolled away, and there and then there came to him that peace, that rest which cometh alone to the children of God. On the following morning he began "straightway" to "bring forth fruits meet for repentance." His side-board at home was well supplied with liquors and cigars, and numerous packs of playing cards were lying about convenient for use. These he immediately destroyed. He hunted up a Bible which had lain about the house more as an ornament than an article of use, and began poring over its pages. A wonderful change had come over him. Formerly his conversation had been of the race track, the gaming table, and sports of various kinds. It was now of the wonderful love of God to man. Even his wife feared that his mind was unbalanced, and his boon companions made him the subject of scoffs, jeers, and laughter; but he heeded them not. As he looked about him and saw thousands upon thousands of men in this city in even worse condition than that from which he had been saved, with no loving hand outstretched to help them, he became convinced that it was his duty to point them to the Lamb of God, who alone was able to succor them, and so he one day wandered into the heart of the slums of the city, and, selecting the four-story building at 614 Bienville street, he paid a month's rent thereon, and a few days afterwards established the Whosoever Will Rescue Mission. In a few days it was ready for occupancy. Without any experience, with his Bible under his arm, on the night of March 2, 1896, he wended his way, solitary and alone, to the mission building to hold his first religious service. A motley crowd, composed principally of hoodlums, drunkards, and all-around toughs, were on hand to "welcome" him. When he began service a brass band at a notorious beer hall across the way began a medley of discordant sounds. It had been procured for the express purpose of breaking up his meeting, but Bro. Haag expected obstacles, and proceeded with his service of song and prayer. He then read a lesson from the Bible, and told in a plain, simple, but withal powerfully pathetic way, of the wonderful things God had done for him. Many who came to scoff remained to pray, and that night eighteen precious souls were born into the kingdom of God. The devil has planted obstacles numberless in the brother's way. At first nearly all the members of his own family frowned upon him. His then worldly wife besought him with tears to abandon his "crazy freak," and told him often that she would rather he would come home drunk every night than with the offensive odors of the slums upon his person. One of the daily papers lampooned, ridiculed, and held him up to public contempt and ignominy. Printed circulars were scattered broadcast over the city attributing to him all sorts of unholy and impure motives. Petitions were presented to the mayor asking him to suppress the meetings, on the ground that they disturbed the peace and quiet of the neighborhood; but through it all Bro. Haag preserved his equanimity, and kept on in the even tenor of his way, confidently leaning upon the Everlasting Arm. One by one these obstacles have been overcome. His wife was soon converted, and is now his most valued co-laborer. Other friends were raised up to him, some of whom have contributed liberally to help the work along, while other noble Christian men and women have joined hands with him in carrying on the work. There has been a continuous revival in this mission ever since it was opened, during which time, at a very low estimate, nineteen hundred persons have professed conversion, and many hundreds of them are now living honest, sober, industrious Christian lives, and fully 65,000 non-church going people have had the gospel preached to them. Fully three-fourths of the converts have had to be helped in a practical way. Usually they are ragged, dirty, hungry, and shelterless. Before they are fit to work they need plenty of soap and water and respectable clothing, while many of them, just getting over long debauches, have to be taken in and nursed back to strength. As far as practicable, with the limited means at command, all this is done, but the means have been sadly lacking. The work was new to the people of New Orleans and to the State, and they have been slow to appreciate the wonderful work that is being accomplished. The burden has rested very heavily upon Bro. Haag, and both he and his wife have made many sacrifices to carry it on. Many thousands have been fed, other thousands sheltered and lodged, and clothing has been furnished to still others. It is almost needless to say that contributions of any kind, whether of money, groceries, or cast-off clothing for men, women, or children, will be thankfully received.

There have been a great many men converted at this mission who were, or at one time had been of good social standing at their homes, and many others who have in times past occupied positions of high public trust. Among these is C. T. Monroe, who passed from darkness into the glorious light of the gospel in this mission about seven months ago. He had been a mayor, an assistant prosecuting attorney, member of the Legislature, and editor of a newspaper, but strong drink had claimed him as its victim, and he frequently testifies that when he entered the doors of the mission he did not expect to see the dawning of another morning's sun, for he had in his pocket a potion bought with the full determination to be used in destroying his own life. He was certainly a physical, spiritual, and, he sometimes says, a mental wreck. It seems to those familiar with the facts that he was sent of God, for Superintendent Haag had been praying that a suitable man might be sent him to take the place of Mr. Green, who had already resigned his position as assistant superintendent. Immediately after his conversion, without knowing anything of Bro. Haag's needs, Mr. Monroe expressed his intention of engaging in mission work as soon as a favorable opening presented. The superintendent's prayer was answered. The Lord had sent a man to take the place, and now, for seven months, the two have been working together hand in hand, and in that time the Lord has given them more than seven hundred precious souls for their hire. Surely the work is of God.

The time has come when a new mission building is a necessity. Nothing fancy or extravagant is desired. It would be out of place with the class of men to be dealt with. Most of them are poor, homeless, friendless, penniless, and many of them have not changed their clothing or slept in a bed for weeks. What they need more than anything else, and what they usually first ask for, is soap and water and clean clothing. We must have a building large enough for a bath-room and laundry. Our dormitory is too small. Not a night passes but we are compelled to refuse lodging, not only to strangers, but to young converts as well. It seems hard, after telling men of the wonderful love of the Master and his care for his brethren, to turn them out on the street on a bitter cold night, shelterless, penniless, hopeless, perhaps to be arrested by a policeman and sent to jail. Oh, it is hard, and not a day passes that we do not feel how absolutely helpless we are before so much poverty, misery, degradation and wretchedness. Reader, can you not help us to carry this burden? Help us with your prayers and with your means as God has prospered you.

Steps are now being taken to organize a rescue band of Christian workers. Religious services will be held throughout the city, the sick will be nursed, the hungry fed, the naked clothed, and the gospel will be preached to the poor and those in prison.

An earnest invitation is extended to the readers of the CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE to call at the mission building, 608 Bienville street, whenever they are in the city. The assistant superintendent's office is in the building, and it will afford him pleasure to show you through all departments of the work.

DEATH OF MR. ADOLPHUS EVANS.

I learn with a sense of deep personal bereavement that my attached and honored friend, Adolphus Evans, has gone to the grave. Since the first year of my connection with the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE I have known him intimately, and sincerely loved him for his many radiant virtues. At the age of sixty-three he fell on sleep, having consecrated his entire life to the happiness and welfare of others. He never married, but was never without the care and companionship of those who were dear to him as life. A more dutiful son, or more devoted brother, or more generous friend, I never heard of, read of, or knew. Entirely without selfishness, he found genuine joy in ministering to the comfort or pleasure of family and friends. To him, as the author of "Ecce Homo" has felicitously said, "the verb 'to love' had an imperative mood." And under its sweet constraint he gave his noble, gentle, beautiful life to the enrichment and ennobling of those he knew and loved.

Few men were ever so capable of thoughtful courtesies. There was a delicacy in his kindness that evidenced at once the refined gentleman and the lofty Christian. No one ever discovered a trace of commercialism in his kindness. He never showed a courtesy with the expectation of reward, and no one ever suspected that he was thereby creating an obligation. For absolute purity of motive he ranked among the highest saints of God.

His life was as pure as it was modest and beautiful. Not among the sons of the mighty on this planet will his name appear, but in the realm where character makes coronets and royal robes are woven out of the fine fabrics of the divinest virtues, he will have conspicuous place and angelic acclaim.

He was an humble, devout Christian, with a rich experience and radiant hope. His consistent, consecrated life testified to the depth and power of his Christian faith. He loved the house of God and the fellowship of his people. And no more liberal hand ever dispensed the blessings of Christian charity.

Born in Covington, La., he came to New Orleans in young manhood, and there spent his laborious life. He was an accomplished accountant and a trusted manager of great interests. With one of the leading firms of the city he spent more than a quarter of a century, with never a question of his perfect fidelity or the slightest criticism of his business promptness, accuracy, or sagacity.

The tender care he had for his aged father was an inspired psalm of life. And his devotion to his sister—whom he adored with all the passionate ardor of a lover—is a story worthy to be written in gold and read to the generations of earth.

He died at Osyka, Miss., and was laid to rest beneath the tall pines, whose soft sighing will be a perpetual requiem to one of the purest, gentlest, noblest spirits that ever blessed the earth for awhile and then went home to God.

BY MISS SALLIE WHITE.

To our mind Tennyson's masterpiece is the "In Memoriam." But this is essentially unpopular; it is not a book for the multitude. It often requires careful and repeated reading to see its drift. To the ordinary careless reader, to any reader who insists upon having all the meaning on the surface, it would be apt to look like a series of riddles. But "In Memoriam" may be noble poetry for all that; poetry that grows upon you, whose meaning becomes fuller and richer with repeated reading, while, dip into it where you will, you find something to instruct and move, to purify and elevate. "The Idyls of the King" are by far the more popular work. But even these have their underlying, parabolic sense. They are not written for the sake of history, or the action merely, but to represent, as Tennyson himself has said, the war of sense against soul. The noble portrait of Arthur, somewhat tame and colorless as it sometimes seems—one other proof among so many of the impossibility of producing by human art a portraiture of perfect virtue that shall be as lovable as it is pure and good—this noble portrait is a sort of exterior representation of the conscience. The blameless knight, the stainless king, seems frigid and cold, because he is raised so far above the range of common passion, and fault, and sin. In spite of himself, Tennyson has made Lancelot, stained and guilty as he is, an object of far greater interest than the "flower of kings." We can not help regarding Lancelot as a magnificent creation, the soul of nobleness and chivalry, the embodiment of all that is brave and generous and truly knightly, as gentle and good, but for his deep stain, as manly and strong, holy even, in aspiration and sympathy—as witness his quest of the Holy Grail—yet, by one sin, all marred and stained, "on great pollution," and eventually, by that one sin, destroyed, too. Guinevere pleases us less as a poetic creation. She is meant to be as woman all that Lancelot is as man.

We do not speak of these poems as a whole, but only of the characters, the individual creations of the poet's fancy. How passing sweet is the story of Elaine, with her love unto the death for one who seemed the very ideal of all manly valor, and worth, and nobleness! How beautiful are the meekness and patience of Enid under such sore and wanton trial! How powerful is the painting in the character of Vivien—wily, lissome, passionate, revengeful—whose heartless love passes over in an instant to the fiercest, deadliest hate; but, with all, her selfish curiosity predominates, her hateful eagerness for a power which she covets only as an instrument of revenge! How fine are the characters of Galahad and the "holy nun" in "The Quest of the Grail"! And Pelleas, too, and Gareth, for unsuspecting truth and knightly nobleness, and manly courage and self-devotion; and, in a different vein, Sir Tristram, in the "Last Tournament."

For true sublimity we would point to the parting between Arthur and Guinevere, where the great sin has been discovered and exposed, and all the realm is thrown into confusion, and the pure, high souled king is setting out to the war against the greatest and noblest of his own knights—the author of this confusion, this dire, voiceless woe. The passage is too long to quote; perhaps its length is its defect. People do not generally make great speeches on such occasions; but, then, Arthur was not as other men. We give a part of the passage, observing only that no mere fragment can give an impression of the sustained force and beauty, the true grandeur of the entire description:

"Yet think not that I am come to urge thy crimes,
I did not come to curse thee, Guinevere,
I, whose vast pity almost makes me die
To see thee, laying there thy golden head,
My pride in happier Summers, at my feet.
The wrath which forced my thoughts on that fierce law,
The doom of treason and the flaming death
(When first I learnt thee hidden here) is past,
The pang—which while I weighed thy heart with one
Too wholly true to dream untruth in thee,
Made my tears burn—also past, in part.
And all is past, the sin is sinn'd, and I,
Lo! I forgive thee, as Eternal God
Forgives. do thou for thine own soul the rest.
But how to take last leave of all I loved?
O golden hair, with which I used to play
Not knowing! O imperial-moulded form,
And beauty such as woman never wore,
Until it came a kingdom's curse with thee—
I can not touch thy lips, they are not mine,
But Lancelot's; nay, they never were the king's.
I can not take thy hand; that too is flesh,
And in the flesh thou hast sinn'd; and mine own flesh
Here looking down on thine polluted, cries
"I loathe thee": yet not less, O Guinevere,
For I was virgin save for thee,
My love through flesh hath wrought into my life
So far, that my doom is, I love thee still.
Let no man dream but that I love thee still.
Perchance, and so thou purify thy soul,
And so thou lean on our fair Father Christ,
Hereafter in that world where all are pure
We two may meet before high God, and thou
Wilt spring to me, and claim me thine, and know
I am thine husband—not a smaller soul,
Nor Lancelot, nor another. Leave me that,
I charge thee, my last hope. Now must I hence.
. . . . . .
Farewell!
And while she grovell'd at his feet,
She felt the king's breath wander o'er her neck,
And in the darkness o'er her fallen head,
Perceived the waving of his hands that blest."

GOOD LIFE, LONG LIFE.

BY HORATIUS BONAR.

He liveth long who liveth well;
All else is life but flung away;
He liveth longest who can tell
Of true things truly done each day.

Then fill each hour with what will last
Buy up the moments as they go;
The life above, when this is past,
Is the ripe fruit of life below.

Sow love, and taste its fruitage pure;
Sow peace, and reap its harvest bright;
Sow sunbeams on the rock and moor,
And find a harvest home of light.

"WE MUST ENDOW OUR COLLEGES FOR GIRLS."

Dr. Featherstun, I have no doubt, struck a responsive chord in the heart of every daughter of Methodism in Mississippi in his recent article on the above subject. Dr. Hoss rings out a clarion note on the same subject in a pamphlet recently published at the request of the Board of Education of the M. E. Church, South. The latter, however, treats the subject more widely, taking in his range the whole Church, South, while the former brings it nearer home to our hearts and speaks for the Methodist girls of Mississippi. Women of the Methodist Church in Mississippi, are you interested in this matter? If so, let's keep the ball moving. Let's keep at these Methodist brethren until they give our girls an equal showing with our boys. So much partiality to the sons looks too much like China, or Japan, or some other country not basking in the full light of religious liberty as is our own beloved commonwealth, and is especially unworthy of our broad minded, open-armed Methodism, which is doing so much toward sending the light of the gospel to these benighted lands. Millsaps College is an abiding monument of the liberality of Mississippi Methodists in providing for the education of their boys. It may not have all it wants, or even all it needs, but it can at least stand alone, while there are five or six girls' colleges in the Mississippi and North Mississippi Conferences crawling, struggling, scrambling—I might almost say "scratching"—for an existence.

Why should these things be? Is it impossible for us to consolidate, to concentrate upon one, and to make of that one just such a college as our girls need to fit them to become the companions—life companions, I mean—of the Millsaps boys? There are girls in these five or six colleges who are most assuredly to become the future wives of these boys, and I tell you, the boys—for a considerable part Methodist preachers, who are being educated at Millsaps College—will not need wives trained by "Madam Delsarte" and "Prof. Berlin."

I am one of the "ordinary graduates" mentioned by Dr. Featherstun, and I feel the force of his argument when he says, speaking of them as teachers, "These will cost very little." They have to be content with very little to enable our colleges to stress music, art, and elocution, because these branches are the "fad" demanded by the trend of the times, and, consequently, are the paying branches. I am far from depreciating these branches. They have their place to fill in the system of education, but they can not supply the place of the more solid literary branches in expanding the mind and broadening the character. We literary teachers may teach for the love of the work, and not for the money that is in it, and some of us for the love of our "alma mater." Love for the work should be, and is, the chief incentive of every true teacher; but money is a powerful prop, even of love, and it seems to me better pay would give us more encouragement in our work, and an endowment for one of our colleges would place that college in a condition to pay better salaries, and thus to secure better work.

I am in full sympathy with the idea of establishing the same system of education in our colleges for girls as for boys. Education is the work of a life time, and a girl with three or four years at college, and half of that time devoted to the extras, can not even lay a solid foundation for her life work. I have in mind bright girls of our Methodist families of Mississippi who are destined, I believe, from the views they have of life and its responsibilities, to become shining lights in the educational world, if they can have the facilities to fit them for the places they may become capable of filling; and we, as Methodists, ought to furnish them with these facilities. They can not be secured for them by the present scrambling system of support for our girls' colleges. I do not know how long it will be in coming, but I hope the day is not far distant when the Methodist people of Mississippi will decide that one well-equipped college is better than half a dozen barely able to keep up an existence. To bring about this state of affairs an endowment fund is an essential factor. Are not some of our moneyed Methodist men and women sufficiently interested in the future welfare of our church to take this matter under consideration? It has been said that the bulwark of the future prosperity of the church is in its young people. It may be said that this prosperity is mainly in the hands of the future womanhood of the church, for the mother's influence and character is indelibly stamped upon the minds and characters of the children committed to her care. This being the case, the church needs educated girls rather than educated boys. So much the better, however, if we can have both. So long as the world stands there will be girls, and boys as well, who will take only a superficial education; but I believe our girls are awaking to the fact that being educated does not mean "playing at going to school," but that it means really earnest, hard work, and plenty of time at it; and I believe, when the standard of girls' colleges is raised to become equal to that of boys, our girls will throw aside the idea that one or two years at college is sufficient for a girl, and all that she needs to learn in that time is to finger the piano and to pose "a la Delsarte." Indeed, I believe our girls are now more ready to receive a change in the system of their education than our colleges are to give; but an endowment for one of these would place it on such a basis as to enable it to bring about the change, and the matter rests in the hands of Mississippi Methodists as to whether it shall be done.

There are members of our church in both Conferences with sufficient wealth to give ten thousand, twenty five thousand—yea, even fifty thousand—dollars for this object, and these, supplemented by smaller gifts, could be made to swell out a respectable endowment, and thus accomplish an inestimable amount of good for the future welfare of our church.

Recently, in looking over some old papers, I came across a pamphlet written by the late Dr. H. F. Johnson, and entitled, "An Appeal to All Liberal Minded People for Contributions to the Endowment of Whitworth Female College." This appeal, were it circulated now, I have no doubt, would touch a responsive chord in the hearts of many Mississippi Methodists, although almost twelve years have passed since he left us this legacy of brick and mortar—a lasting monument of his energy and zeal for the Christian education of our girls. It was written only a year or two before his death, and the pamphlet bears a cut representing Margaret Hall, the Institute, and the center building, which it was his purpose to construct in the course of time. I can not refrain from quoting some passages of the appeal.

It begins thus: "Recently two young ministers [naming two of the then young ministers of our Conference, not very old yet, however, one of them since transferred to the East Texas Conference] proposed to give one hundred dollars each toward an endowment fund of Whitworth College. The president replied that this might be the beginning of a hundred thousand dollars' endowment. This appeal is sent forth, after much deliberation, to accomplish this object."

And now, I ask, why may we not take up the work where he left it off and accomplish the object?

Again he says: "Is an endowment necessary for a male college or university? For Yale, or Vanderbilt, or Emory, or Centenary [and I add, or Millsaps?]? If so, why not for a college for women? Is their education less important? . . . To secure the permanency of a college, the best teaching talent, the wisest and most approved methods, to pass through financial crises which sometimes occur, to advance a college to a high position and keep abreast with the best school, an endowment is a necessity. No first-class school, or any school, should be dependent upon the life and labors of one man. It is true that a college may succeed for a time through the energy and self-sacrificing spirit of a band of devoted teachers, wise management, favorable surroundings, and other concurring causes, but schools which last through centuries, bless succeeding generations, and give tone and character to a people, must be richly endowed. No well-informed person gainsays this."

After recounting, but not in a boastful spirit, what has been done for Whitworth in the way of buildings erected, he says: "If so much has been done without contributions from the public at large, what can be done by the friends of the college, now numbered by thousands?

"Firm, united, let us be,
Rallying round—

Our Whitworth, and the good work will soon be done. Yes, an endowment is possible. It can be, it must be secured."

Let us take up this refrain, and ring it out loud and clear throughout the bounds of our Mississippi and North Mississippi Conferences, and keep it ringing until its echoes shall reverberate to the tune of dollars by the thousand for the higher education of our Methodist girls in Mississippi.

This appeal is closed by special appeals, first, to the women of the South for their aid toward increasing the educational facilities for their sex; then an appeal to the alumnæ of the college in these words: "You know something of the work done here and the results. If you will give your attention to this matter by seeing your friends and neighbors, and asking for contributions, you can endow the college within twelve months, and thereby bless succeeding generations."

Alumnæ of Whitworth College, will you heed this voice from the dead?

And finally the appeal is "to all." "Let there be one female college in the Southwest [we say in Mississippi] placed upon an enduring basis, not dependent upon the life and labors of one man or set of men, and not liable to fail on account of some common trial or vicissitude. Let Whitworth be like the tree planted by the rivers of water, which bringeth forth its fruit in its season, and whose leaf does not fade."

Oh, that this appeal may stir the hearts of our people to action in this matter!

Our college is at present more prosperous than it has been for years. The buildings are being constantly improved with fresh paint, and the premises are putting on a new, fresh appearance by having neat picket fences placed everywhere needed, so that our former pupils and friends visiting us are scarcely able to recognize the place. Already between six and seven thousand dollars' worth of improvements have been put on the buildings and premises within the past four years, and still the good work goes on. All we need to keep this state of things going on, and to place the improvements on a solid basis, is an endowment fund. Friends of the college, let's say we will have it.

ADDIE V. MARSHALL.

TOO STRICT EXAMINATIONS.

Dr. Geo. G. Smith, in the last Nashville Advocate, in speaking of his visit to the South Carolina Conference, has this to say: "I was busy trying to turn an honest penny, and make a few shekels, but not too busy to peep in and see how Bishop Duncan did his work. When a good brother, studious and useful and gifted, had been turned back by a committee, this old college professor, now Bishop, suggested that perhaps we were overdoing the matter in our demand for a written and entirely satisfactory examination, and, without reflecting on the committee at all, he suggested that a good deal of latitude under certain circumstances might be wisely allowed. In this I need not say I was fully at one with the Bishop. I think our committees have too much power, and are too exacting in many cases, and I wish the Conference, as a body, had a right to reject the report and call for another examination."

Bishop Duncan and Dr. Smith are correct in their views on this important subject. Very worthy young men are in danger of being discouraged by punctilious committees. There is room for the exercise of sound judgment in the preparation of the questions propounded, and of a liberal interpretation of the answers given by the young men. Questions can be so framed as to puzzle and bring failure to one who has faithfully studied the course and has practically made it his own. If the tables were turned, it is possible that the examined, by dexterously framing their questions, might bring discomfiture upon the committee. Our young men who have faithfully studied the books should be given every possible chance, and not be turned back by too great regard for exactness of execution.

Now, that pays the Choctaw preacher his salary for 1897, $75, and pays $15 to Bro. J. H. Holland, white missionary, to supplement his salary, and leaves in the treasury for the year 1898, $7; and I have this day received for 1898 from Hon. T. N. Nowell $2 50, which will be $9 50 in the treasury for this year up to date.

Many, many thanks, and an earnest prayer to God for all that helped us.

And now, brethren and sisters, friends of the mission, we are planning and working for greater success this year than we have ever had. We have an active, wide-awake and thoroughly consecrated man on the mission that is to give all his time to the Indian Mission alone. He is to travel and preach to the Indians and also to the whites, taking collections for the mission to buy land and pay expenses generally—to wit, Rev. J. N. Tucker, of the Mississippi Conference. I hope and feel sure you will all receive him gladly and help him in the very important work, and be assured every dollar will be spent for the glory of God and the salvation of the Indians according to our best judgment. We also continue Bro. Jim Johnston (Choctaw preacher) as his assistant. Pray for the work and help us.

The Board continued me as the agent for the mission, to whom you will send money as before, or hand it to Bro. Tucker, or your pastor, who will send it to me.

Brethren and sisters, pay and pray for the work. Send money to me by postoffice order, express order, or registered letter, to Hermanville, Claiborne county, Miss.

I liked to have forgotten to say one of the best parts of this report: Bro. W. A. Gunning presented the Choctaw preacher with a very good overcoat. God bless Bro. Gunning!

TO THE AUXILIARIES OF THE W. P. AND H. M. SOCIETY, LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

DEAR FRIENDS: Another year has closed its record, and we have again commenced to write our deeds upon the first pages of a new book. As with grateful hearts we return thanks to our heavenly Father for mercies bestowed and dangers averted, we would ask a special blessing upon this part of the Master's vine yard—this branch of the work for Christ. Our hearts are sad because we miss from the roll of membership a name that we, as a society, so much loved and honored. Miss Lucinda B. Helm, the founder of our organization, and for a long time its chief executive officer, has gone to her reward. As editor of Our Homes for the past six years, she has so endeared herself to the women of our church and country, and the holy influence of her consecrated pen has so upheld and strengthened every department of this great work, that each and all feel they have sustained a personal loss. But if we would honor the memory of this true friend and noble woman, we must bear upon our minds and hearts the fulfillment of her last request. In the December number of Our Homes, and the last from her hand, she entreats and urges that ten thousand names be added to the subscription list of the paper before the close of this fiscal year. Shall we not render this tribute to her memory? It will mean "a voice in ten thousand Methodist homes pleading the cause of the needy, the ignorant, and the lost in our land." Let each member of every auxiliary in our Conference feel a sense of personal obligation and responsibility to act as volunteer agents in this cause, and thus help to fulfill this last request of our beloved leader.

February 6 has been set apart as Loan Fund Day, and the contributions on that occasion will be devoted to the "Lucinda B. Helm Loan Fund." Two hundred and fifty dollars of the one thousand necessary for this fund have been paid into the treasury, and all must and will unite to finish this "monument to her labors for Methodism." These loan funds for parsonages are permanent funds, not to be given away by the society, but loaned upon approved security, where they can do most good, to be repaid in easy installments, with interest at six per cent.

Dr. Morrison, speaking of the loan fund, says: "It never wearies in well doing. Ever giving, yet never exhausted; toiling ever, yet never tired; a sort of everlasting benediction; an immortal 'Good Samaritan,' with wine, oil and bandages for the bleeding and helpless parsonages of the land. It is a sort of financial angel flying through mid-heaven, preaching the everlasting gospel. Every dollar that goes into its treasury becomes imperishable. It lives for all time and lives for God. If you would make your money immortal, cast it in here. It will work on and on after you have ceased to work, and will come back to you with exceeding increase in eternity."

At the last executive meeting, held in Carondelet Street Church, the resignation of Mrs. S. King as Conference treasurer was received and accepted with regret. Mrs. S. A. Montgomery, a most efficient and active member of our society, was unanimously elected to fill the vacancy. Her address is 1422 Webster street. The next annual meeting of our Conference society will be held in Lafayette, La., some time in March—the exact date to be decided later.

And now, dear friends, as we stand upon the threshold of a new year, with its unknown duties and trials, let us strive more earnestly, and with greater diligence, to do the Master's work. Let us emulate the zeal and love which prompted Miss Helm to say: "There is no time for speculation on questions that make no essential difference concerning the present or the hereafter. Our religion is a matter of life and death, and the world is perishing for the want of Christian help. Let us reach out hands in blessing; let us lose no time in our service for Christ."

THE OPEN PATH OF DUTY.

"Mary . . . seeth the stone taken away from the sepulcher." This stone had worried the women as they hurried toward the grave. They knew it was there, that it was too heavy for them with their frail hands to roll away, and they wondered how they could get it removed. But now, when they came in sight of the tomb, Mary looked up and saw that the stone was rolled aside.

The incident illustrates many experiences in our common life. We worry about difficulties and obstacles which lie in our path and seem to block our progress. But when we move on obediently and come to the place of the supposed hindrance or obstacle, it is gone, or it was never there save in our imagination. We all know that many of our anxieties prove in the end to be really groundless. We ought to learn here, once for all, the lesson that when God sends us anywhere he intends to make it possible for us to go. Duty's path always opens for us as we go on—not before we start, but as we obey and move forward. Yet we must not expect there will never be difficulties to meet nor obstacles to surmount. God never has promised that. Too easy a path is often a bane in life, not a blessing. The difficulties and obstacles which remain may be made stepping stones by which we shall rise to higher things.—J. R. Miller, D. D.

A GREAT MAN.

I believe that the first test of a truly great man is his humility. I do not mean by humility doubt of his own power, hesitation of speaking his opinions, but a right understanding of the relation between what he can do and say, and the rest of the world's sayings and doings. All great men not only know their business, but usually know that they know it; they are not only right in their main opinions, but they usually know that they are right in them; only they do not think much of themselves on that account. Amalfi knows that he can build a good dome at Florence; Albert Durer writes calmly to one who has found fault with his work, "It can not be better done;" Sir Isaac Newton knows that he has worked out a problem or two that would have puzzled any body else; only they do not expect their fellowmen, therefore, to fall down and worship them. They have a curious under-sense of powerlessness, feeling that the greatness is not in them, but through them—that they could not do or be anything else than God made them; and they see something divine and God-made in every man they meet, and are endlessly, foolishly, incredibly merciful.—Ruskin.

What an immense lot of overloaded people there are in this world! We can see it in their care-worn faces, and each one thinks his burden is the heaviest. There is a certain kind of care that is wise; a man who has no forethought for the future is a sluggard or a fool. The apostle had no reference to a wise thoughtfulness for the future when he said, "Cast all your care upon him, for he careth for you." That much-perverted verse is accurately translated in the Revised Version—"casting all your anxiety on him because he careth for you." Now, just what our almighty and all-loving Father offers is—to help us carry our loads. He who watched over the infant deliverer of Israel in his cradle of rushes, who sent his ravens to feed Elijah by the brook-side, who protected Daniel in the den, and kept Paul calm and cheerful in the hurricane, is the very One who says to us, Roll your anxieties over on me, for I have you on my heart!—Theodore L. Cuyler, D. D.

FROM THE WORK.

Rev. James M. Martin, Delhi, La., Jan. 22, 1898: "At the late session of the Louisiana Conference Bishop Hendrix saw fit to assign me to this place, where, last year, I served as junior preacher under the Rev. J. B. Cassity. I now have this place and Midway. I have received a hearty welcome back by all denominations, and also the Jews. I am pleased with the outlook. I expect to bring up full collections, and to advance the grand old Methodist Church in all lines, by the help of the Lord. My presiding elder, Bro. B. F. White, has moved here recently. Everyone seems delighted with his making his home here. I shall not neglect the ADVOCATE among my other duties. Every Methodist home should be a regular subscriber to the Conference organ of their church. We should see to this, as pastors, that every Methodist has an opportunity of subscribing for the church organ. Let the side-issue papers, Methodist so called, which tend to confusion and strife alone, and preach loyalty to our people, and our papers, recognized as church organs, will prosper as they should."

Rev. J. N. Tucker, Toles P. O., Kemper county, Miss.: "As the readers of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE know, that through the earnest and persistent efforts of Bro. A. D. Miller and others, six years ago the Mississippi Annual Conference undertook to carry the gospel to the Indians who reside in its territorial limits; in pursuance of which Bro. W. W. Cammack was appointed to this work for four years, during which time he succeeded in convincing many of them of the sincerity of our motive, and organized one or more churches, and doing other essential work among them. At the expiration of his pastorate among them the mission was added to an adjoining circuit, and put in the charge of Bro. B. F. Ormond. At the ensuing Conference Bro. J. H. Holland was appointed to the circuit and mission. Under the pastorate of these three brethren some fifty souls from among the Indians were added to the Lord and to our church, several of whom have been called to their reward, dying triumphant Christian deaths. During the last two years, however, it became evident to those intimately related to the work among our Indian friends that, to make it a success, it were essential to appoint to the mission alone a preacher whose entire time shall be given to it and its interests. This course having been recommended by the late session of our Conference, Bishop A. W. Wilson appointed me to this peculiar field of labor, in regard to which I wish to state that it meets with my unqualified approval. In return for what God has done for me, I feel there can no people too humble for me to serve, no self-denial too great to undergo, or no sacrifice too dear for me to offer to him. Thus counting myself happy of an opportunity to render to God a service, however humble it may prove, in trying to bring to God those for whom Christ died, I address myself to the work. The sincere desire of my heart and prayer to God is to make the mission a grand success. But in order to do so, it will be essential that the friends of the enterprise give it their sympathies, prayers, and financial support. It will be well to bear in mind the fact that it is not my enterprise, but that of the Mississippi Conference, and I their representative. As intimated before, I am willing to yield myself and my all a living sacrifice upon this altar, if, by so doing, the people will be brought to God; for surely its progenitors and friends will not withhold from it any good thing.' In conclusion, let me urge all to constantly pray for us, and at any time should you be moved by the Holy Spirit to contribute to its support and development, you need not wait for us to call on you, but send your remittance by registered mail, or money order, to Rev. J. O. Miller, Hermanville, Miss., or to me by registered mail to Toles, Kemper county, Miss.; or, if money order, on Meridian postoffice, Miss. More anon."

SOUTH SIDE AND POPLAR SPRING.

Our new Conference year at this charge began auspiciously. Our League and Sunday-school are improving. Every department of the South Side League is organized, and a junior came into existence last Sabbath, eager to work. The Missionary Society is doing well. The Poplar Spring Church will be seated and, perhaps, ceiled soon. Some of the South Side members have paid the subscriptions on their church-building debt; $125 has been paid in all and about $200 is still due. The most of this is covered by subscriptions. The following amounts have been paid since Conference: $5 by C. C. Easterling; $2.50 by W. D. Hawkins; $5 by C. C. Dunn, and $2.50 by J. B. Ormond. We are to begin a meeting March 20, Rev. Ira F. Hawkins preaching.

HOSPITABLE PONTOTOC.

I have just read an article in the ADVOCATE with the caption, "Historic Pontotoc," and, as pastor of the church here, I wish to speak a few words concerning hospitable Pontotoc.

Myself and family arrived here on Tuesday night before Christmas Day. The rain was falling, and it was a dismal, dark night; but we were met at the depot by two of Pontotoc's fine young men—Dr. C. D. Fontaine and Bro. Lee Thomasson, bank clerk, both stewards in the church. They had a closed carriage in readiness for us, and, having entered it, we were swiftly conveyed to one of the most elegant homes in our little city, where we were kindly entertained for the night. Since getting into the parsonage we have had no storm or cyclone, but gentle breezes have been continually blowing, bringing the substantials of life.

We have started out well upon our new work. Held a Church Conference last Sunday night, and the house was crowded to hear our interesting program, which consisted of speeches and papers from different members of the church on live and vital topics, such as temperance, etc. The congregation was entertained and profited for nearly two hours, and all went away well pleased.

Our church needs repairing, and we are trying to raise money for that purpose. We are also in need of spiritual repairs, and expect to begin a revival some time in April, and are praying for a Holy-Ghost baptism at that time. We trust in God, and the baptism of power is coming. Pray for us.

CARROLLTON, MISS.

Saturday and Sunday last the Quarterly Conference for the Methodist Church, Carrollton, was held. Rev. J. B. Stone, P. E., preached to a good-sized audience Saturday, at 11 o'clock A. M. At 3 P. M. the Conference met. The report of the preacher, Rev. H. T. Cunningham, showed that the Sunday-school and Epworth League were well organized and doing a good work, and the general state of the church was good.

The stewards made a very satisfactory report of the temporal business of the church. All claims for the past year had been paid in full, and some with a good excess. The pastor's salary was advanced one hundred dollars more than it has heretofore been. The preacher, officers and members seem hopeful of a successful year's work.

Sunday was a beautiful day, and the people generally attended worship. There were fifty-five present at Sunday-school, and at 11 o'clock Mr. Stone preached a very comforting sermon to a large congregation. After the sermon the sacrament of the Lord's Supper was administered, almost the entire audience partaking thereof. The love-feast at three o'clock was a very spiritual occasion, and at 7 P. M. Mr. Stone again preached to a large congregation. All these services were attended and greatly enjoyed, not by Methodists alone, but by our people generally. The fellowship existing among the different churches of Carrollton is most delightful, and has been noticed and commended by Bros. Cunningham and Whitfield, our two new pastors this year.—Carrollton, Miss., Conservative.

MILLSAPS COLLEGE.

During the recent session of the Mississippi Annual Conference, which convened at Jackson, Miss., I was pleasantly domiciled on the site of the campus of Millsaps College, at the home of Miss Annie Linfield, a daughter of the sainted Linfield, of the Mississippi Conference, whom it was not my pleasure to have met, but have often heard him kindly spoken of as one of the pioneers and a leading preacher of our beloved Mississippi Methodism.

Miss Annie Linfield has charge of one of the boarding departments for Millsaps boys. Sister Annie has charge of ten boys. Now, I think I know what I speak, for I assure you I don't think you will find a more studious, obedient and quiet set of boys anywhere. Indeed, the boys in her care are not only fed well, but are kindly cared for in every other way necessary. Besides Sister Annie's kind attention, behold Prof. Muckinfuss, who sits at the head of the table, and his beautiful wife by his side. He and wife, with their intellectual looks, pleasant smiles and words, add no little to the benefit and pleasure of the boys, for they are all fond of them. In short, the intellectual and religious surroundings can not, doubtless, be surpassed.

It was my pleasure to be conducted by Prof. Muckinfuss through the various departments of Science Hall, where I saw some things that I knew and some things that I did not know anything about; hence I will not try to tell you what I saw and heard by my guide; even what I know, for four I will try to tell something that I don't know. But I will tell you a few things that I do know. I know that President Murrah and all concerned mean business, and I know that it did me good to see the boys "down to their knitting," and that their opportunities are almost unlimited. I am glad the people are welcoming my return to Energy mission. May God bless us all! Pray for us.

INDIAN MISSION.

On last Friday evening I reached my destination (the Indian Mission). Owing to enfeebled health, inclement weather and bad roads, I could not arrive sooner, having traveled in my buggy a distance of one hundred and eighty-two miles. As I did not come at once, some of our Indian brethren supposed the "anompishe chitto eley" (pronounced uh-nom-pish-a-chitto e-ley), which means preacher big dead (as he no come). The local preacher is little, and the preacher in charge big preacher. The peculiarity of their language is said to lie in the fact that most everything is spoken backward. Instead of "big preacher dead," they have "preacher big dead," etc.

Yesterday we held our first public devotional exercise, which was attended by at least twenty-five Indians and four white brethren and friends. Our Indian brethren seemed to be perfectly happy over the arrival of their preacher. They sing well in English and in Choctaw, using our own hymn book and also "New Life."

After holding our prayer meeting, they incidentally (shall I not say, providentially?) selected the song, "He leadeth me," which thrilled my soul as it never did before. The idea that God was then leading me in this my new field of labor! When sung, I read the Scripture lessons in English (of course), and Bro. Jim Johnson, our Indian local preacher, read them in Choctaw. After a second hymn I took for my text, and tried to preach from Heb. xi, 6. I told them as best I could that all men worshiped some God, and the difference between other religions and ours is that our God is a living God, who can do all things; is present everywhere, and is willing to give everybody help, thus rewarding them who diligently seek him. During my efforts to preach, the power of the gospel to reach the human heart was clearly demonstrated in that one good woman, Sister Brokeshoulder, who does not understand English, when the Spirit was consciously present, would be moved to tears as though she understood everything. Having finished my talk I had Bro. Johnson to speak in Choctaw. My white brethren who heard him said he made a splendid talk. After which I asked all who would promise to be my friend and pray for me, and help me to do good, to give me their hand. And to my pleasant surprise nearly everyone, including the children down to five years of age, came and shook my hand. We then bowed down upon our knees, and was led in prayer by a brother Choctaw in English. In the course of his prayer he thanked God that he had heard their prayer, and had sent a preacher to preach to the red man; that he may be saved as well as the white man. Arising from our knees, many of their eyes and cheeks were bathed in tears, and more especially the one who prayed.

Our service having been finished, I organized them into a Church Conference, had their names called, noting those who were present, each one answering to his or her name. On nomination a secretary was elected, and, after the reading and approval of the Minutes, the first Church Conference, I am told, ever held by our Choctaw brethren was closed with the benediction.

One thing which impressed me much was their desire to have me notice their children. And with what joy they would tell me that their children belonged to the church—holding in their simplicity the grand truth of the gospel, that to be baptized is to become a member of the visible church of Christ. And what a rebuke I thought it should be to parents who, through social or ecclesiastical influences, withhold their children from baptism, thereby depriving them of the blessing of this grace. May we yet see the day when our Methodist fraternity, to say nothing of other communions, will joyfully yield up their children a living sacrifice to God, and secure for them in its fullness the blessing of his grace!

Let everyone who reads this pray a special prayer for the success of our mission among the Indians.

Stolen Kisses.

Young men do not try to steal kisses from girls who are sallow and sickly. There is a book containing over a thousand pages and three hundred illustrations, that every young woman and every mother of young daughters should read. It tells in plain, every day language that anyone can understand, many vital truths that every maid, wife and mother should know. It tells the untold suffering and agony that women endure who enter upon the important duties of wifehood and motherhood without seeing to it that they are strong and well in a womanly way.

It tells about a wonderful medicine for women. A medicine that fits for wifehood and motherhood. A marvelous medicine that gives strength, vigor, vitality and elasticity to the delicate and important feminine organs that bear the brunt of maternity. It contains the names, addresses and photographs of many hundreds of women who were weak, sickly, nervous, fretful, childless wives, but who are now healthy, happy, amiable wives and mothers, through the use of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. That book is Dr. Pierce's Common Sense Medical Adviser. It used to cost $1.50, now it is free. Send 21 one-cent stamps, to cover mailing only for a paper-covered copy. Fine French cloth binding, 10 cents extra. Address Dr. R. V. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y.

"During the fall and winter of 1894 I was engaged in teaching at Public School No. 31, in Smith Co., near Tyler, Texas," writes Mr. J. F. Sneed, of Omen, Texas. "During this time my wife was badly afflicted with female weakness. We tried three of the best physicians in the county without benefit to my wife's health, but at great expense. My wife grew worse and we gave up in despair. She could not get in and out of doors without help. She was not able to stand on her feet long at a time, and complained of dragging down pains in the abdomen. Nothing but an untimely death seemed awaiting her. I wrote to Dr. Pierce for his advice. My wife took Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription and in six months was completly cured, at a cost of less than one month's treatment by the last physician we employed before consulting Dr. Pierce."

"Why fret thee, soul.
For things beyond thy small control?
Do but thy part, and then shalt see
Heaven will have charge of these and thee:
Sow thou the seed and wait in peace."

The right time to be a Christian is all the time.

A skeptic is a man who puts out the light and then growls because he has to walk in the dark.

Do not be afraid of enthusiasm. To every one soul that needs the rein of discretion, there are ninety-nine that need the spur of zeal.

The easiest preaching in the world is that which is made up of coarse invective. It requires neither brains, culture, piety, nor study. Selah.

He is rich who hath enough to be charitable, and it is hard to be so poor that a noble mind may not find a way to that piece of goodness.—Sir Thos. Browne.

The lives of many professed Christians prove to the world that they do not believe what the Bible teaches as to the life beyond the grave.—Standard.

Nothing in human life can afford a liberal mind more rational and exquisite satisfaction than the approbation of a wise, a great, and a virtuous man.—Treasury.

The only faith that wears well and holds its color in all weathers is that which is woven of conviction and set with the sharp mordant of experience.—J. R. Lowell.

At twenty he wonders how one small head can carry all he knows; at sixty he marvels that how he could have passed through such a world as this and learned so little.

The best way to get rid of an enemy is to burn him out with kindness. This disposes of the enmity and at the same time benefits instead of injuring the man.—Selected.

The meeting of your obligations in office, store, parlor, or kitchen is as much a part of your religious life as is prayer, or reading the Word, or attendance upon the services of the sanctuary.

It is a pleasant sight to see anybody thanking God, for the air is heavy with the hum of murmuring, and the roads are dusty with complaints and lamentations.—C. H. Spurgeon.

If you prepare a dish of food carelessly, you do not expect Providence to make it palatable; neither if, through years of folly, you misguide your own life, need you expect divine interference to bring round everything at last as if you had done right.—John Ruskin.

MAKE THE CHURCH ATTRACTIVE.

It speaks well for modern Christianity that so much attention is being paid to the comfort and adornment of its houses of worship. Unshapely, uncomfortable and ill constructed churches are fast giving place to handsome and well arranged ones, where the worshiper is not forced to do penance while he worships. And this is as it should be. Congregations that neglect or refuse to erect church-buildings in keeping with their means and with the progress of the age do not deserve either temporal or spiritual success.

While this is an era of church building, and while costly church edifices are being reared in many places over the country, we fear that after the churches are finished far too little attention is paid to keeping them comfortable and attractive. We are not in favor of extravagance in church building or in church furnishings, but we are decidedly of the opinion that money spent in making our houses of worship neat and inviting is money well spent. Visitors and new-comers to a town judge very largely of the zeal and standing of a particular denomination by the form and appearance of its house of worship. No wonder that strangers are ofttimes repelled when they see the sanctuary bearing all the marks of neglect.

The care that is taken of a church, whether new or old, is a partial index to the zeal and spirituality of its membership. To erect a commodious and tasteful building, and then take no pains to keep it in order, is a short-sighted and hurtful policy. Many congregations, however, seem to think that the house of God can take care of itself. Consequently it gets out of repair, leaks go unstopped, the paint nearly all wears off, the benches break down, the stoves wear out, and every proposal for renovation and improvement is met by the hackneyed cry of "Hard times," or the shameful answer: "We must not be extravagant. What we have is good enough."

While the average church is well built, it can not be said that all, or even a majority of the churches, are well kept. There is far too little attention paid to the heating, lighting, ventilation and general comfort of church-buildings. These things are often attended to in a slip-shod, or haphazard way, greatly to the discomfort of the worshipers. The faithful few will attend in spite of such discomfort; but when the average worshiper knows that he will have to endure dirt, smoke, cold and general cheerlessness, he is pretty sure either to remain at home or to go to a more inviting church. If the club houses and theatres were as uncomfortable and unattractive as many of our churches are, they would lose a large share of their patronage. "The children of this world are wiser in their generation than the children of light." Every church ought to compare favorably in neatness, comfort and elegance with the best houses in the community. Looking after cleanliness, heating, attractiveness, etc., may seem like trifles to some; but trifles such as we have mentioned keep a large number of people away from church.

We hope there will be a general and genuine revival this year throughout our boarders in the matter of the care of churches. See to it that the sexton does his duty. If the church needs it, put on a fresh coat of paint.

Beauty of adornment and attractiveness of furnishings, however, will not draw outsiders to a church where the members are unsocial, unfriendly and exclusive.

Good music has a mighty drawing power, but let it not fall into the hands of the frivolous and worldly, else it will hardly be productive of the best spiritual results. True spirituality is a mighty magnet. Wherever God is truly honored and his presence genuinely manifested in an earnest and tender love for humanity, there the children of men are likely to gather in great numbers.

We have made a rule at the Arkansas Methodist office that only the subscribers who are paid up have a right to criticise the paper. If the paper were never so worthless, it would yet be better than is deserved by anybody who takes it and don't pay for it.—Arkansas Methodist.

A PERPETUAL REVIVAL.

At the recent session of the Mississippi Conference one pastor (there may have been more than one) reported a revival on his charge that lasted all the year, there being conversions and accessions to the church each Sunday during the year, with two or three exceptions. Dr. John Mathews, pastor of Centenary Church, St. Louis, reports converts and new members for nearly every service he holds. This is a long way in advance of the state of things in most charges, and is almost the high-water mark of church life. It is undoubtedly an indication of vigorous life, earnest faith, and aggressive effort. Moreover, it exposes the fallacy of the notion that revivals are possible only occasionally, at stated intervals, as the result of special effort.

It will be a glorious day when our people everywhere come to see the folly of depending so largely upon protracted and camp meetings to keep the church revived, and for winning new members to the church and to God's kingdom. The truth is, that for a large part of the time the most of our church members relax their spiritual energies and slacken their efforts, unwisely supposing that nothing can be done in the way of converting people and getting them into the church except at special times and seasons, when an evangelist or some noted preacher is present to bring down fire from heaven. Because of their lack of faith and co-operation, their pastor finds his hands tied, as it were, and so about all he attempts in many instances is to keep the church together.

For obvious reasons it may not be possible for every church to exhibit results such as we mentioned in the outset. So few of the members may be pious that the pastor and the faithful are not able to overcome the indifference and inconsistencies of the others. The community may be peculiarly immoral or indifferent, or, again, there may be little material left to work upon. Making allowances for these and other considerations, it is nevertheless true that most churches are sadly derelict in the matter of keeping up the fight against sin and Satan all the year. What has been done by a few pastors and churches can and ought to be done by multitudes of others, provided there is earnest, persistent, intelligent effort. God is always ready to co-operate with us, and give us the aid of his Spirit, if we are ready to receive him and co-operate with him in the work of redeeming the world.

It believers would be as fervent in prayer and earnest in labor at all times as many of them are during "revival seasons," revivals would be continuous, and not occasional. Since so large a number neither expect nor pray for visible results at each service, it is no wonder that little is accomplished. A church ought to be in good working trim all the time. Who would think much of a manufacturing enterprise that turns out products only during a few days or a few weeks of the year? To leave the settlement of difficulties, the reclamation of backsliders, and the conversion of sinners entirely to a week or more of revival effort, is like attempting to do a whole year's family washing at one time. Better a steady pace during the whole twelve months than unusual methods and high-pitched, but short lasting enthusiasm.

Success in maintaining a revival spirit and movement depends upon several conditions. It is not all the work of the pastor, nor all the work of the people, "for we are all members one of another, and we, being many, are one body in Christ." Unless there is faith, zeal, and unity on the part of the membership, a perpetual revival is out of the question.

Let the aim all along the line be to have a revival that shall know no cessation, no relaxation, no backward tendency. Let the motto in every church be, "All at work, and always at work." God will undoubtedly bless our work and honor our prayers if we labor steadfastly in the way he has appointed. Faith in God, patience in toil, and continuance in prayer, will inevitably produce, not transient, but permanent and far reaching results. With the help of God every charge can be brought up to the high level of spiritual fervor and activity of a perpetual revival. "Be ye steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord."

VANDERBILT UNIVERSITY AND INTER-COLLEGIATE FOOTBALL.

At the last meeting of the Board of Trust of Vanderbilt University, held during the commencement last Summer, the following resolutions were introduced by Bishop J. C. Keener:

Whereas, Inter collegiate gymnastic contests have come to a plane of influence highly mischievous to the moral, social and educational well-being of the youth of this country; therefore, be it

Resolved, 1, That the Vanderbilt University withdraws from all such fields of contest, and hereby determines that all athletic games of its students shall be brought entirely within its own campus. And that in these games no other persons shall be allowed to take part but those who are connected with the university either as professors or students.

Resolved, 2, That any professor or student who shall directly or indirectly violate the letter or the spirit of this order of the Board of Trust, shall be discontinued from all connection with this institution.

These resolutions were defeated by a majority of one, but were referred to a committee which is expected to report at the next annual meeting of the Board. The personelle of the committee is as follows: Bishop J. C. Granbery, Bishop E. R. Hendrix, Bishop J. S. Key, Hon. W. C. Ratcliffe, and Major R. W. Millsaps.

That the report of this committee will be in line with Bishop Keener's resolutions we do not doubt in the least. But it is passing strange to us that a Board of which all our Bishops are members, together with a number of prominent and influential ministers and laymen, should think it necessary to wait a year before taking such action. Whatever may be said about football itself, inter collegiate football has not one single feature to recommend it. All our church schools from the highest to the lowest ought to taboo it at once.

If Bishop Keener's resolutions had been adopted, the church would have been in the lead on this question. As it is, no matter what action may be taken at the next Vanderbilt commencement, the church will get no credit for it, for the reason that she will be at the rear end of the procession. The heathenish thing has been condemned at the bar of public opinion. Many of the leading secular papers have spoken against it in thunder tones. Some States ahead have prohibited it. The United States government will have none of it in her schools at West Point and Annapolis. The church is put in a pitiable attitude when she follows instead of leading public opinion in a matter of this sort.

If there is one single thing to be said in favor of the perpetuation of these intercollegiate contests, our columns are open to any member of the Vanderbilt Board who wishes to become their champion.

MINISTERIAL SUCCESS.

Now that so many of our readers are entering upon a new Conference year, it seems in place to say, by way of gentle reminder, that ministerial success can not be altogether gauged by the size of the congregation, or the salary, or even by the number of converts reported, or the amount of benevolent money raised. For all these things may be affected by influences quite beyond the control of the toiler. He who seems to human eyes to fail may really succeed, according to the heavenly estimate. To do one's best with utmost conscientiousness, severely faithful, not sparing labor, lavish of self, loyal to all one's light, dead in earnest for the glory of God and the good of men—is not this success, no matter what comes of it? It is something open to all, whether in large stations or small.—Zion's Herald.

Lincoln, Neb., was the first city to adopt the curfew law, about two years ago. Omaha, Denver, Kansas City, Des Moines, Topeka and Evanston, Ill., are among the larger cities which have followed. The testimony in favor of the innovation is strong. The chief of police of St. Joseph, Mo., says that seven-eighths of the people give it their sincere approval. There has been a reduction of 50 per cent. in commitments to the Reform School from that city.—Times-Democrat.

An exchange says that "a Presbyterian Church was about to elect elders, and when a brother was named for the office a lady objected, on the ground that he did not take a church paper. In her view a man who did not take and read a denominational paper had not sufficient intelligence, or had not the interest in denominational affairs to fit him for the service of the eldership." That was a sensible woman, and her view was certainly correct. When men are made office-bearers in the church who do not take sufficient interest in its welfare to take and read their church paper to inform themselves in regard to the work of the church, what can be expected of them, and the society they represent, but failure? If men will not support the institutions of the church, they should not be placed in any official position to manage the affairs of the church.—Methodist Recorder.

Individuals are largely influenced by what they read, and the conversation they hear. It enters into the very life and finds expression. First, in their words; second, in their actions, and, third, in the very expression of the countenance. How careful then should we be in the selection of the literature we read and the company we keep! "Of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh."—Rev. J. G. Reed.

Hard times show us what people can do without, and what is really necessary. One by one the luxuries are lopped off. Then, too, when we are usually busy we find ourselves leaving undone what we do not regard as essential. The test of a thing's value in our eyes, or its lack of value, is the ease with which it can be spared.—Young People's Weekly.

The bitterest tears shed over graves are for words left unsaid and deeds left undone. "She never knew how I loved her." "He never knew what he was to me." "I always meant to make more of our friendship." Such words are the poisoned arrows which cruel death shoots backward at us from the sepulchre.—H. B. Stowe.

The man who sung and shouted at the revival meeting and then went home and scolded his wife for letting the fire go out, grumbled the next morning because his coffee did not suit him, and was ready to shout again at the next service, is the sort of a man who is an offense to all good people.—Baltimore Advocate.

The January-February number of our Review lies on our table. We have been so very busy since it came that we have had time to read only one article in it, viz.: "The Apocalypse of Jesus Christ, the King of Glory. The Lord Mighty in Battle. By Bishop J. C. Keener." This production represents the thought and the research of years, and is a real masterpiece. So long as the Review can secure contributions of this calibre it will not lack readers in the cultured circles of Methodism. We may have more to say of this number of the Review later on.

Our news columns, in last week's issue, gave the names of the members of the new State Board of Health, recently appointed by Gov. Foster. In this week's issue we produce the Times-Democrat's cut and sketch of one of the appointees, Dr. Luther Sexton, who is known to many of our readers personally, and to all of them through his vigorous pen, which has sometimes graced our columns. We congratulate the State of Louisiana, and especially the people of this city, upon his selection for this responsible position. As for the Doctor himself, congratulations are not in order. So far as dollars and cents are concerned, he will be a loser.

By invitation we attended, a few days since, the annual meeting of the New Orleans W. C. T. U. There was quite a good attendance. The president, Mrs. Alice Zabie, was in the chair, and presided with her usual dignity and grace. Reports were read from all the superintendents of departments. These reports show that a considerable amount of work has been done along various lines. The exercises were varied by appropriate music and recitations. Brief impromptu talks were made by Revs. G. D. Parker and R. E. Steele. Captain Winterbottom, of the Salvation Army, also made a few remarks and sang some Army songs. The Countess di Brazza also made a short address in the interest of the Woman's National Council. Mrs. Zabie was re elected president; Mrs. S. S. Bothick, recording secretary; Mrs. M. H. Crouch, corresponding secretary, and Mrs. Bridges, treasurer.

DR. LUTHER SEXTON.

Dr. Luther Sexton, who is one of the youngest appointees on the Board of Health, is also one of the most successful physicians in the city of New Orleans. Although only a resident of this city for the last seven years, he has risen to the front in the medical profession, and now enjoys a large and inorative practice.

Dr. Sexton is only thirty-eight years of age, and is a native of Crystal Springs, Miss. He is a brother of Hon. J. S. Sexton, one of the most prominent lawyers of Mississippi, who was recently urged to become a candidate for United States Senator to succeed Senator George. Another brother, J. F. Sexton, is a member of the Legislature and a leading planter of that State, and still another, Dr. J. S. Sexton, is a prominent physician of Wesson.

Dr. Sexton is a gradnate of the University of Mississippi at Oxford, where he was the first honor gold medal man. He graduated in 1882 at the Medical Department of the Tulane University, where he also won first honors and was valedictorian of his class. He was for three years in the Charity Hospital, two years as a student, and one as a physician. His first professional services was as inspector of the National Board of Health on the Mississippi river. He was also for six years in service on the Mississippi State Board of Health, and is ex-president of the State Medical Association of Mississippi.

In 1891 Dr. Sexton removed to New Orleans to accept a position under Dr. Logan as lecturer of minor surgery in the Medical Department of the Tulane University. He filled the position with exceptional ability. Afterward he was appointed visiting surgeon of the Charity Hospital. He has kept himself fully posted with the developments of modern medical science, and is to-day regarded as one of the best physicians of the city. He is examiner for five of the largest insurance companies doing business in the South, passing upon several million dollars' worth of business annually, and is surgeon for the Louisville and Nashville railroad.

Dr. Sexton, as a man, represents the rare combination of able physician and successful business man. In his business relations he has demonstrated that he possesses a financiering perception altogether uncommon to a professional man.

He is a gentleman of splendid and handsome physique, of extremely genial disposition, and is very popular in the city.

Dr. Sexton was in Toronto, Canada, last Fall when the yellow fever broke out in this city, and although he had never had it, he came immediately home and assumed his position at his post of duty. He treated about sixty cases of yellow fever, and was remarkably successful, losing only four or five. Dr. Sexton also excels in the literary branch of his profession. He is a contributor to several of the leading medical periodicals of the country, and has written some articles that attracted wide attention.—Times-Democrat.

WOMAN'S PARSONAGE AND HOME MISSION SOCIETY.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

A program has been sent every preacher in the Conference, with the request that Sunday, Feb. 6, one service shall be devoted to the interests of the Parsonage and Home Mission Society. There are yet 25,000 Methodist women in our Conference who are not connected with the foreign or home mission departments of work. Let us make it the special effort of that occasion to increase our membership and the number of subscribers to Our Homes. If every woman will secure one new member, how greatly will our efficiency be enlarged!

Many societies were interrupted in the observance of the Week of Prayer. All such are urged to appoint another week for that important service as early as possible in February. Corresponding secretaries and treasurers are especially requested to be prompt, and send full reports of the last quarter's work. ADDIE PURNELL,
Pres. P. and H. M. S.

Swamp Root has an established reputation as the most successful remedy, and is receiving the hearty endorsement of all up to date physicians, hospitals and homes. If our men and women readers are in need of a medicine of this kind, no time should be lost in sending their name and address to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. IF I WERE YOU.

If I were you and had a friend
Who called a pleasant hour to spend,
I'd be polite enough to say,
"Well, you can choose what games we'll play."
That's what I'd do.

If I were you and went to school,
I'd never break the smallest rule;
And it should be my teacher's joy
To say she had no better boy.
And 'twould be true,
If I were you.

If I were you, I'd always tell
The truth, no matter what befell;
For two things only I despise—
A coward heart and telling lies;
And you would, too,
If I were you.

If I were you, I'd try my best
To do the things I here suggest;
Tho' since I am no one but me,
I can not very well, you see,
Know what I'd do
If I were you.

DR. FRANKLIN AND THE BIBLE.

It is said of Dr. Franklin that during his residence in Paris, being invited to a party of the nobility, he produced a great sensation by one of his bold and ingenious movements. In the course of the evening the company engaged in free conversation. Christianity was then the great topic. The church was always ridiculed, and the Bible treated with unsparing severity.

Growing warmer and warmer in their sarcastic remarks, one nobleman commanded for a moment universal attention by asserting in a loud voice that the Bible was not only a piece of deception, but totally devoid of literary merit.

Although the entire company of Frenchmen nodded assent to the sentence, Franklin gave no signs of approval. As he was at that time a great favorite, his companions could not bear even a silent reproof from him, and they all asked his opinion. Franklin replied that he was hardly prepared to give them a suitable answer, as his mind had been running on the merits of a book of rare excellence, which he had just fallen in with at one of the city bookstores; and as they had alluded to the literary character of the Bible, perhaps it might interest them to compare with that old volume the merits of the new prize. All were eager to have the Doctor read a portion of the new book. In a very grave manner he took the book from his pocket, and with propriety of utterance, read to them a poem. The poem made a deep impression. The admiring listeners pronounced it the best they had ever heard.

"It is beautiful," said one. "It is sublime," was the unanimous opinion. They all wished to know the name of the new book, and whether what had been read was a fair specimen of its contents.

"Certainly, gentlemen," said the Doctor, smiling at his triumph; "my book is full of such passages. It is no other than your good-for-nothing Bible, and I have merely read to you the prayer of the prophet Habakkuk." — London Christian Life.

CHILDHOOD.

Another fault in children is lack of appreciation of childhood. Boys and girls spend much time longing to be men and women which ought to be devoted to the business of being boys and girls. It is quite as important a thing in its way to be a boy or a girl as to be a man or a woman. A boy never has but one chance to be a boy; and if he misses that chance by wasting his time wishing he was a man, he never can be a boy at all. Perhaps every man now living can see where he missed his opportunity to be a boy. When he thinks of what he missed, he heartily wishes he had another chance to be a boy. Boyhood has its duties, opportunities, and responsibilities as well as manhood. It is an open question whether one who fails to be a boy will ever succeed in being a man. The chances are that if he wastes his opportunities in boyhood wishing he was a man, he will miss his mark in manhood regretting that he never can be a boy. There are but a few years allotted to boyhood, and during that period every boy should lay himself out for all that is in him to be a boy. The same philosophy applies to girlhood and womanhood. Whenever young people of either sex begin to gaze at the road several years ahead of them, their attention should be directed to the way which lies immediately at their feet. This is a lesson older people should do all they can to impress upon every boy and girl within the circle of their acquaintance and influence.—Youth's Advocate.

HAS A MAN A RIGHT TO DO WHAT HE WILLS WITH HIS MONEY?

That depends on what is meant by right. He may have a legal right, and yet not have a moral right; so that in the first sense we should answer Yes, and in the latter No! When a man has accumulated a fortune by whatever means, good or bad, it is his to hoard or to scatter as he pleases. He can go down the bay, and throw it all into the sea. Men can call him a fool; but he has not committed a crime for which he can be called to answer before the law. The law has no means of stopping a fool. He must act for himself and take the consequences. Nor is throwing away money the worst thing that can be done with it. If he goes to a saloon, and drinks and drinks till he is dead drunk; till he is more like a beast than a man; still, however much we may loathe him, and despise him, we have no power to restrain him. Worse still: a man may lavish his money upon a spendthrift son, who will scatter the thousands it has cost his father so much hard labor to accumulate. In that case the father has only himself to blame, for he has put temptation in the way of his son, and furnished him the means of self-destruction. But though he may not pay any penalty to law or to society, he may yet be made to suffer through the ingratitude of a worthless son, till he finds that it bites like a serpent and stings like an adder, and he cries out in horror and despair, "It had been better both for me and for my son if he had never been born!" There is many a young man in New York to-day, who has inherited a fortune that has been the curse of his life, since it has been a millstone about his neck to drag him down.—Messenger.

GOOD MANNERS.

Archbishop Whately says that "good manners are a part of good morals." We all acknowledge the truth of the trite saying that true politeness comes from the heart, and that it is only the outward and visible sign of the inward grace which makes us give up in small things to the comfort of others. But "assume the virtue if you have it not," for the polite person must always be more popular and give more pleasure to others than the rough and boorish one. A little courtesy costs nothing but a little thought, and it makes the wheels of society move vastly more smooth. We do not mean that the form of good manners should take the place of the reality, but unselfishness can be cultivated, and with its growth naturally comes politeness.—Housewife.

LACK OF IMAGINATION.

Much of the social irritation and many of the misunderstandings and alienations that embitter life do not arise from human perversity, but from lack of imagination. Some people appear to be absolutely destitute of the power of standing outside themselves and seeing how their own words and acts must impress others. They have good intentions, but they have no measures to estimate the impression that their manifestations of good intentions must make upon others. Consequently they go through life misunderstood, put down as cross-grained, inconsiderate or perverse, simply because they think that if they mean well, that is enough. It recently fell to an acquaintance of ours to bring together two of his friends who had long been alienated. Each one thought he had a just grievance against the other. A little explanation cleared up the whole matter in five minutes. There was no unfriendly intention on either side. The trouble was that one at least of the men was absolutely destitute of imagination. He could not imagine how his actions would impress the other. Lack of imagination will bring one into almost as many troubles as lack of sense.—The Watchman.

SYSTEM IN WORK.

If you would make the best use of your time, look after the minutes. Keep a strict account of every hour of time for a single week, setting down the exact manner in which every hour is spent, and see whether, when you come to review the record, you do not find it full of admonition and instruction. In this simple way one can readily understand the secret of her want of time. She will discover that she has given hours to idle talk, to indolence and to inconsiderable trifles which have yielded her neither profit nor pleasure. What is the remedy? Arrange your work in the order of comparative importance. Attend first to the things which are essential to be done, and let the unessentials take their turn afterwards. The difference in the amount of work accomplished will be astonishing, and we shall hear less frequently, "I have no time," as the excuse for any and all demands upon our leisure.—The Lutheran.

HONORING THE LORD.

An Ohio lawyer once came home, and said: "Wife, I have been converted; let us put up the family altar." "Husband," said she, "there are three lawyers in the parlor; perhaps we had better go into the kitchen to have prayer." "Wife," said he, "I have never invited the Lord Jesus into my house before, and I shall not take him into the kitchen." He went into the parlor and there confessed the Lord who had redeemed him. "Them that honor me I will honor," and for many years that lawyer sat in the highest seat of justice in this nation — John McLean, chief justice of the United States Supreme Court. — Pittsburg Advocate.

"I once met a thoughtful scholar," said Bishop Whipple, "who told me that for years he had read every book he could which assailed the religion of Jesus Christ, and he said he should have become an infidel but for three things: 'First, I am a man. I am going somewhere. To-night I am a day nearer the grave than I was last night. I have read all such books can tell me. They shed not one solitary ray of hope or light upon the darkness. They shall not take away the only guide and leave me stone blind. Second, I had a mother. I saw her go down into the dark valley where I am going, and she leaned upon an unseen arm as calmly as a child goes to sleep on the breast of its mother. I know that was not a dream. Third, I have three motherless daughters (and he said it with tears in his eyes). They have no protector but myself. I would rather kill them than leave them in this sinful world if you blot out from it all the teachings of the Gospel.'"

Beware of a dogmatic manner and overconfident bearing. Young people are often too confident of the correctness of their ideas and conclusions. They have not lived long enough to lose confidence in their own infallibility. They learn many things by painful experience because they will not be taught by older people who have already had the unpleasant experiences. Such boys and girls are so sure they are right that they will not listen to wise counsel. Confidence in themselves makes them overbearing in disposition toward others. All this shows them off in a very unfavorable light to others. It makes them unpleasant companions and unsafe associates. A child that suffers this spirit of willfulness—perhaps it would be better to say stubbornness—to grow upon it will lose friends and make enemies needlessly. It is better to be more gentle in disposition and less confident and aggressive in bearing.—Youth's Advocate.

Judging from my observation, lager beer is quite as likely to generate murder and crime as the stronger liquors. The one drunk on beer is really more dangerous than the one drunk on wine or whisky.—M. L. Holbrook, M. D.

Hygiene.

TO CURE HEADACHES.

SIMPLE REMEDIES THAT WILL BRING SPEEDY RELIEF TO SUFFERERS.

"A hot bath, a stroll in the fresh air, shampooing the head in weak soda water, or a timely nap in a cool, quiet room will sometimes stop a nervous headache," writes Dr. B. F. Herrick in the Ladies' Home Journal. "When overfatigued from shopping or sight-seeing a sponge dipped in very hot water and pressed repeatedly over the back of the neck between the ears will be found exceedingly refreshing, especially if the face and temples are afterward subjected to the same treatment. Neuralgia is caused not only by cold air, but by acidity of the stomach, starved nerves, imperfect teeth, or by indolence combined with a too generous diet. Heat is the best and quickest cure for this distressing pain. A hot flat-iron, passed rapidly and deftly over several folds of flannel laid on the affected spot, will often give relief in less than ten minutes, without the aid of medicine. Hot fomentations are of equal value; though when the skin is very tender it is more advisable to use dry heat, nothing being better for the purpose than bags of heated salt, flour or sand, which retain warmth for a long time. Cold water, applied by the finger tips to the nerves in front of the ear, has been known to dispel neuralgic pains like magic. When caused by acidity a dose of charcoal or soda will usually act as corrective. Sick headache is accompanied by bilious symptoms, and attacks usually come on when the person is overtired or below par physically. This is a disease of the first half of life, and often stops of its own accord after middle age. A careful diet is imperative in every case, sweetmeats and pastry being especially pernicious.

"Eating heartily when very tired, late dinners, eating irregularly, insufficient mastication or too much animal food, especially in the Spring or during the hot weather, are frequent causes of indigestion, causing headaches by reflex action."

HOW TO FIND OUT WHAT MAKES US SICK.

There comes a time to both men and women when sickness and poor health bring anxiety and trouble hard to bear; disappointment seems to follow every effort in our behalf; we get discouraged and skeptical. In most cases serious mistakes are made in doctoring and in not knowing what the disease is or what makes us sick. Kind nature warns us by certain symptoms, which are unmistakable evidences of danger, such as too frequent desire to pass water, scanty supply, scalding irritation, pain or dull ache in the back—these tell us in silence that our kidneys need doctoring. If neglected now, the disease advances until the face looks pale and sallow, puffy, or dark circles under the eyes, the feet swell, and sometimes the heart acts badly. By these conditions, which are plain to be seen, nature tells us again that our kidney trouble is growing worse and that we are on dangerous ground. Should further evidence be needed to find out the cause of sickness, then fill a vial with your water and let it stand twenty four hours. If there is a sediment or settling, it is further proof that the kidneys and bladder need doctoring.

There is satisfaction in knowing that Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, the great kidney and bladder remedy, fulfills every wish in quickly relieving such troubles. It corrects inability to hold urine and scalding pain in passing it, and overcomes that unpleasant necessity of being compelled to get up many times during the night. The mild and extraordinary effect of Swamp-Root is soon realized. It stands the highest for its wonderful cures of the most distressing cases. All up-to-date physicians, Hospitals and Homes endorse it because of its remarkable success in the treatment of kidney and bladder troubles, or disorders due to weak kidneys, such as catarrh of the bladder, gravel, rheumatism and Bright's disease, which is the worst form of kidney trouble. It is just the remedy we need, and may be obtained of any druggist for fifty cents or one dollar. To Prove the merits of this remarkable discovery, you may have a sample bottle and a book of information, both sent absolutely free by mail, upon receipt of three two-cent stamps to cover cost of postage on the bottle. Mention NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE and send your address to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y. The proprietors of this paper guarantee the genuineness of this offer.

THE VALUE OF A CHURCH PAPER.

It is astonishing that some pastors, and the people generally, are so little interested in the circulation of a worthy denominational paper. Pastors stand sadly in their own light when they fail to encourage the members of their churches to take a denominational paper. It is simply impossible for church people to be to the largest degree useful to their churches, to their denomination, and to the cause of Christ at large, if they do not take a religious paper. There is no investment of money which will bring larger returns for the church, for the denomination, and for Christianity, than what is expended in procuring good religious papers. Two cents a week for the year will secure the weekly visits of a great, strong, wholesome, and altogether superior religious paper. The general circulation of such a paper in a church is worth as much to a pastor as is an assistant in pastoral work. Church members can not intelligently give to or work for denominational societies and other objects of benevolence except they be familiar with the scope and manner of their operations, and such familiarity can come only from the weekly visits of a religious newspaper.

In all our churches there are many young members who were brought up outside of our denomination; there is also a considerable proportion of such as are more advanced in years. How can they know what our contemporary enterprises are, and how can they come into touch, either with the living present or with the hopeful future, except they take a weekly denominational paper? Men of wealth could not do better with hundreds, even thousands, of dollars than to aid the pastor in introducing a worthy denominational paper into the churches and missions. A pastor in this city a few weeks ago paid for twenty copies of such a paper to be sent to as many families connected with a mission of the church. Could he have made a better investment of the amount?—Christian Intelligencer.

WHAT IT HAS DONE.

The best literature of thirty centuries is to be found in the Bible. Warriors have fought for it; martyrs have died for it. The sacred books of the Christian, the Mohammedan and the works of the philosophers have stolen its brightest gems. It fired the eloquence of an Alcuba and a Chrysostom, "upon whose lips the bees settled and left their honey there." It suggested the divine poems of Halevi, Ramon, and Milton. It awoke the intrepid genius of Maimonide, Spinoza, and Mendelssohn. It inspired the pictures of Raphael, the sculptures of Angelo, the music of Mendelssohn, Meyerbeer, Handel. This Book has destroyed Satanism. It was this Book that led the Pilgrim Fathers to found the American republic and it will yet inspire men to strike for Freedom and the recognition of personal rights. It has been the pioneer on the road of civilization. It has kindled a love for right, truth, and pure conduct. It has cheered the masses toiling for bread. It has brought hope and light and comfort into the homes of the afflicted. It inspired Montefiore, Howard and Fry to devote their lives to suffering humanity, and Reese and Cooper and Hirsch and Ward to provide for the wants of the poor. Then Solon and Justinian will be forgotten, Moses and Ezekiel will be influential for good. Even the oratory of Demosthenes and Cicero will fail to touch a sympathetic chord in the human breast, the eloquence of Isaiah and the sublime poetry of Amos will move the heart and subdue it to goodness. When the philosophies of Aristotle and Plato will be no more read the Psalms of David will still be joyous-sung, and the rule of life will be Solomon's wise, "Reverence to God and keep his commandments."—Exchange.

President Warfield recently made a happy allusion in regard to literary criticism. Beaumont and Fletcher were two well-known men in England at the beginning of the seventeenth century. Jointly they issued a book of plays. In these last days some of our best critics have not been able to separate the work and say which belong to Fletcher and which to Beaumont, although they had the plays of both written separately by each of them. Are we not following blind leaders when we fall into line with those men who object this word in Genesis was written by Moses but that by some editor?"—The Ocelot.

OBITUARIES.

Obituaries of 200 words published free. For all words in excess of that number send one cent per word.

TERRELL.—JAMES LANDRUM TERRELL was born in Simpson county, Miss., Feb. 10, 1831. His parents were Hiram Terrell and Isabel Glass, and he was the sixth of a family of nine sons and three daughters raised to maturity. In his childhood his parents moved to Pike county, Miss., where he grew to manhood, receiving a home and literary training that fitted him for his calling in life. December 22, 1852, he was united in marriage to Miss Mary M. Sandell, and she, with their three daughters, survives him. In 1847 they moved to Louisiana, and settled near Mansfield, and engaged in farming. He served in the Confederate Army, but on account of ill-health did but little effective service. When the war closed he returned home poor and in bad health, but willing to work for those dependent upon him. He was a born farmer, and delighted in growing crops and caring for domestic animals. With these qualities he naturally succeeded in always having plenty at home, and he could easily have become a rich man had he, as a financier, measured up to his ability as a tiller of the soil. He discharged his duty, as he saw it, to his family, neighborhood, Church and State. The law of kindness was the rule by which he governed as father and master, and his patience with offenders showed whose teachings he followed. He joined the Methodist Church in early life and died a loyal member. His piety was unostensive—more in deed than in word—and he was self-assertive in nothing.

A close observer said, "He bestowed more favors than he asked for," and one with whom he had business dealings for many years said that he never knew a more honest man. He lived long and usefully—outlived all his family—and might have reached a ripe old age but for an accident. October 27, at night, he walked off his front gallery, and though the floor was but twenty-seven inches from the ground, the misstep broke the bone of his thigh, which resulted in blood-poison, that ended his precious life Dec. 2, 1897. There are bereaved ones left who loved him truly, and who can not understand the mystery of God's dealings with them; but they submit to him and believe that hereafter all will be made plain. HIS DAUGHTER.

ABBEY—On the eleventh of July, 1871, there was born to Mr. C. A. Abbey and his wife, Mrs. M. C. Abbey, a son, whom they named MAURICE. He grew up in a Christian home. Devoted to his parents, he had little desire for worldly society; so he developed in that which makes most stirling qualities of heart. When about seventeen years old he experienced religion and joined the M. E. Church, South, under the ministry of Rev. I. W. Cooper, at Edwards, Miss., where the family were then and afterward living. He was of a deeply serious nature. Religion with him meant a great deal—everything, indeed. Ambitious to make his way in the world, and capable of doing so, he yet subordinated this to filial duty. So he continued to aid the home folks with unremitting toil, chiefly on the farm. Early in the year 1897 he, with two younger brothers, opened fresh land of the Big Black swamp, in the edge of Warren county. Here, by diligent work, they produced a marvelous crop of cotton. While trying to harvest this, and cut off from the world by quarantine, he was seized by that direful disease, hematurial fever. In four days it terminated fatally—Oct. 22, 1897. He felt no fear. His father was permitted to cross the quarantine lines to see his loved son pass away. The mother also had the mournful dispensation to see him laid away—the mortal part—to wait the archangel's trump. We shall meet him again in that land of unclouded day.

A bereaved friend, J. P. D.

DENNIS—Mrs. NANCY E. DENNIS, daughter of William and Annie Pulliner, was born Nov. 14, 1861, and died Dec. 26, 1897, being a little more than thirty-three years of age. She was converted and joined the M. E. Church, South, at Short Creek, Yazoo county, Miss., at the age of fourteen. December 16, 1896, she was married to C. H. Dennis, with whom she lived happily for one year and eleven days, and then God took her to himself.

It was not the writer's privilege to know Sister Dennis, but a number of friends witness to the fact that she was a noble Christian woman. Her life was made beautiful by the graces of our holy religion. A devoted daughter, a faithful and loving wife, loved by every one as a friend, she will be sadly missed in the community.

Sister Dennis had frequently expressed the desire that the funeral service be held at the grave, but, to the grief of those to whom she was dearest, no minister could be present at the time. A large number of friends gathered at Short Creek Cemetery, where her body was quietly laid to rest Dec. 28.

Though our sister be dead, yet we know that she shall live again, and we look forward to a sweet reunion in that happy country where there will be no sad parting.

Anding, Miss.

WALKER—Resolutions adopted by the Louisiana Avenue Sunday-school:

Whereas, Our heavenly Father, in his infinite mercy and goodness, has seen fit to take from our midst our beloved brother, RUDOLPH WALKER, and has transported him to a home beyond the skies; therefore, be it

Resolved, That we, bowing before the divine will of our Maker, deplore his sudden and untimely end, and heartily sympathize with his grief-stricken parents, and trust that our Master may be with them in their hour of adversity, now that they have lost one who, in every respect, proclaimed himself a godly and Christian young man with every promise of becoming a man after God's own heart.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE for publication, and to the grief-stricken parents of the deceased.

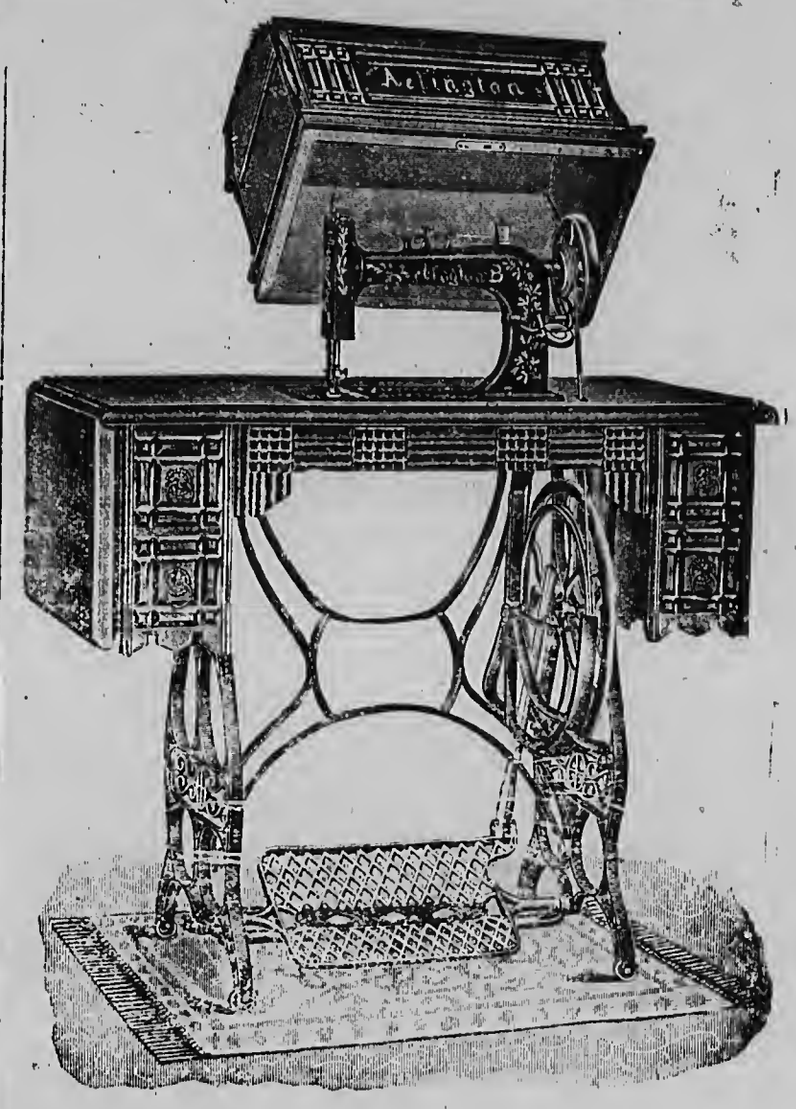
Our Machine Offer-

New Improved High-Arm "Arlington B" Self-Threading Sewing Machine.

A recorded certificate of warranty for 10 years accompanies each machine. The "Arlington B" is complete in every detail, combining all modern and late improvements, such as automatic bobbin winder, self-threading shuttle, self-setting needle, upper spring tension, etc.



The "Arlington B" self-threading sewing machine has a large high arm, its mechanical appearance is perfect, its adjustment is absolute, positive take-up, convenient foot rest, with the best style furniture, either oak or walnut; in addition to which each machine is furnished with the best steel combination attachments free, as follows: One tucker, one foot ruffler, one set of plain hemmers (five different widths up to seven-eighths of an inch), one binder, one shirring plate and one under-bralder, packed in a handsome velvet lined case. It is also furnished with one foot hemmer, one screw driver, one wrench, one oil can with oil, one gauge, one package of needles, six bobbins and one instruction book.

THE HEAD is strong and substantial; has large space under the arm for handling bulky goods, is finely japanned and protected by a hard finish. Has so few bearings and friction points that it is easily oiled and kept clean.

NEEDLE BAR is round, with adjustable bearing polished and fitted, insuring great wear, and can run a long time without oiling. It has a slack dip motion, relieving the strain upon the thread when the shuttle is passing through the loop. Using the adjustable take-up, controlling the threads perfectly on all grades of work.

IMPROVED AUTOMATIC BOBBIN WINDER which is so positive and reliable in its action that an imperfectly wound bobbin is an impossibility. So simple that a child can easily operate it. This valuable attachment renders possible a perfect control of shuttle tension.

SELF-THREADING—The "Arlington B" is self-threading, requiring no change from light to heavy work. Uses double thread, and makes the lock stitch.

THE NEEDLE is the same as used on the New Home machine, and is self-setting both as to height and position with reference to shuttle, with short blade and long shank, insuring great strength; finely polished.

SELF-THREADING SHUTTLE—A perfect steel cylinder shuttle with delicate and perfect tension, open at one end to allow the bobbin to be inserted without displacing any of the parts; runs loose in the shell, without spring centre or point bearings, thus insuring an even tension; can be threaded in the dark, and easily understood.

LOOSE PULLEY for winding the bobbin without running the machine requires no change or adjustment, nor is it necessary to remove the work from the machine.

PARTS SUBJECT TO WEAR are made of the finest steel, case hardened, light and noiseless and are very durable.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

The South Carolina Senate has passed a compulsory school attendance bill, the minimum yearly attendance to be eight weeks.

The new Board of Health of Louisiana organized on Monday evening, and, with Dr. Edmond Souchon as president, declared itself ready to undertake the responsible duties devolving upon it.

A mass meeting was held in this city last week, presided over by Mayor Flower, and an organization was formed to promote and foster the prosperity of the city of New Orleans and State of Louisiana.

President McKinley, at the manufacturers' banquet, on Jan. 23, said the promise of prosperity had been kept, and the morning of good times was on hand. He said that merchants now sought extension of trade instead of notes.

Rev. A. E. Smith, pastor of the Methodist Church at Defiance, Ohio, has announced from his pulpit that the high hat will no longer be tolerated in his church, and warned his congregation to hereafter leave them at home, as they will not be admitted.

According to the testimony of Tin Chin, a Chinese interpreter, who appeared before the Illinois Senate investigating committee at Chicago the other day, certain streets in that city are filled with opium dens, the proprietors of which pay $10 a week to the police for protection.

The golden jubilee of the Redemptorist Order in New Orleans was celebrated with the ringing of bells, the booming of artillery, music and pageantry and with prayers of thanksgiving on last Sunday. This order has built fine churches and established schools and convents in the fourth district of this city.

Miss Margaret Long, the second daughter of the Secretary of the Navy, has just passed a brilliant examination and matriculated in the senior class of the Medical School of Johns Hopkins University, at Baltimore. She intends to continue her studies in this institution until she is prepared to practice medicine at her home, Boston.

After a discussion, which lasted all day, and which was continued from previous days' sessions, the National House passed the bill for the relief of the book agents of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, making an appropriation of $288,000 in their favor. Few claims have so long occupied the attention of Congress, or excited greater controversy and debate. The Publishing House in Nashville, valued, with its plant, at $700,000, was seized by the Federal authorities in 1862, and occupied until 1865. It is said that no private claim presented to Congress was so extensively supported by memorials and recommendations. As the bill has been favorably reported to the Senate, it may pass that body and become a law.

FOREIGN.

President Diaz, of Mexico, is soon to make a tour of the United States, and will visit a number of the larger cities in this country. He proposes to start on his journey towards the end of this month.

According to the dispatches, matters have assumed a more pacific aspect in China. It now seems certain that China has agreed to the terms upon which Great Britain proposed to guarantee a loan; hence it may be assumed that the British have gained the advantages which they sought to obtain. Germany has been placated with a long lease of the Kiao Chau harbor, which she seized some weeks ago. In the meantime Japan has sent her fleet to Wei-Hai-Wei, and it is very doubtful if China will ever be able to recover control of that important naval station.

THE

Skilful Specialist

Why He Succeeds Where the General Practitioner Fails.

Average of Life Increased

A Plan Whereby the Afflicted May Have the Services of the Most Skilful Specialist for a Merely Nominal Price.

The city is the home of the specialist. The facilities which its hospitals offer for following any particular line of investigation, and the fact that the city alone affords a sufficient number of patients suffering from a similar malady to make the practice of a specialist profitable, are the reasons for this. His practice being thus confined to the larger cities, the advantages of receiving treatment from the specialist have been denied the inhabitants of country towns and smaller cities, unless they were able to bear the expenses of a journey to the home of the specialist, pay his fee for treatment and the large incidentals connected with private hospital attendance.

How to provide the advantages of special treatment, at a nominal price, to the afflicted who have been unable to secure it, has been a problem many have tried to solve. That it is practicable has finally been demonstrated by a man who, during the past twenty years, has done more for suffering humanity than any other human being. This man is Mr. H. H. Warner, the original proprietor and manufacturer of the world-famed Warner's Safe Cure.

Mr. Warner's many years of experience in the special treatment of kidney diseases led him to believe that equally good results could be obtained by offering the public, at a reasonable rate, special treatment for the several classes of disease to which mankind is liable. Since he severed his connection with the Warner Safe Cure Company, some five years ago, he has been working out his present plan of treatment, and has formed the Warner Nazaro Medicine Co., with offices in the St. Paul Building, 220 Broadway, New York.

He has completed arrangements with a number of the leading specialists of Greater New York, by which he has organized a Board of Physicians to give advice and treatment to people who could not otherwise avail themselves of their services.

Among the diseases for which special treatment can be had are, scrofula and all blood and skin diseases; nervous prostration, insomnia, chronic headaches, and all nervous disorders; rheumatism and gout; acute and chronic catarrh; diseases and weaknesses of women; special diseases of men; indigestion and all stomach disorders.

This plan of special treatment places within the reach of all the experiences of men who have devoted years of study to their respective specialties. Many diseases that have baffled the skill of the general practitioner can thus be successfully treated, and suffering humanity benefited. Chronic cases are especially desired. These test the skill of the specialist and prove his ability. The company invites correspondence from everyone suffering from any ailment from which they have been unable to secure relief. It has been demonstrated that its board of specialists can cure chronic diseases. Its physicians are among the ablest in the profession, and have been marvelously successful in their practice.

The fee asked is modestly small—about one-half of what the average specialist would charge for a few minutes' consultation without treatment of any kind. Do not delay. Disease does not stand still. You are daily, hourly drifting farther from the possibility of a restoration to health. The method of obtaining relief is as simple as it is inexpensive. All that is necessary is to write out a history of your case, making the statement as complete as possible, and giving symptoms in detail. Send this, with five dollars, to the Warner Nazare Medicine Company, St. Paul Building, 220 Broadway, New York City, when a complete diagnosis of your case and medicine for thirty days' treatment, should so long a time be necessary for a cure, will be sent you and delivered free without further expense. The well-known business ability of Mr. Warner, and the fact that he has done so much for suffering humanity in the past, are ample assurances of the genuineness of this, his latest and greatest work. Write to-day.

NEW EVERY MORNING.

BY SUSAN COOLIDGE.

Every day is a fresh beginning;
Every morn is a world made new.
You, who are weary of sorrow and sinning,
Here is a beautiful hope for you.
A hope for me, and a hope for you.

All the past things are passed over;
The tasks are done, and the tears are shed.
Yesterday's errors let yesterday cover;
Yesterday's wounds which smarted and bled,
Are healed with the healing that night has shed.

Yesterday now is a part of forever,
Bound up in a sheaf, which God holds tight,
With glad days and sad days and bad days, which never Shall visit us more with their bloom and their blight,
Their fullness of sunshine and sorrowful night.

Let them go, since we can not recall them,
Can not find and can not atone.
God, in his mercy, receive, forgive them!
Only the new days are our own.
To-day is ours, and to-day alone.

Here are the skies all burnished brightly;
Here is the spent earth all reborn;
Here are the tired limbs springing lightly
To face the sun and to share with the morn
In the chrism of dew and the cool of dawn.

Every day is a fresh beginning;
Listen, my soul, to the glad refrain,
And spite of old sorrow and older sinning,
And puzzles forecasted and possible pain,
Take heart with the day, and begin again!

Communications.

WOMAN'S SUFFRAGE IN THE WEST.

"It is said, that as the West goes, so goes the Union." I find these words in the closing paragraph in a recent communication to the ADVOCATE. Evidently they voice the sentiments of the writer, for she adds: "If that is true, we may expect, in the course of a few short years, to have our entire country going for woman's suffrage. God speed the day!"

Can it be possible? Do I understand aright? Does she really wish the same train of evils—divided homes, godless Sundays, et id—to be hurled, pell mell, on her own land? On Mississippi? If woman's suffrage is such a potent remedy for social evils, why has it not proved effective where they have the franchise? They have had the ballot in Wyoming twenty-five years. Has Wyoming less whisky and crime than Mississippi in proportion to the population? Are the morals better? Has the curfew proved effective there? Why do not the suffragists, where they have it their own way, put down the whisky and perfect legislation on these lines? Why is so little said about this modern Eden, and why are not the modern Adams kept straight? Why is it that all the women suffragists from every part of America are not emigrating to one or the other of this quartette—Colorado, Utah, Idaho, or Wyoming?

"Since the women have been allowed to vote, they have driven the saloon out of a number of towns in the State" (Colorado). I quote the correspondent. Why not out of all the towns in the State? Is there any other place under the sun where saloons have been closed? If so, by whose agency were they closed? Women suffragists? Has nothing ever been done in the interest of temperance save by the woman suffrage element?

Chas. H. Chapman, in his efforts to prove "The Right of Woman to the Ballot" (September Arena), shows very plainly that the ballot should be given to women, if they want it. He also proves that women can and may enter with impunity any business open to men, that of soldiery not being excepted.

In the late election in California there was a slight majority vote in the southern part of the State in favor of woman's suffrage; but, so far as I have been able to ascertain, it failed to carry in every town of any size in the State. In fact, woman's suffrage cut no figure in the election at all. It rarely came up; but when a public speaker did chance upon the subject, he not only granted that it was the right and privilege for them to have the franchise, but rather urged its adoption. It is a mistake, therefore, to attribute its failure to carry in the State to "the combined efforts of the liquor men in San Francisco." Woman's suffrage was a failure at that election simply because California did not want it. The liquor element in San Francisco did not fear the woman suffrage movement. Its influence was not considered a ripple on the political sea, since it had neither numerical strength or extensive influence in the State. The women speakers and writers advocating suffrage during the canvas admitted that the adoption of such a measure would not purge the evils, but they sought it as a natural right. In reality it seemed that they pandered to all parties in order to carry. That "woman's suffrage is a cleansing factor" I deny, for the bad women, and those under the liquor influence in San Francisco alone, will outnumber all those who desire the ballot in the State. That woman's suffrage enhances woman's opportunity to enter the professions I must object to, for are not women all over this land entering whenever or whatever profession she chooses when properly equipped? Outside of the quartette of States are found women pharmacists, physicians, lawyers, doctors, school presidents, ministers, and even book agents, many of whom are true and noble specimens of Christian womanhood. I know of several married couples in which the husband and wife are both physicians or ministers, thus each being complement of the other. I knew one couple, both of whom are ministers. The husband generally preaches, but the wife feels called upon to interrupt him at any time during the delivery of the discourse, whenever she deemed his theology at fault. She would rise and, with uplifted finger, say: "Stop, Fields, stop! It is this way!" Then she will fill in as long a parenthesis as she likes, even if it requires the remainder of the hour.

Seriously, though: Shall our own loved Southland take the West as an example? They are, or were, as a mass, ten years ago, a God-loving, God-fearing, Bible-reading people. An article in the Home Journal (December, 1897), in a glowing tribute to the South, bears a similar testimony. (This from the pen of a Northern writer.) The strongest advocates—nay, originators—of the new—or woman's—Bible come from the ranks of woman suffragists in the West. These women are theosophists, advanced thinkers, Christian scientists, spiritualists. They uphold in many instances divorce, no Sunday, no God, no home, and, in Utah,* where woman's suffrage is so strong, polygamy. Woman's suffrage seems to be a hot-bed for all the above evils. Can anyone wish this Pandora's box of ills opened in the South? I trow not. Woman's suffrage has been characterized as the "Woman's Christian Temperance Union gone to seed." The W. C. T. U., in its original conception, was grand, and had the noblest ends in view. It represents many true and devoted Christian women, as the life of Miss Frances Willard attests. Let us emulate the example of the highest types only, and by so doing preserve our reputation for unblemished Christian womanhood.

ALICE COLEMAN OATES.

*In Utah polygamists are disfranchised, so the women do the law-making and voting. No doubt in time the men there will be seeking suffrage.

LORD TENNYSON'S POETRY.

BY MISS SALLIE WHITE.

For an example of perfect art we would refer to the unconscious torturing of the conscience of the guilty queen by the simple novice. The scene is wrought with singular power and effect.

But, passing on, we would speak of the varied qualities belonging to the true poet. The poetical quality is no one quality merely, but a combination of qualities, foremost among which we would rank feeling, sympathy, and an insight which is a result of this; a perception which is more of the heart than the brain; a true spiritual perception, by virtue of which the poet may commune with the spirit of nature, feeling the soul that is in all things about him. Burns found inspiration in a common daisy and in the misfortunes of a field mouse as truly as in the noble traditions and the beautiful peasant life of his own Scotland. Wordsworth breathes the spirit of the mountains, and the tempest and thunder-voices enter into him, permitting him to partake of their solemn, mystic life. To this high gift of feeling we must add power of thought, analysis, ability to interpret the sympathy of the mind, to realize and present it intelligently; not profound thought, no merely difficult thought, but inspired thought; thought that comes suddenly, swiftly, springing from a large intuition; thought glad and happy, because inspired, and also beautiful, pure, solemn and true. What is called imagination is, of course, requisite. The true poet needs, further, passion, intensity, glow, fervor. Whatever else he wants, he must have a great heart, capable of much emotion, of many emotions, deep, tender, true, and mighty. Then he must have the gift of expression, or else he were only "a dumb poet." He must have knowledge of words—fitting, true, beautiful, powerful words; and this more as a gift of nature than an acquirement. Together with all these an acute sense of the rhythm and music of speech must be his.

It would require much space to illustrate these several points in detail from Tennyson's writings. Take the first idea of sympathy, especially with nature. Of this Tennyson himself says:

"The poet in a golden clime was born,
With golden stars above;
Dower'd with the hate of hate, the scorn of scorn,
The love of love.
He saw thro' life and death, through good and ill,
He saw thro' his own soul,
The marvel of the Everlasting will,
An open scroll,
Before him lay."

In "Lockesley Hall" we have a description of love, the true poetry of life, with the picture presented in reverse, when the object loved has proven herself unworthy, unfaithful. Here nature and the poet's soul seem in perfect communion. But we must trust to our reader's knowledge of the poet's works to supply these illustrations. Scraps of quotation are always unsatisfactory.

An absence of humor is very noticeable in Tennyson. He very rarely makes you laugh. He does make you smile often, but these smiles are rather grim, not at all like true merriment—not that the writer of the two series of the "Northern Farmer" can possibly be destitute of humor. That "Quaaker feller" deserves to be immortal, if no one else that Tennyson has written about does. The "Day Dream" is a very pretty piece of by-play. And "The Grandmother," exquisitely pathetic as it is, has a vein of quaintness that is almost like fun running through it; but it is a fun that disposes you more to weep than laugh; the queer, marvelous blending in one of all the stages of life; the old woman of ninety seeing her "boys" at once as babies and as elderly men, and mixing up children and grandchildren, and her own long-past experiences—"Seventy years ago, my darling, seventy years ago"—with the wisest sayings and striking, heart-moving reflections upon life and death and the hereafter. But the vein of humor is one that Tennyson uses very sparingly indeed, though there are passages in "Maud" which show some power in this direction. Sarcasm and invective, again, are by no means favorite weapons with him. There is a fine piece of satire in "Sea Dreams," which Tennyson gives as a quotation. He almost apologizes for using it, as if he remembered his poet "dowered with the hate of hate, the scorn of scorn, the love of love," and makes the "gentle wife" in the poem supply the antidote.

"Nay," she said,
"I loathe it: he had never kindly heart,
Nor ever cared to better his own kind,
Who first wrote satire with no pity in it."

This is the passage:

"With all his conscience and one eye askew,
So false, he partly took himself for true;
Whose pious talk, when most his heart was dry,
Made wet the crafty crew's foot round his eye;
Who, never naming God except for gain,
So never took that useful name in vain;
Made Him his catspaw, and the Cross his tool,
And Christ the bait to trap his dupe and fool;
Nor deeds of gift, but gifts of grace he forged,
And snake-like slimed his victim ere he gorged;
And oft at Bible meetings, o'er the rest
Arising, did his holy oily best,
Dropping the too rough H in Hell and Heaven,
To spread the Word by which himself had thriven."

There is a fine scorn expressed in "Lady Clara Vere de Vere," a poem, to our mind, of very great power and beauty. It needs to be read as a whole. A fragment does not well indicate its drift.

It is universally admitted that Lord Tennyson was endowed with a fine lyrical genius, a rare gift in presenting a subject, or a thought, complete in a few lines or verses. The metre of "In Memoriam" is his own, and he has acquired a singular command over it, though it takes most readers a long time to become familiar with it. This remarkable work is, in truth, a collection of lyrics, each separate poem being complete in itself, while the whole is, of course, intended to form a system.

Correspondence.

NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE NOTES.

Rev. S. B. Cox, P. C., of Jonesboro circuit, is very sick.

Revs. K. A. Jones and W. A. Bowlin, who were sick during Conference, have both recovered health and are at work in their charges.

Mrs. Dr. Henry, one of the oldest members of our church in Greenwood, died recently.

Bros. Jones at Okolona, Clifford at Booneville, Foust at Guntown, and Woollard at Aberdeen, have been well received in their new charges and are beginning work with zeal and heartiness, as this scribe hath witnessed. Similar reports we hear of others.

Bro. Tucker enters upon his fourth year on Corinth district with unabated zeal and diligence. The district, under his wise administration, has made gratifying advancement on several lines, especially in reference to finances and church building.

Bro. Thames is looking after all the interests of Aberdeen district with his characteristic carefulness. He reports that four charges have advanced their pastors' salaries above previous assessments from fifty to one hundred dollars each—viz., Tupelo, Sparta, Nettleton circuit and Verona and Nettleton.

Dr. Sullivan and family are happy in their much-improved parsonage in Corinth.

Bro. Meek is burdened with desire for a new church in Tupelo. We hope his cherished purpose to build will be consummated in the near future.

Plans are being laid for a new church in Greenwood. It is expected to begin work on it early in the Spring. It is also contemplated to build, during this year, new churches in Winona and Greenville.

There is advancement in our Sunday-school work in several places. The home department work has been recently inaugurated at West Point, Tupelo and Inka, and teachers' libraries have been procured by the schools in Tupelo and Inka.

The school in Aberdeen will soon order at least fifty dollars' worth of books, and others are moving in the same lines. We desire as early as practicable to equip every Sunday-school in the Conference for enlargement and greater efficiency. To this I will gladly give information to all who desire in reference to the home department work and special rates on teachers' and other libraries.

The colporter and Sunday-school agent has recently visited Starkville, West Point, Okolona, Tupelo, Guntown, Booneville, Corinth, Inka and Aberdeen, and a few country churches; he has visited twenty pastoral charges since Conference. He hereby acknowledges indebtedness to the brother preachers and many others for cordial treatment and assistance in the work.

FINAL APPEAL.

Of the sum assessed on the Annual Conferences for the General Conference Expense Fund, just a little less than three fifths has been collected to the date of this final appeal—Jan. 31, 1898. The committee having this matter in hand feel constrained, therefore, to submit for the consideration of the church the following facts and figures, which tell their own story with great plainness of speech:

THE ORIGIN OF THE OCEAN SPRINGS SICKNESS.

The assertion of the Mississippi State joint legislative committee appointed to trace the origin of the yellow fever on the coast last Fall, that it got to Ocean Springs through New Orleans has caused a great deal of surprise, and seems to be so much at variance with the hitherto generally accepted theory of that matter that an interview with some one competent to discuss the matter was sought by the Picayune. The object as to put this community in the right light before the world, and defend it against any such imputations as are made in that report. There is no one in New Orleans more competent to deal with this question than Dr. S. R. Olliphant, the ex-president of the State Board of Health, who was in an official position at that time, and was conversant with all of the facts. Besides he has come into information in regard to this particular matter which serves to throw an entirely different light upon the subject, and to show that the charge is based upon supposition and is made to divert attention from the accusations against the Ship Island quarantine station. Dr. Olliphant, however, since he has relinquished his office, is loath to enter into a newspaper controversy, but upon being pressed by a Picayune man for a statement, and realizing the gravity of the charge, and at the same time that the information in his possession should be made public, he consented to make the following statement:

"It is claimed that two men, residents of Ocean Springs, who had been in Guatemala, boarded the Breakwater at Porto Barrios on April 8, arrived in New Orleans, and proceeded to their home in Ocean Springs, arriving there on April 12. One of these men developed yellow fever on the night of his arrival home. From that one case they are inclined to base the spread of fever. Those men had been presumably working on a railroad in Guatemala. Now the claim is made that at that time yellow fever existed in Guatemala. I have been told that the marine hospital service are the accusers. The United States marine hospital service has no medical representative at Porto Barrios. Of course there is the United States consular agent there, but medical information from a consular agent is not considered medically authentic.

"This Porto Barrios has been under the direct medical supervision of the Louisiana State Board of Health for a number of years during the quarantine season, and our medical representative there, Dr. L. M. Finney, was dispatched there only a short time after the departure of those men from that place, and continued to supervise that section of country all during the Summer up to the close of the quarantine season. His regular reports indicated the entire absence of yellow fever there, and no passenger traffic was uninterrupted, and no suspicious cases presented themselves at the Mississippi river quarantine station during that Summer.

"In addition to that, Dr. Folkes, a gentleman connected with the Mississippi State Board of Health, assured me he had been there in his medical capacity for several months, and had left just a short time previous to the departure of these two men, and if there had been any yellow fever on that coast at all, it is more than probable it would have come under his observation.

"I also understand that when this man was taken sick, no doctor was called in, and, in fact, that all during his sickness he was not attended by any physician. The only evidence that they have on which to base the statement that he had the yellow fever is that of members of the family who say that he had black vomit. That is not sufficient to establish the fact that he had the yellow fever. Again, the man made the statement that he had, at intervals of one and two weeks before, had fever, which goes to show that he had malaria, which may have developed hemorrhagic tendencies when he reached home.

"While the fever may have been in New Orleans in July, or even June, in a mild form, it is highly improbable that had this case been yellow fever, it would have taken so long to become epidemic in Ocean Springs. It was not until Sept. 6 that it was definitely determined that yellow fever existed there—nearly five months after this supposed case appeared at Ocean Springs.

"In view of the facts in my possession, it is highly improbable that this statement is correct. It is improbable that the fever should have appeared and disappeared at Porto Barrios during the interval of Dr. Folkes leaving that place, and the arrival there of Dr. Finney, our inspector—a period of only a few weeks, and particularly so when the period of Dr. Finney's residence there was the most favorable for the development and spread of the disease."—Picayune.

A PETITION.

Lord! 'tis art merciful as well as just,
Incline thine ear to me, a child of dust!
Not what I would, O Lord, I offer thee,
Alas! but what I can,
Father Almighty, who hast made me man
And bade me look to heaven, for thou art there,
Accept my sacrifice and humble prayer.
Four things which are not in thy treasury
I lay before thee, Lord, with this petition:
My nothingness, my wants,
My sins, and my contrition.'

SALMAGUNDI.

MR. EDITOR: The January-February number of The Methodist Review has one article that is worth more than the price of the Review for a year. If it is possible for you to do so, I feel sure many of your subscribers would be thankful if you would make a place for it in the columns of the ADVOCATE. From beginning to end it is a gem of the first water. Highly poetic! Radiantly beautiful! Strikingly grand! It has the movement of a conquering hero's march as he goes to triumphant victory. It is a tribute—worthy of its author—to that One who has been said by another to be "the holiest among the mighty, and the mightiest among the holy; who, with his pierced hand, has raised up empires from their foundations, turned the stream of history from its old channels, and still continues to rule and guide the ages." The article is, "The Apocalypse of Jesus Christ," by Bishop John C. Keener.

In the November-December number of the same publication we have an article on "Sergeant S. Prentiss, by George J. Leftwich," that enables us to realize—to some extent—what a gifted son of genius was this marvelous man, who so impressed his fellows with his oratorical powers that even to this day his name can hardly be mentioned among Mississippians without their feeling an irresistible inclination to "lift their hats," or "give a cheer."

If your columns are not too crowded, this extract from pages 246 and 247 will, I feel sure, be a treat to your many readers, as well as "point a moral and adorn a tale:"

"When a child, he was afflicted with a violent fever that left him with a withered leg, and resulted in his permanent lameness. While his father was at sea a little daughter died, but the news reached him that it was Sergeant. He wrote home to the mother expressing thanks that it was the little lame boy rather than his sister; but he had not the ken of prophecy. Prentiss was low of stature, but the upper portion of his body was magnificently developed. His head has been termed a 'three-decker' by an enthusiastic admirer. His face was very handsome, and, judging from the mouth and lower portion, it would be called sensuous, though extremely attractive and intellectual. He wore a heavy suit of dark hair; his complexion was sallow. Nature gave him a withered limb, and compensated him for the defalcation by a most magnificent brain and a boundless imagination. What she lacked here she made up there with usury. It is often thus: the law of compensation amends numerous defects. When the sun is in perihelion, we are given notice that the corresponding aphelion must soon follow; where there is depression there must somewhere be elevation. The law of compensation rules in the moral and intellectual as well as physical world. In the poems of Homer and Milton how much does the human race owe to blindness! The consciousness of a maimed limb, a homely face, an uninteresting ancestry, has more than once made the world richer in great deeds. When the commissioners of the Confederate States went to Hampton Roads to meet Mr. Lincoln to try and end the war, a Union officer remarked of A. H. Stephens: 'The Lord seems to have robbed that man's body of nearly all its flesh and blood to make brains of them.' The facetious remark was not unmixed with wisdom. Prentiss' lame leg was constantly before him. He longed for a manly presence, and he yearned for the admiring gaze of men and women, attracted by perfect form; he pined for the strength and activity of the athlete; but his lame leg vetoed all his aspirations. It is one of the paradoxes of this world that men desire what they can not get, and aspire to be what they are not, nor can be. Prentiss, with all his beauty and all his powers, was displeased with himself; all of his gifts he minimized and depreciated. That he had them, no one could have known better than he; yet in his heart he would have preferred something else. But the maimed hand leaves the other arm with double strength, and very often a heart with redoubled energies and courage. Strange as it may seem, the world owes much to Prentiss' lame leg. But for it we may never have heard of Prentiss. Drawn to school in his little cart, then were formed the brave resolves of his heart to wrench from what was to him a cold world more than pity, to importune from her a grinding concession to a place on fame's eternal camping-ground. The very conversation his condition evoked lacerated his sensitive heart, and thenceforward there were no barriers he did not surmount in winning the applause of men. As Samson's strength was his destruction, so here Mr. Prentiss' overwrought zeal made such drafts on his stores of vitality that he bankrupted them in early manhood. The world sorrows for his overwrought and misspent life, and rejoices that the prodigious good of which his life was capable was left unperformed. He compelled mankind to elevate the standard to which it is possible for human intellect and human eloquence to reach. He shook the world with applause, and vanished."

When I had finished reading this extract, I wrote with my pencil along the margin, "The thorn in his flesh." A greater than Prentiss, fired with zeal for his Lord, and feeling disqualified for effective service because of "infirmities in the flesh," sighed in spirit, and cried to be delivered from such drawbacks as a "weak body" and a "contemptible speech." Some can ridicule natures as sensitive and high strung as those of a Prentiss and a Paul. There are people so stolid that nothing but "an appetite for sin" can move them.

As my opinion that Gal. vi, 11, may—without violence—read, "with what large LETTERS," seems to excite the risibilities of "Rex," I quote from a few authors their views. Canon Farrar—than whom I have seldom found a more careful and painstaking searcher for the truth, or one more fearless in its proclamation when discovered—in his "Messages of the Books"—a masterly production that I would advise all of our young ministers to buy and read—renders it: "Look at the large letters in which I have written to you with my own hand," and in a foot note he adds: "The size of the scrawled, uneven letters was probably due to the painfulness of the effort to write. Many congruent circumstances besides the apostle's habitual use of an amanuensis tend to prove that he suffered from short-sightedness, and probably opthalmia." Ellicott and Hammond both have it, "In what large letters;" Dean Alford has it, 'In what great and apparently unsightly letters," while Meyer says, "But . . . to catch the eyes of the readers, as something so especially important, . . . the apostle wrote it in very large letters," etc. I feel reasonably safe in such company.

Our Baptist brethren of Alexandria have just succeeded in finishing a beautiful house of worship, and, in honor of the event and of the dedi catory services, The Baptist Chronicle came out in a handsomely illustrated special edition. From the editorial columns of this paper I clip the following:

A correspondent in the CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE says that he is "more than willing to join in a memorial to the General Conference asking for such legislation as will restore and keep the hymnology of primitive Methodism to its place in the church and in the course of study. If the Bible is one of the books of the 'course,' our Standard Hymn Book should be right along side of it, as there is not a line or verse, paragraph or chapter, between the first chapter of Acts and the last of Revelations that bears the indubitable evidence of divine inspiration any plainer or clearer than does the great majority of the gospel hymns in that collection." It looks like this writer is a man worshiper, for, however grand may be the sentiment of those hymns, they were not inspired nor written by inspired men. Those hymn writers made no such claims. To claim for any human production the same place and importance with the Holy Scripture is to dishonor the Word of God and to "teach for doctrines the commandments of men." The Bible is the Book of books, and sad is the day when it is brought to the level of human productions. We think the trouble with our Methodist brethren has been along these lines.

From this extract it seems that our "adversaries" charge to a large communion what is but the unsupported opinion of a layman who speaks for himself alone.

CREATION BY EVOLUTION.

BY REV. H. S. JOHNS.

From time immemorial the creation or the development of the earth has been an interesting study. We are here a people, a race, with intelligence, living upon a revolving ball which has the sun as the center of its orbit. How we came in this position, and, as people, into this higher state of intelligence, are the questions which to-day agitate the thinking public.

There are two theories upon this vitally interesting subject—one of evolution, the other of creation.

The hypothesis of the evolutionist is quite extensive. That theory goes back millions of years; but the greatest difficulty in evolution is to find a starting-point at all, since spontaneous generation can not be established. On the other hand, the Mosaic account in Genesis is thought by some to be full of errors. The supposed errors of Moses may be reduced to two. The first is in time. The geologist contends that the earth is millions of years old, while by the Genesis account six thousand years will extend back to Adam in the Garden of Eden. The second is concerning the creation of the sun. It is contended by the evolutionist that the earth has been thrown off from the sun, and, therefore, the sun was in existence long ages before the earth as occupying its present position, while the "strict constructionist" believes that the earth is the oldest, and that the sun was not in existence till the fourth day of creation. Let us examine these hypotheses.

Evolution has two objections which consign it to oblivion. First, it can find no definite beginning; second, it denies in part and in whole the existence of God.

The biblical account is the safest and surest; but even in that account the old ideas must be made to give place to more reasonable interpretations. When viewed as it is, the old biblical account shines out in full light, giving an easy solution to this puzzled question.

Let the earnest reader open a Bible at Gen. i, 1, "In the beginning God created the heaven and the earth." How far back that "beginning" was no one can tell; perhaps billions of years. If the earth was not here associated with "the heaven," we could conclude that "in the beginning" only referred to a time just five days prior to Adam. But by the heaven "being associated with the earth," it would seem that all material substances were created at one and the same time. A coincidental fact is that all planets seem to be composed of much the same matter as ours, and all suns as our sun. Thus it would appear that all material substances are of the same species; and, if so, why may not all have been created at the same time? "And the earth was without form and void; and darkness was upon the face of the deep." (Gen. i, 2.) Such was the condition of the earth when the Almighty looked upon it and determined to prepare it for man. How long the earth had been in this condition no one can tell. Perhaps prior to this the earth had filled other stations, and had in time undergone a thousand cataclysms. But just then the earth was literally "without form and void"—a floating, chaotic mass, with liquid surface, dense atmosphere, and no axial motion.

WORK OF THE FIRST DAY.

Upon this chaotic mass the Spirit of God moved, and axial motion was imparted, and God said, "Let there be light, and there was light." (Gen. i, 3.) What was this light? It was the light arising from the gathering together of the earth, and a faint light of the sun shining upon the thick bank of fog which had settled around the earth for centuries, now cracking and bursting as the earth turned upon its axis. God divides this light into day and night, which goes to prove that the sun is the source of it, for we can easily conceive that as the earth revolved, day and night would follow each other. Thus we see the first day's work is to give the earth motion and light—day and night follow as natural evolutions.

THE SECOND DAY'S WORK

was purely the evolution of the firmament, or, rather, gathering of the mists and the exposing the sky to view. As yet there was not a man to view it, but it was there to the view of the Creator. (See Gen. i, 6-8.)

THIRD DAY.

The third turn of the earth upon its axis was sufficient to gather the waters together into seas and oceans, and cause the land to appear. How natural!

The waters gathering together into seas, leaving the dry land which was warming under the dim rays of the sun; the grass appeared, and trees grew to perfection in a day under the immediate presence of the great Maker of the heavens and the earth!

WORK OF THE FOURTH DAY.

Upon the fourth day the sun appeared in all his glory. Increasing in light all along till now bursting in splendor through the hitherto impenetrable fogs, they are scattered and dissolved. The earth receives the full light and warmth from this celestial orb. Other suns and bodies receive fruits from this victory of King Sol; the moon and the stars shine upon the re-formed earth for the first time in ages!

By looking at the text in the Mosaic account (Gen. i, 14-19) we see nothing to the contradiction of the above theory. Observe, it is not said the sun was "created" upon the fourth day, but it is said, "Let there be light," "and God made," etc.

This, I think, is an accommodation of speech so frequent in the Scriptures, as, for instance, when Joshua commanded the sun and the moon to stand still (Josh. x, 12-15); again, when the sun went backward ten degrees in the dial of Ahaz. (Isaiah xxxviii.) If we take into consideration the vast magnitude of the sun, being by actual scientific measurement 866,200 miles in diameter, making a volume of matter over one million times greater than our earth, or about eight hundred times greater than all the planets, asteroids, comets and meteors which revolve around it, it seems, and is incredible, that the earth was created before the sun. The Bible does not teach such a glaring absurdity. The Mosaic account is sufficiently clear for all practical purposes. God saw his work that it was good; and the evening and the morning was the fourth day.

FIFTH DAY.

Upon the fifth day God commanded, and the waters brought forth. Great whales were created, and winged fowl. This was a day in which the Creator exercised his creative power.

SIXTH DAY.

The crowning work of all is the creation of man. "So God created man in his own image." (Gen. i, 27.) No evolution here!

MEMORY OF A SOUTHERN HOME.

There is a considerable difference of opinion among authors whether memory is a pleasurable emotion, at least of joys that are departed. Most of the poets decide against the emotion as agreeable. Byron says:

"Joy's recollection is no longer joy,
And sorrow's memory is a sorrow still."

Tennyson has it quoted from an older poet:

"This is truth the poet sings,
That a sorrow's crown of sorrow
Is remembering happier things."

"O tell me not that memory
Sheds gladness o'er the past;
What is recalled by faded flowers
Save that they did not last;
Is it not better to forget
Than to remember and regret?"

Here, however, is a contrary view from equally great authority as any quoted:

"Let fate do her worst,
There are moments of joy,
Bright dreams of the past,
Which she can not destroy;
Which come in the night-time of sorrow and care,
And bring back the features which joy used to wear."

Be the question decided either way, it is still true that memory outlives all hope or joy, as was said by some poet:

"Campbell is dead, great Rogers still survives;
So hope departs, while memory remains."

Often, also, distance of years past brings the same enchantment, mentally, that takes place in the physical sphere, and "robes the mountain in its azure hue." Who, as he descends the autumnal slope of age, remembers aught but its pleasures? Who thinks of broken toys, missed lessons, or punishment of childish errors, or anything that troubled those halcyon days? And who, that has reached mature years but is full of those sweet memories of happy childhood, especially of the "home, sweet home," in which those days were passed? But to cease this prelude, let me describe one of memory's pictures, which, by her magic wand, is brought before me until I "steep myself in elysian reverie a momentary dream," that the gate to childhood's garden is open again.

But come, Memory, to your task; wave the magic wand, and what do I see? A large, squarely built, old-fashioned brick country house away in the extreme southern portion of Mississippi, rising in its spacious proportions among giant forest trees. There was nothing pretentious or specially magnificent in its appearance; in size, perhaps superior to the most of modern dwellings. Here was my childhood's home, as dear as any which poets have ever sung or tourists described. But the natural beauties of its surroundings was as nothing compared to happiness within, "for 'tis home where'er the heart is." Prominent in my recollection are, first, my dear and honored parents, ever ready to minister to the enjoyment and profit of the children, and welcome to the house all their friends with cordial hospitality. As this was 'befo' de wah," here, too, were the shining faces of the happy negroes; yes, happy, in spite of all the commiseration and sympathy of the misinformed. They echo the master's welcome to all who enter, and the children are their especial favorites. "Howdy, young miss; how is young master?" We come round the spacious board, where was always a large company, not only the family, but other guests. Many times the wayfarer, or destitute, who could not bid again, were called to the feast. Here we passed the golden days of childhood. Is not that the real "golden age," where all is bright and happy ere sin and sorrow have dimmed its brightness or marred its joys? We had our amusements, in which our parents joined; but our work, too, our studies, were prominent, and we were much profited by our mother's reading to us. I can see her now in her large arm-chair Sunday evening. I never hear the title of certain books without this association. Pilgrim's Progress, Shepherd of Salisbury Plain, Dairyman's Daughter, and others, bring forcibly to mind these pleasant by-gone hours. But a specially sweet memory is Sunday at the family prayer, where black and white were present; the stalwart African sons of toil, with clean clothes, seated on a bench, with smiling greetings: "Good mornin', massa," etc. A short passage of Scripture was read, perhaps a simple comment, and then the singing, heartily joined in and sonorously sung by these colored brethren; then a short, earnest prayer, and we all, with happy hearts, adjourned to breakfast, enjoying the leisure of Sunday rest. We lived in the country, and sometimes passed the day at home; then we attended the church, built for the negroes in our yard, where a preacher, employed by the neighboring planters, held service. He would be simple and interesting, often giving them incidents in Scripture history, and comment on them. Here, as at prayers in the family, the singing was heartily joined in, and sometimes the most musical raising the tune. The religious education of our negroes was carefully attended to, and the results may seem small; perhaps some fruit may have been brought forth. Sunday afternoons we all taught little Sunday-school classes, even the youngest assisting in the work. Those who could not read were taught orally, or would read the Bible, if they could read. They were encouraged to learn, and often at night would come to us to get a lesson. One of our servants, in answer to those who, after the freedom of the negroes, wished to teach him to read, informed his would-be teachers that his young mistress had taught him—perhaps much to their surprise. One of our Sunday employments was visiting the "quarters," where our negroes lived. We enjoyed walking there with our parents, and our reception was always most cordial, and distinguished gifts of eggs would be made us, which we highly prized. Sometimes we visited the old and sick; read and sung hymns with them. One of our special favorites was "Mammy," a valued friend as well as nurse. A more faithful, devoted friend, a truer heart, never lived. We used to say her soul was white. It was purer, and whiter, too, than many with a fairer skin. She never swerved in her long life from duty to us, and the secrets of our valuables, hidden, and confided to her, were never disclosed amid war's pillage and desolation—a noble type of the by-gone mammy of past generations. After living to the age of ninety, but a few years since, she was laid by the side of our family in our own burying-ground, and, no doubt, has received the award, "Well done, good and faithful servant." No one more faithful ever lived. Though free from her master's death, she remained with us, as devoted to our interests as in past days.

Such was our patriarchal home of the old South; and there is a sadness in remembering it. Where are the beloved inmates in that ideal home, which made it indeed our home? Their sacred dust rests near that spot, and the various residents, their children, are scattered far—some at the bridal and some at the tomb. But the thought is not all sad. Was not this a type of a heavenly home, where we shall be reunited to all that made home happy here?

"Nearer the great white throne,
Nearer the jasper sea,
Where the many mansions be."

There will our home be eternal, for we look for the many mansions with our heavenly Father, and seek a city which hath foundations. Yes, though the earthly house of our tabernacle be dissolved, we have a house, not made with hands, whose builder and maker is God.

"PETER AND ME."

Jesus Christ keeps open doors for penitent backsliders. To the lukewarm whose spiritual pulse is feeble, as well as to those who have fallen into open, flagrant sin, the inviting voice is, "Remember whence thou hast fallen, and repent, and do thy first works." Thousands in our churches sorely need a reconversion. My friend, if you have grown cold in heart and indolent in duty, if prayer has become a penance and the world has eaten out your love of the Master, don't go hunting amid the rubbish of memory for a lost religion. Give up that old "hope," and seek for a better. A revival within the churches would prepare the way for a mighty converting work outside. If Peter sinned grievously, he repented deeply, and worked grandly, and fought gloriously until his heroic martyrdom brought to him his resplendent crown. Dig down deep, my friend, and lay the foundations of a new and stronger life on Jesus Christ. If Christ once kindly said, "and Peter," you can write your name in the same roll of penitents, and say, "Peter and me."—Doctor Cuyler.

If you are abiding in Christ, you are reproducing yourself in thousands of instances when you are wholly unaware of it. Out of the personal relationship between the soul and Christ come the fruits of holy living. The vine does not bear fruit of itself; it bears its fruit through the branches. Our unconscious influence thus becomes far more fruitful than our conscious influence. In the last great day many will bewail that they have accomplished so little, and, looking at the scanty results, will say, "When saw we thee hungry, and fed thee? or athirst, and gave thee drink?" to find that unconsciously their lives had abounded in fruits well pleasing in the Master's sight. It is from such holy lives as this that is derived our Master's highest joy. It is when the whole body of Christ becomes instinct with his Spirit that the world is made conscious of his divine headship over the church.—Bishop Hendrix.

Let us not forget that there are two side to dying—this earth side and the heaven side. The stars that go out when morning comes do not stop shining; only some other eyes in some other land are made glad by them.—M. J. Savage.

FROM THE WORK.

Rev. J. A. B. Jones, Magnolia, Miss.: "I am delighted to assure you that the contract and bond for building our new church in Magnolia have been signed, and the work has begun. L. W. McDaniel and Louis Lenoir are the contractors. The location secured by our noble women is, of course, the most desirable in this city for the building. When completed, we will have one of the most convenient, comfortable and handsome church edifices in the State. I am now constantly singing in my heart the long-meter Doxology. Through January we have been subjected to an incessant pounding."

Rev. P. H. Fontaine, Hagerman, New Mexico, Jan. 31, 1898: "We have just closed a good meeting here, resulting in thirteen accessions to our church on profession of faith, and a number of conversions, reclamations, and sanctifications, beside several family altars erected and several constrained to stop the tobacco habit. Bro. Lallance gave valuable aid, and preached with power and demonstration of the Spirit. Hagerman is a small village on the Pecos Valley railway. The population is gathered from almost every State in the Union. There is a depressed condition of affairs now on account of the failure of the sugar-beet crop of 1897. The climate is not to be compared with that of my native, sunny Southland. There is no such atmosphere to me as that of the pine woods of Mississippi."

Rev. Percy R. Knickerbocker, Crowley, La., Jan. 31, 1898: "We arrived at Crowley on the Saturday after Conference, and began work at once. On the Friday following my mother and sister came over, and were very graciously received by a delegation of ladies, who had fixed up the parsonage until it fairly beamed a welcome to us. The larder was full, and about $25 was raised by them for putting in some necessary furniture at once. We have raised since about $100 in payment of a debt on parsonage and for putting in a cistern. Our congregations have averaged 275. We suppose curiosity has much to do with this. All the organized forces in the church—the P. and H. M. Society, W. F. M. Society, and the Ladies' Aid—have started out with New Year resolutions. 'The signs of the times' seem to be propitious."

Rev. L. M. Lipscomb: "It is within the reach of the preachers of the three patronizing Conferences to make the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE a permanent and increasing success. By little effort and diligence and timely and cordial mention they can put it on a well-bottom financial basis, and the present stage of the church and the demands of the times make it an over-whelming and all-important consideration. We have foes to face and battles to fight to-day that we can not postpone till to-morrow. We live in a peculiar and awful time; an age on ages telling. Let the ministry and church of the first-born be in her deadness and lethargy and not on her strength. Let every Christian heart be on fire and every life aflame with earnestness, zeal, energy, and righteousness. There never was a period in the history of the church when she needed more than now to use every organ of life, every power of thought, every energy of soul, every faculty, capability, and resource in her full possession; to give direction to thought, soul to morality, vitality to goodness, potentiality, and point to truth."

Rev. B. W. Lewis, Fannin, Miss., Jan. 1898: "We have reached our new home, and already feel quite at home with these good people, who have given us a warm welcome. The parsonage is like a neat little cottage, and the ladies of the church (in the form of the P. and H. M. S.) deserve considerable credit for being so mindful of their pastor. My predecessor, Bro. King, has done much for these people, and has left the church in splendid condition, the pastor having hearty co-operation of his people in whatever he undertakes. What a blessing the new preacher experiences upon following such a man! May the blessing of God rest upon him, and he speedily restored to health! Owing to the inclemency of the weather, we have not been able to visit other of our churches yet. On account of a series of mistakes, we have not yet been able to get our horse; yet we have been very comfortably domiciled with one of our stewards, Mr. R. Ellis. The people, as well as the depot agents, get the initials of the different Lewises in the Conference mixed, and while we have been waiting for our things to come from Jackson—as we thought—they have visited the Brandon parsonage, as well as taking quite a stay-over at the depot. May this be the most successful year in the history of the ADVOCATE!"

Rev. Robt. H. Barr: "This is my third year on the Vinaville charge, and I believe that the prospects are brighter than at any time during my ministerial experience. Our first Quarterly Conference is over, with the financial report in advance of last year at this time. I have a compact work this year beginning with Marion, east of Meridian, five miles, and extending south of the city six miles, with five appointments. This is a watermelon and fruit country. Some of my people handle as much cash in the Summer as they do in the Fall, raising and selling fruit; so you see that the preachsr is solid so far as a living is concerned. We have one of the best presiding elders in the Mississippi Conference. The people all love him. Bro. Andrews never does get in a hurry to get back home from a Quarterly Conference, but is ready and willing to stay as long as he can do good. He is growing in favor with our good Baptist brethren. At our last Quarterly Conference one gave him a dollar for the sermon that he preached on Sunday, at 11 A. M. I want to tell you the joke. He eulogized them for the beautiful church edifice which they have erected in our little town at Pleasant Hill, and the gentleman that gave the dollar duplicated about one dollar for everyone that the whole church put into it. The Baptists say that he is a whale full grown in the pulpit. So we are moving along. God grant that this may be the grandest year in the history of the Meridian district. Oh, that God may fill all of her preachers and presiding elders with more zeal for the world's conquest than ever before, and may a wave of holiness sweep over the entire district that shall make the angels strike a new note of joy amid the dazzling splendor of God's throne! Pray for us."

THE LITERARY LABORS OF GENIUS.

Scott is said to have written "Waverley" in less than six weeks. He wrote very rapidly, seldom revised, and, as a consequence, his novels are full of blunders, inaccuracies and anachronisms.

Burns committed his poems to memory as he composed them, and when he sat down to write he had before him no labor of composition, but only the task of writing down what he had already finished.

Gibbon devoted over twenty years of his life to the labor of reading for and writing the "Decline and Fall." It is one of the most stupendous literary feats ever accomplished by the labor of one man.

Thomas Moore often wrote a short poem almost impromptu. He consumed over two years in reading and preparing material for "Lallah Rookh," and two years more in writing that inimitable poem.

Irving wrote the first 120 pages of "Bracebridge Hall" in ten days; the "Alhambra" was mostly written during the three months he spent in that palace; his "Life of George Washington" required nearly five years.

Emerson is reported often to have spent from six months to a year in the composition of one or two short essays. His object was the condensation of the greatest possible thought into the fewest number of words.

Froude passed seven years in collecting materials in writing his "History of England." He was very careful in the selection of data, and spent whole days in the effort to verify a single fact or citation.

One of Milton's biographers says that nearly twenty years elapsed between the sketching out of the plan of "Paradise Lost" and the completion of that work. The actual labor of composition was condensed into two or three years.

Dickens says, in the introduction to "David Copperfield," that he spent two years in the composition of that story. He did not usually require so long a time, many of his novels being finished in less than a year, and most of his shorter stories in a few days.

George Eliot is said to have written "Middlemarch" in four months. Some doubt is thrown upon this statement by the fact that she commonly worked slowly, writing with great care and deliberation, and making few erasures after her work was done.

Bancroft devoted nearly thirty years to his "History of the United States," which is not a history of the United States at all, since it ends where the history of the country properly begins. Had the work been continued on the same scale down to the present, seventy-five or eighty volumes would have been required.

Mrs. Clark required sixteen years to prepare the "Concordance to Shakespeare."

Cruden labored nineteen years on his "Concordance to the Bible," and immediately after its publication was sent to a lunatic asylum. He never entirely recovered from the mental disease induced by this gigantic undertaking.

Buckle devoted nearly twenty years to the collection of materials for his "History of Civilization." He wrote only a portion of the introduction, which remains a great monument to his literary and philosophical teachings. If the work had been finished on the same scale as begun, a hundred volumes would not have sufficed—Northwestern Advocate.

HOW A REPROBATE WAS WON.

Courtesy to strangers may sometimes appear a very unimportant thing, but great issues may depend upon it. Not long ago, in a New England town, a new minister had been called and settled. In that town was a forsaken old reprobate who nobody respected or spoke to who could avoid it. He had never been known to go inside a church. He only worked when driven by necessity to do so, and loafed about the town, a common nuisance.

A few days after the new minister came to the town he met the old sinner on the village street, and bowing, spoke a pleasant "Good morning," and passed on his way. The old man turned and looked after him, and made inquiry of some as to who it might be who showed him such an unaccustomed attention. The same thing happened a day or two afterward, and again during the space of a week or two. Some one told the minister that he had made a friend of old ——, and laughingly told him that he was wasting his politeness on that old reprobate, whose acquaintance was not desirable.

"You don't know him," said this person, "or you wouldn't speak to him at all."

"Never mind," said the minister, "it does not cost much to be polite, and no more to an old reprobate than to the 'squire' of the town." It was not long till old—— was noticed creeping into the corner of the church furthest from the pulpit and nearest to the door. He had come in late and was the first to leave the church. He came again and again, and was finally brought to Christ, and during the rest of his life he lived a consistent and earnest Christian life. He said the minister's bow was what had started him on the upward path.

THE USE OF MANUSCRIPT IN PREACHING

As to the use of a manuscript while preaching, the wisest thing to say is that there can be no uniform practice with all preachers. There are extremists who think that the use of a manuscript is evidence that the minister has no real call to preach. Thomas Chalmers used manuscript, and was closely confined to it, but an audience was as wax before him. Edwards used manuscript. Rev. Dr. Chapin, one of the most effective of pulpit orators and popular lecturers, always used manuscript. Among the preachers from manuscript, popular and powerful to a very great degree, must be placed Phillips Brooks, Dean Farrar, Canon Liddon, Dr. Wm. M. Taylor, and many others. Whether a preacher should use a manuscript depends on the man and also on how he uses it. A man who knows how to use manuscript right will never fail for want of hearers, and he will, on the whole, more instruct and help his hearers than he could as an habitually extemporaneous speaker.—Exchange.

TAKE THE CHILDREN TO CHURCH.

It seems to us that there is a growing neglect on the part of many Christian parents in the matter of keeping the children at church. In not a few communities but a small per cent. of the Sunday school pupils remain to the preaching services, the young folks being permitted to leave the house of God either to wander at will on the streets, or to run riot at home in the absence of their parents. A class of non-church-goers is thus being trained up in the church; and who can estimate the evil that is sure to result from the continuance of this state of things?

Time was when most Protestants felt it to be their religious duty to take the children to church; but nowadays family life has fallen under the influence of the false and foolish sentiment that constrained attendance upon church and Sabbath school is not good for the child or the young person. As if, forsooth, children were capable of judging what is best for their moral welfare. Said Dr. Talmage recently in the Christian Herald: "Many parents who have no fear of injury to their children by their confinement in the day-schools several hours in the day for five consecutive days, are very much afraid that after a Saturday of recreation the children will be injured by two and a half hours in the Sunday school and sanctuary, and that despite the pleasing and restful variety in the services, and an intermission between the school and church services." Clearly, then, the objection that the children will grow too tired and acquire an aversion to church service, if kept at the sanctuary against their wishes, is of little force.

If pastors always felt sure that they would have a number of children present at church, they would prepare something suitable for them in connection with, or apart from, the regular discourse.

Mr. Moody, whose opinion in such matters is worthy of most serious consideration, totally disagrees with those who speak slightingly of enforced church attendance for young people. Some time ago, at his mother's funeral, in paying a tribute to her memory, he told how this noble Christian woman made her boys go to church regularly. "And it did not turn us against going to church," said Mr Moody. "It seldom does any more than sending boys and girls to school turns them against education, or requiring them to practice on the piano turns them against music." There is tenfold more danger that children will form a distaste for church by not being taken there regularly than by the opposite course. The less grown people attend church, the less inclination they have to attend; and the same is true of young people. Where children are taught from early years that the church and the Sabbath school are the proper place for them on Sabbath morning, they scarcely think either of constraint or of complaint.

The difficulty is, that many parents who are church members are themselves not regular attendants upon divine worship, and hence they are ashamed to be strict with their children in this matter, as well as other things pertaining to religion.

The beneficent influence of regular church attendance upon children is immeasurable. The hush of holy silence, the inspiring songs, the fervent prayers, the bowed heads, the earnest gospel sermon, telling of Jesus and his love—a story that strangely moves the hearts of children—together with the presence and wooings of the Holy Spirit, produce deep and abiding impressions. Where else upon this earth can he found such a combination of holy influences as pervade the sanctuary during the hour of worship? The Scripture has lost none of its truth which says: "Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it."

PRESENT CLEANSING.

Far too many believers are content with that act of faith and consecration by which, through the mercy of God, they received assurance of the removal of guilt for past transgressions and of divine acceptance. They seem to think that having been thoroughly cleansed once from their iniquity, they need no further repentance or cleansing. If salvation were complete at the hour of conversion, if then we were lifted above the region of temptation, and delivered from the possibility of sinning again, there would be no reason for seeking afresh the cleansing power of the blood of Christ. But since conversion is only salvation begun, and since the promise of eternal life is only to those who abide in Christ, and continue in the commandments of God, whenever we in any way yield to the tempter, we must seek anew the pardoning grace of God, a fresh application of the atoning blood of the Savior.

The belief that after having once submitted ourselves to God and received forgiveness, Christ will attend to our purification and cover up our sins and shortcomings whether we repent of them or not, is repugnant to many plain passages in the Word of God. "If a man abide not in me," says Christ, "he is cast forth as a branch and is withered; and men gather them and cast them into the fire and they are burned." "And hereby we know that we know him, if we keep his commandments. He that saith, I know him and keepeth not his commandments, is a liar, and the truth is not in him." (I. John ii, 3, 4)

Though in fact every truly converted man has a gracious ability to do the will of God and walk worthily, nevertheless most, perhaps all, converts fall into transgression and just condemnation, either frequently, or occasionally, because they fail to comply with the conditions essential to remaining in a state of grace and favor with God. If, after having been justified by faith, we would continually lift the eye of faith heavenward and seek divine help, we would have access by faith into grace that would enable us to stand against the wiles of the devil. But because the majority of believers do not continually take heed to their steps, they fall and must do their first works over again. It is by present faith that we live unto God and have our hearts purified from sin and unrighteousness. Many a poor sufferer who a few years or months ago was in robust health is to-day wan and wasted by disease. Likewise many a believer who once enjoyed the favor of God is now a stranger to the grace that bringeth salvation.

With most of us our robes get sadly soiled with sin as we go through the various duties and scenes of daily life, for though the spirit may be willing, the flesh is weak, and the tempter is ever present; but that we may not despair because of our frequent sins and backslidings, the assurance is given us that "if any man sin, we have an Advocate with the Father, even Jesus Christ the Righteous." To use his promise, however, as an excuse for sin is to abuse the Savior's love and forfeit our right to forgiveness through his mercy. It should never be forgotten that the same blood that cleansed us in the hour of conversion from every spot and stain is ever needed for our purification. As the Rev. F. B. Meyer strikingly says: "It is not enough to quote it in the past tense, as having cleansed. We need to quote it in a perpetual present and to say 'it cleanseth.' The blood never loses its virtue, and whenever in our walk in the light we are sensible of the least soil of sin, we may wash and be clean. Thus we learn to walk with God with an uncondemning heart. Not that we are all that we ought to be in his holy sight. Even if we are kept from presumptuous sins, we come short of his glory; but we are constantly sensible of the cleansing grace that frees our conscience from dead works to serve the living God." Only those who thus keep themselves pure are the true heirs of eternal life.

THE HELM MEMORIAL SERVICE.

The memorial service in honor of Miss Lucinda B. Helm was held, according to announcement, last Sabbath afternoon. The programme was as follows: Scripture readings by Miss Mary Young, Ollie Tanbe, and Phœbe Lyons. Prayer by Rev. S. S. Keener. Questions and answers by Miss Nettie Sutcliffe. "Immortal Service," by Mrs. S. A. Montgomery. Tribute of Miss Mary Helm, by Mrs. W. W. Carre. Tribute of Dr. W. R. Lambuth, by Miss Mary Werlein. "Miss Helm's Message," by Rev. J. L. Pierce. "No Tender, Yet Sad Farewell," by Miss Mary Hands. "Lessons from Miss Helm's Life for Young People," by Rev. W. C. Black. The service of song was appropriately conducted by the Carondelet choir. A collection was taken. We are persuaded that this service will be of service to the P. and H. M. cause in this city.

DR. BROWN'S COMMUNICATION.

We invite special attention to the communication of Rev. A. G. Brown, D. D., anent the General Conference Fund. By inspecting Dr. Brown's figures it will be seen that while the North Mississippi Conference has paid its assessment in full, the Mississippi and the Louisiana Conferences are in arrears to the amount of $270 and $280, respectively. Our brethren of those Conferences ought not to need any urging to raise these arrearages. The amount to be raised by any one charge is exceedingly small, while, if the bill has to be footed by the delegates, the expense to each will be considerable. General Conference delegates ought not to be taxed at the rate of $45 per head.

THE HEALTH OF NEW ORLEANS.

We are glad to be able to state that the city of New Orleans is in a remarkably good sanitary condition. Ordinarily the death rate runs high here during the month of January. This year, however, has proved an exception to the rule. The number of deaths during the last week in January was only 96 against 164 last year. For the whole month of January the mortality was about 78 per cent. higher last year than this. The death rate for January, '98, was only 18.21. If there is a single city in the United States of more than 200,000 population that can make a better showing for the same period, we will give a year's subscription to the ADVOCATE and a chromo besides to the person who will produce the evidence.

FOOTBALL BARRED.

Secretary of War Alger and Assistant Secretary of the Navy Roosevelt have issued a joint ukase forbidding the annual game of football between the cadets of West Point and Annapolis. This action has been taken on the representation of the superintendents of the two academies that the contests are demoralizing to the cadets and interfere with their studies. Mr. Roosevelt has wrestled with the unsocial grizzly in the Rockies; he has strapped on his gun and mingled in the cheerful functions of the cowboys of Wyoming; he is one of the best judges of a prize fight in the country, and in international affairs his voice is always for war; but he draws the line somewhere. Our naval and military cadets are trained to the profession of slaughter, but there is humanity even in warfare. Outside of Cuba, war is conducted on Christian principles. Hence Mr. Roosevelt agrees with the Secretary of War and the West Point and Annapolis superintendents that the horrors of collegiate football ought, as far as possible, to be kept out of the nurseries of our army and navy. Our young officers will become sufficiently inured to scenes of carnage in after life. They may as well be preserved from them as long as possible.—New York Journal.

THE CURFEW LAW.

Notwithstanding the fun which has been poked at the advocates of the modern curfew law, which requires children under a certain age to be in their homes as early as nine o'clock P. M. in Summer and eight o'clock in Winter, unless accompanied by parents, it seems that this revival of an ancient custom has given satisfaction in most of the Western cities and towns where it has had a thorough trial. In this connection the Chief of Police of Omaha says:

"We have had no occasion to make any arrests under its provisions since it has been in force. When nine o'clock comes the children make it a point to go home. It is now an easy matter for parents to enforce home rules."

Lincoln, Neb., which is widely known as an attractive city of homes, has for two years had a curfew law; and of its operation Mayor Graham says:

"There has been a decided improvement, socially and morally, of the youth, and a pecuniary saving from the failing off in the number of arrests. This seems to be the strictly proper way of reducing crime among youths of the cities."

Similar testimony is given by those in authority in other places. That the law is sustained by public sentiment is shown by the ease with which it has been enforced; and thus the chief objection raised against it, that it is an improper interference with personal liberty, has been met in a practical way. Not only has crime been lessened, and the work of the police made easier and more effective, but home discipline has improved as a result of the co-operation of municipal with parental authority. Free license to run the streets after dark has marked the beginning of a long course of wayward conduct for uncounted thousands of young people; and any practical and wholesome correction of this evil must be welcomed, even though at first thought, the means used seem to run counter to preconceived notions respecting the rights of the individual.—New York Independent.

EARNESTNESS IN THE PULPIT.

Earnestness is the primal necessity in efficient preaching. This is eloquence. The bodily presence of the preacher may be weak, the manner ungraceful, the speech unadorned, but if his soul is on fire, his words will be mighty with the emotion which fills them; prejudice will be disarmed and opposition conquered. When Jeannie Deans, according to Scottish story, made her appeal in behalf of her unhappy sister before Queen Caroline, bowing low in that royal presence, fearless of the corruption which environed her, pouring forth her intense feelings in words, simple, tremulous and direct, her eyes aflame with holy wrath or melting in tears of tenderness, and every feature, gesture and attitude bespeaking an unswerving conviction of truth and right, the Queen, overcome by responsive emotion, recovering at length her suspended breath, exclaimed, "This is eloquence!"

FOR THE LAYMAN'S EYE.

Not a preacher, nor a pastor, nor a happy combination of the two, but a business manager—that is what many a church is demanding of their minister in these days to be. We are confident this call is not wise. Within the reach of our influence we sound out this honest word: Brothers of the laity, attend to the financial affairs of Zion yourselves. Relieve us of this anxiety. Many of you are doing it. The writer of this note gratefully acknowledges the help of such brothers. More of your number could carry this burden if they would. Let the enterprise of the counting-room show itself in the business of the official board, and the ventures on an uncertain market be at least equaled by faith in the sure promises of God.—Zion's Herald.

If we were out of the church, thinking about becoming a member, and should read what two or three of our exchanges have to say, from week to week, about the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and believed these things to be true, we would no more think of uniting with such a body of people than we would of jumping into the fire. Moreover, how Christian men, such as we hope these writers are, can maintain their self-respect and remain in connection with such corruption, is more than we can understand. But this world presents some very strange things to the eyes of the close observer.—Central Methodist.

When he was an old man, Rev. John Wesley said: "Nearly fifty years ago a great and good man, Dr. Potter, then Archbishop of Canterbury, gave me an advice for which I have ever since had occasion to bless God: 'If you desire to be extensively useful, do not spend your time and strength in contending for and against such things as are of a disputable nature, but in testifying against open and notorious vice and in promoting real spiritual holiness.'"—Baltimore Advocate.

A song in the heart is better than a grand piano in a gilded parlor. Real riches can not be counted out in coin. We are rich in what we are. People are troubled because they live in back streets, but the alley is as near heaven as the avenue.—Dean Hodges, of Cambridge, Mass.

Every man is a missionary now and forever, for good or for evil, whether he intends or designs it or not. He may be a blot, radiating his dark influence out to the very circumference of society; or he may be a blessing, spreading benediction over the length and breadth of the world; but a blank he can not be. There are no moral blanks, there are no neutral characters. We are either the sower that sows and corrupts, or the light that splendidly illuminates, and the salt that silently operates; but, being dead or alive, every man speaks.—Chalmers.

Don't undertake to dine with every man who tells you that the latch-string is always on the outside. There is many a hospitable-looking latch-string that breaks at the first pull.—Richmond Advocate.

We are in receipt of the following note from our friend and brother Rev. J. White Davis. We hope his loved one will soon be fully restored.

MR. EDITOR: Last Thursday evening my son Duncan was very severely hurt (we hope not fatally) by being caught in a buggy wheel and carried around about three times. He is at Rev. E. B. Foust's doing as well as can be expected. His right knee is badly injured, if not broken. As soon as he can be moved we will go to the parsonage at Indian Bayou. Preparations were made for our reception last evening, but we could not go there. All disappointed, but not discouraged. We are praying for an abundant year.

Fraternally, J. WHITE DAVIS.

THE MISSISSIPPI ORPHANS' HOME.

Mr. Editor: Please grant me space to say a few things about the Orphans' Home.

In another week we hope to have the inside of the house finished in hard oil, three coats. The painters are at work on the ontside of the building. It will take them ten or fifteen days yet to finish, provided the weather is favorable. When the painters are through, then comes the scrubbing and the furnishing; then we will open the doors for the reception of orphans. Towards the furnishing a number of the charges have contributed in the way of quilts, sheets, pillow cases, etc. When we have set things in order, will publish a list of charges contributing; but in the meanwhile will suggest there is ample room for more. When the kind friends of the Home desire to send clothing (pardon the suggestion), but it would be better to send all materials, and the garments will be cut and fitted here.

As has been previously announced, $15 covers the expense of a bed, and when our friends desire, they can contribute the $15, and we will put a memorial plate on the bed, properly inscribed. To this proposition money has been received for twelve beds from the following parties, viz.: Mrs. A. A. Boyd, in memory of Thursa Lamkin Boyd; Mr. Jno. P. Carruth, in memory of Mrs. Mary Elizabeth Carruth; Rev. and Mrs. W. S. Shipman, in memory of Rev. Jas. J. Smylie; Holly Springs Epworth League, in memory of Nannie B. Fant; Roman Thayer, in memory of Rev. Steven Johnson; Roman Thayer, in memory of Mr. S. A. Johnson, of Greenwood; Roman Thayer, in memory of Rev. Geo. D. Wade; Mrs. Stella C. Mimms, in memory of Willie Eads Colbert; M. M. Todd; Fearn Workers (Mayersville), in part; Mrs. J. A. Towns, Lieut. Gov. J. H. Jones.

Dr. J. C. Ballard and a sister-in-law have contributed two beds—one in memory of Dr. Will Ballard. Money for six other beds has been pledged, but not received.

Our good friend, J. W. Griffin, of Moss Point, and the Home's ever-faithful friend, Capt. I. T. Blount, of Water Valley, have each contributed $50 to furnish the two hospital rooms.

We trust that the Holy Spirit will move upon the hearts of our friends until the Home is furnished throughout. We suggest that there is no more appropriate way of perpetuating the memory of some dear one, whose labors on earth are ended, than by the slight contribution of $15 to buy a memorial bed in the Mississippi Orphans' Home.

Applications are coming in from all over the State, and when we are ready to open (which we hope will be within three weeks), will have a number of children, whom we hope to be able to bless with a home, clothing, and food, for both body and soul.

Have been kept quite busy since I came to Water Valley; hence my journeyings have been few. We ask an interest in the prayers of all Christians in behalf of this work.

M. L. Burton.

THINK ABOUT YOUR HEALTH.

THIS IS THE TIME TO GIVE ATTENTION TO YOUR PHYSICAL CONDITION.

The warmer weather which will come with approaching Spring months should find you strong and in robust health, your blood pure and your appetite good. Otherwise you will be in danger of serious illness. Purify and enrich your blood with Hood's Sarsaparilla and thus "prepare for Spring." This medicine makes rich, red blood and gives vigor and vitality. It will guard you against danger from the changes which will soon take place.

ARE YOU TO LIVE IN ALASKA?

SOME REQUIREMENTS THAT WILL BE FOUND INDISPENSABLE.

The universal article of diet in that country, depended upon and indispensable, is bread or biscuit. And to make the bread and biscuit, either in the camp or upon the trail, yeast can not be used—it must be baking powder; and the powder manufactured by the processes of the Royal Baking Powder Company, miners and prospectors have learned, is the only one which will stand in that peculiar climate of cold and dampness and raise the bread and biscuit satisfactorily.

These facts are very important for every one proposing to go to Alaska and the Yukon country to know, for should he be persuaded by some outfitter to take one of the cheap brands of baking powder, it will cost just as much to transport it, and then when he opens it for use, after all his labor in packing it over the long and difficult route, he will find a solid caked mass or a lot of spoiled powder, with no strength and useless. Such a mistake might lead to the most serious results. Alaska is no place in which to experiment in food, or try to economize with your stomach. For use in such a climate, and under the trying and fatiguing conditions of life and labor in that country, everything must be the best and most useful, and above all it is imperative that all food supplies shall have perfect keeping qualities. It is absurd to convey over such difficult and expensive routes an article that will deteriorate in transit, or that will be found when required for use to have lost a great part of its value.

There is no better guide to follow in these matters than the advice of those who have gone through similar experience. Mr. McQuesten, who is called "the father of Alaska," after an experience of years upon the trail, in the camp, and in the use of every kind of supply, says: "We find in Alaska that the importance of a proper kind of baking powder can not be overestimated. A miner with a can of bad baking powder is almost helpless in Alaska. We have tried all sorts, and have been obliged to settle down to use nothing but the Royal. It is stronger and carries further, but, above all things, it is the only powder that will endure the severe climatic changes of the arctic region."

It is for the same reasons that the U. S. Government in its relief expeditions, and Peary, the famous arctic traveler, have carried the Royal Baking Powder exclusively.

REV. R. L. WEBB.

Rev. R. L. Webb, who filled the vacancy of Rev. J. M. Cowan, last year, on Leakesville charge, rendered most efficient service unto the people. He is indeed a man of God, amiable in disposition, talented in manners of refinement, well versed in religion, and worthy to be held in high esteem. May God bless him, and may the people with whom he may be placed most heartily co operate with him in the great work of Christ!

NOTICE.

Dear Brethren: The following books were left at church and parsonage at Crowley by some of the preachers: One volume of Fletcher's Appeal, first volume of Wesley's Sermons, one volume Manual of the Discipline.

Let the preachers send addresses of these, and also of the District Conference records of New Orleans district, and I will forward same at once. P. R. Knickerbocker.

Crowley, La., Jan. 31, 1898.

For the first time, probably, in the history of Methodism in North Carolina, a Bishop of the Protestant Episcopal Church in America was introduced to a North Carolina Conference when Bishop Cheshire looked our Conference in the face on the first day of the session, says the North Carolina Advocate. "His words were few, but pleasant and brotherly. They were a harbinger of a brighter day in Zion."—Richmond Advocate.

AN APPEAL.

Rev. H. R. Caldwell, a superannuated member of the Mississippi Conference, who wore himself out in the itinerant ministry, has purchased a home in Gallman, Miss., for which he was to pay $450. He has managed to pay $200 of that amount, but the balance, $250, remains to be paid. He proposes to appropriate the small amount he gets from the Conference in that way; but he sorely needs this pittance to live on. He can not support himself and wife by his daily labor; he is physically unable to do manual work, and ought not to be driven to that necessity.

We lay this matter before his brethren in the ministry, and before the churches in our bounds, and propose that we pay this debt on the home of our brother. This will make him comparatively comfortable in his old age. Will our preachers take this matter in hand? The Master says, "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me." It should be a labor of love, a privilege as well as a duty.

We refer to Dr. Weems, our presiding elder, and to Dr. Mounger, our former presiding older, to confirm the above statements.

Three ministers have already promised each $5 for this cause. Send money to his pastor, Rev. W. M. Williams, Gallman, Miss., who will acknowledge the receipt of the same through the mails, and when the whole amount has been received will give notice thereof in the Advocate.

This appeal is not made at the suggestion of Bro. Caldwell, but at the instance of those who are near to him, and who know all the facts in the case.

W. M. Williams,
W. B. Lewis.

Gallman, Miss., Feb. 4, 1898.

TO THE LOCAL PREACHERS OF THE SEASHORE DISTRICT.

Brethren: In the by-gone days of Revs. Tommie Owens, superannuate; Geo. H Clinton, of Vicksburg district; R. S. Woodward, of Vicksburg station—all now of sacred memory; and then later in the days of Bros. W. C. Black, pastor of Edwards; C. A. Powell, of Moss Point station; T. B. Holloman, of Crystal Springs station, and many others we might mention, we felt it an honor to be in the local ranks, that we might serve these beloved brethren, assisting in protracted meetings or occupying their pulpits in case of sickness or absence from home visiting loved ones or serving some other brother. But here of late it has come to pass that when met by a brother, and asked to what Conference I belong, and where is my work, we feel like hanging our heads when answering, We are local.

Why is this, bretbren?

Now the object of this article is to beg of you all to meet at our next District Conference, which will convene in the near future in Hattiesburg, and let us hold a convention of local preachers, and inquire into the matter and see if we can answer this question.

Please watch the New Orleans Christian Advocate, and note the time of our District Conference, when notice thereof is given by our presiding elder. W. T. Beall.

Five weeks ago, almost in despair, I began selling Non-alcoholic Flavoring Extracts and have cleared over $26.00 a week; one day I made $8 00. Everybody wants them, as they are in powdered form and lovely for ices, puddings, cakes, candies, etc. They are perfectly pure and far superior to liquid extracts and twice as strong. Address the U. S. FRUIT CO., St. Louis, Mo., and they will start you at once, and it's your own fault if you don't make money. It's nice work for ladies. My sister sold as much as I did last week. Happy Homes

Hearts that Make Them;
Or, Thrifty People and Why They Thrive
BY
SAMUEL SMILES,
Author of Self-Help, Character, Duty, Thrift, Etc.
CAREFULLY REVISED WITH ADDITIONAL MATTER BY CHAS. A. CASKELL, A. M.
A beautifully illustrated book of 644 pages, cover stamped in gold, marble edges, size 8vo, red cloth. Probably no books of the same general type were ever written that have so much interested and inspired to worthy action the various classes to whom they were addressed, as have the productions of Samuel Smiles. The marked interest which attaches to Mr. Smiles' productions is chiefly due to his happy use of biography. Readers who tire of extended biographical histories find here groups of the wise and distinguished of earth, each giving testimony to the various principles the author wishes to inculcate. The interest excited by the novel arises solely from our interest in the lives and struggles of men and women. They are interesting biographies; but much more interest should attach to lives actually lived and conquests actually made, provided they are produced with equal care. The home is the epitome of society and government. The application of these principles to every member of the home—the importance of their inculcation in the home, where character is chiefly molded—and the value of such lessons in making every home what it may be and should be, has dictated the title,
"Happy Homes and the Hearts that Make Them."

[illegible] passing, fair
My baby lies;
I weave my fingers through his shining hair,
And kiss the eyes
So lately beaming bright and wonderingly,
On earthly things,
Alas! my boy has flown away from me
On cherub wings.

I fold the dainty garments, one by one,
And lay them by;
Sweet angel-mothers claim him now their own
Up in the sky.
Ah, well, his tender feet can never stray
Into the wrong;
My precious darling walks the golden way
The saints among.

My days are full of tears; but when at night
I dream of thee
I see thee in thy little gown of white
At Jesus' knee.
And know thou art my child—my baby still—
All time to some,
And we shall meet again, when God so will,
In thy new home.

"THAT TERROR of MOTHERS."

How it was overcome by a Nova Scotian mother

Who is well known as an author.

Of all the evils that attack children scarcely any other is more dreaded than croup. It so often comes in the night. The danger is so great. The climax is so sudden. It is no wonder that Mrs. W. J. Dickson (better known under her pen name of "Stanford Eveleth,") calls it "the terror of mothers." Nor is it any wonder that she writes in terms of praise and gratitude for the relief which she has found both from her own anxieties, and for her children's ailments, in Dr. J. C. Ayer's Cherry Pectoral.

"Memory does not recall the time when Dr. Ayer's Cherry Pectoral was not used in our family, for throat and lung troubles. That terror of mothers—the startling, croupy cough—never alarmed me, so long as I had a bottle of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral in the house to supplement the hot-water bath. When suffering with whooping cough, in its worst form, and articulation was impossible on account of the choking, my children would point and gesticulate toward the bottle; for experience had taught them that relief was in its contents."—Mrs. W. J. DICKSON ("Stanford Eveleth"), author of "Romance of the Provinces," Truro, N. S.

C. J. Wooldridge, Wortham, Tex., writes: "One of my children had croup. One night I was startled by the child's hard breathing, and on going to it found it strangling. It had nearly ceased to breathe. Having a part of a bottle of Dr. Ayer's Cherry Pectoral in the house, I gave the child three doses, at short intervals, and anxiously waited results. From the moment the Pectoral was given the child's breathing grew easier, and in a short time it was sleeping quietly and breathing naturally. The child is alive and well to-day, and I do not hesitate to say that Ayer's Cherry Pectoral saved its life."—C. J. WOOLDRIDGE, Wortham, Tex.

These statements make argument in favor of this remedy unnecessary. It is a family medicine that no home should be without. It is just as efficacious in bronchitis, asthma, whooping cough, and all other varieties of coughs, as it is in croup. To put it within everyone's reach, Dr. Ayer's Cherry Pectoral is now put up in half size bottles, at half price—50 cents. Send for Ayer's Curebook (free) and read of other cures effected by Dr. Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. Address the J. C. Ayer Co., Lowell, Mass.

DEAL JUSTLY, MOTHERS.

"Oh, dear, I don't know why I did that," said a mother, as her little one toddled off in a burst of sobs.

The mother had come home very tired from a day's shopping, and the little one had run out in the hall to greet her, and, grabbing the bundles from her hands, had begun to try to untie them. The mother pushed the child away with no gentle hand, and in a cross tone of voice said: "Get out of my way this minute, you naughty girl." Not long before the little one had been very ill, so ill that the doctors had given up all hope. Then it was that the mother prayed fervently to God to spare her child, and promised on her knees to be a tender, patient, faithful mother if it were given back to her, and yet how soon she had forgotten, and in moments of vexation the same impatient cross words had come again, and the little one's sensitive heart had been made unjustly to suffer. The dear, loving child had run with a glad look on her wee face to meet mama, who had been gone all day, so glad to see her, but for want of thought, and following a childish impulse, had reached forth the little hands to take the bundles and find out what was in them. All this came to the mother's mind as she heard the sobs of the little child, who had run back to the room and buried her face in the pillow of her little bed. And then came that work of undoing the wrong, which all mothers know about; but the cruel injustice toward the child would still burden the conscience of the mother long after.

We are often unjust to our children because of our own moods and troubles. Things we pass over sometimes as of no moment, in hours when we feel "out of sorts," we make a great matter of, and hurt our children's sensitive natures when reproof is entirely uncalled for. Children are fretted at and found fault with, oftentimes, because we are in an irritable mood, or things do not go our way, notwithstanding that they are perfectly innocent of having helped to create those unpleasant conditions.

Justice in the treatment of children is something that should be conscientiously practiced. The child may have been full of the wish to help mama in her work, and yet may have made some unfortunate break, or spot, in her efforts. But the motive was right; she meant to do something out of the kindness of her heart. But some mothers would have lost sight of the motive entirely, and scolded the child for the unfortunate results, instead of showing appreciation of the thoughtfulness of the child, and pointing out the difficulties in the way of doing work the little hands were not yet quite able to do. Let us deal justly with our dear children in our homes, and remember that we can make more impression on them by patiently and kindly showing them their faults than by nagging or scolding them.—Evangelist.

CULTIVATE PRESENCE OF MIND.

Very few children in the average family are ever taught steadiness of nerve, presence of mind in time of danger, or ever have practice in what to do if anything happens. In some households there are sets of rules what to do in emergencies pasted in some scrap-book; but this is never at hand when wanted, and even if it were, the moral and physical condition of the members of the family absolutely precludes any understanding of the usually vague and too technical instruction contained therein. Every child should be taught what to do in case of fire. If necessary, all of the motions should be gone through with. It should be told what is best to do first, the reason for doing it, and the results of cool and careful action as compared with the always disastrous consequences of haste, confusion, and terror.

It is a curious fact that children who have received any reasonable amount of training in this direction are much cooler and more composed than adults. Whether it is that the young mind unfamiliar with the actual terrors of the situation is left more free to act, or whether the interested curiosity of the child is stronger than its fears, might furnish ground for debate; certain it is that young persons and children, although unspeakably distracted and unmanageable without training, are of much more value as assistants in times of the greatest peril than many who are of mature years. Danger seems to be something that one must become educated into; naturally one fears nothing, probably because the consequences have never been fully realized. It would be but a small task to train children to habits of steadiness and self-control in times of danger, and it might be a means of saving many lives and much valuable property.—New York Ledger.

CONSECRATED KNOWLEDGE.

In that estimate of Bernard of Clairvaux which has been given us by the eloquent Dr. R. S. Storrs we find the fundamental idea of pure religious service. Dr. Storrs says: "All learning, all eloquence were valued by him only as they might nurture to greater completeness the hidden life of God in the soul, and bring men to more blessed and holy fellowship with things divine. To desire to know for the sake merely of knowing was to him a mean curiosity; to desire to know for the sake of reputation was a mean vanity; to desire to know in order to make gain of the knowledge, in the way of money or of honors, was a base greed; to wish to know in order by knowledge to edify others, was charity; and to wish to know in order to be edified by it in one's self, that was true wisdom and prudence."

Culture, when sanctified to the high ideal of this mediæval saint, is surely legitimate for the Christian. Art, music, languages, social graces, may properly occupy time and thought if the purpose is to "glorify God in the body and spirit which are His." The higher the culture, the greater the influence for good if all is consecrated to His service. But is it always thus consecrated? We often seriously ask this question when we find young persons whose service we greatly covet for the Master, so much engaged in intellectual or artistic pursuits that they "really have no time" for benevolent or spiritual work. And as to the spiritual service, it often is not time so much that is lacking, as the will and the ability to do it. It is rare to find an intellectual, cultivated, socially prominent man or woman. Christian though they may be, who is ready to pray with the sick or to lead a soul to saving faith in Jesus? It is not impossible to find such, but they are rare, and when found their price is above rubies. By all means let our sons and daughters have the best this brilliant age of opportunity affords, but oh, let teachers and parents set before them this high ideal, that it all is to be valued only as it "nurtures to greater completeness the hidden life of God in the soul, and brings men to more blessed and holy fellowship with things divine."—New York Advocate.

COURTESY.

A famous French essayist speaks of courtesy as "the flower of life." He gives a place and value to that neglected grace which all Christians would do well to learn.

* * * * * *

"Manners are not idle, but the fruit
Of noble nature, and of loyal mind."

Life is a garden for very few people. For most of us it is a pilgrimage over a rough road and with a burning sun in the sky. Weary and thirsty, we long for the cup of cold water which courtesy supplies. The gracious spirit seeks to seize every opportunity to refresh and strengthen every spirit that needs its help. That help is like charity, twice blessed; it blesses him who gives and him who receives. Wherever it exercises its beneficent ministry, you can easily perceive the presence of the flower of life.—Northern Christian Advocate.

NOT EASILY PROVOKED.

A lady who was somewhat quick-tempered, but was very desirous of becoming a Christian, once said to me, "Mr. Peploe, I assure you there is no fault in my case, because I never lose my temper unless I am provoked!" No, and I do not think the devil does! To lose your temper shows that you are out of communion with your blessed Lord. If the peace of Christ ruled in our hearts, we could never again be provoked. Think of that! Moses was so provoked that he spoke unadvisedly, and yet he was the meekest man that ever lived. But Moses had not the risen Christ to dwell in his heart. Be not discouraged, nor fear lest you may fail to-morrow. You need only live one moment at a time. Can Christ keep you this minute in a good temper? Then he can keep you the next moment, and the next, and so on forever. He can keep you in peace amid the severest trials, even such as he had to bear—in loss of friends, in persecution, in death.—H. W. Webb-Peploe.

THE WOLF AND THE CRANE—AN OLD FABLE.

A wolf once got a bone stuck in his throat, and ran up and down in great pain, hinting that he would give a splendid reward to anyone who would get out this suffocating bone. A crane, who heard him, delighted at the thought of the reward, actually ventured her long neck down the wolf's throat and removed the bone.

"And now for the reward you promised!" she said, triumphantly.

"Reward, indeed!" said the wolf, showing his sharp teeth. "You ought to think yourself uncommonly lucky to have put your head in a wolf's mouth and draw it safe out again. That is quite reward enough for you."

The moral of this is, that if we only do kind things for other people in hopes of what we shall get in return, we must not be surprised if ungrateful folks often merely laugh at us for our pains.—Evangelical Messenger.

Don't deceive your children, no matter how small they are, unless you expect to make liars of them. Most of the lying children had it taught them by their parents.

Every man has a paradise around him till he sins, and the angel of an accusing conscience drives him from his Eden.—Central Methodist.

Hygiene.

HOT WATER.

Hot water has far more medicinal virtues than many believe or know. Because it is so easily procured, thousands think it valueless. The uses of hot water are many. For example, there is nothing that so promptly cuts short congestion of the lungs, sore throat, or rheumatism as hot water when applied promptly and thoroughly. Headache almost always yields to the simultaneous application of hot water to the feet and back of the neck. A towel folded several times and dipped in hot water and wrung out, and then applied around the neck of a child that has the croup, will sometimes bring relief in ten minutes. Hot water taken freely half an hour before bed-time is helpful in the case of constipation; while it has a most soothing effect upon the stomach and bowels. A glass of hot water taken just after rising, before breakfast, has cured thousands of indigestion, and no simple remedy is more widely recommended by physicians to dyspeptics. Very hot water will stop dangerous bleeding.

DO NOT PRESCRIBE ALCOHOL.

Physicians, as an educated and enlightened body of men, should never recommend alcohol unless absolutely necessary. They should endeavor to imbue the masses of mankind with the thorough understanding of the mental havoc and physical destruction wrought by this terrible agent.—Memphis Medical Journal.

OBITUARIES.

NOBLIN—E. H. NOBLIN died of yellow fever Sept 26, 1897. He was born in Smith county, Miss., Sept. 30, 1841, to which place his parents, from old Virginia, had moved some years previously. A large number of children came into this Christian home, and were brought up "in the nurture and admonition of the Lord."

Robert became the subject of awakening grace early in life. Before he reached manhood the vows of the Lord were upon him in membership among the people called Methodists. Though not very demonstrative, he was always attentive to religious duty, and ever growing in grace; as faithful and true a friend to God and man as any could ask.

About thirty years ago he was happily married to Miss Sallie Watkins. The mutual devotion of this couple, increasing as the years flew by, with their new cares and responsibilities, was beautiful to behold. By industry, economy and early self-denial they gathered substance enough to make themselves and children very comfortable, and to materially aid the cause of God in the world. Nearly twenty years ago they moved to Edwards, in Hinds county, Miss. Here these daughters and one son were reared to maturity.

As a merchant, a citizen, and a Christian, Bro Noblin soon commanded the esteem of all. In the stewardship, to which he was quickly elected, he showed special adaptation. A constant growth in liberality marked his later years. His pastors found in him a safe counselor and judicious critic. His kindly greetings to the "new preacher"—whether for the first or fourth term—will linger long in the memory of those who had the privilege of such association. He was ever hospitable to pastor, presiding elder, and visiting ministers, not asking, "Why don't you come to see me some time?" but: "Can you not come and dine or sup with me to-day? Remember, we've always got something for the preacher." A minister of God always feels drawn to such homes as Jesus was to Bethany. Without mawkish sensitiveness, he yet showed truest refinement of feeling. His sense of humor, which was keen and conscious, never led him into fun at the expense of other people's feelings. His heart was too kind for that.

September 26, 1897, becomes a sad day in the calendar of many. His pastor was prostrate with the same disease. Thus he and his loved ones were deprived of those consolations so helpful at such a crisis.

May God comfort the stricken hearts, and bring them all to meet before the Father's throne on high! psays

A bereaved brother, J. P. D.

NOBLIN—ORPHAS H. NOBLIN was born Sept. 8, 1837, and died at his home in Edwards, Miss., Sept. 30, 1897, from yellow fever made worse by over-exertion in caring for others previously smitten. He leaves a sorely bereaved widow and a bright son to bear his name and revere his memory. He was the eldest of a large family reared in Smith county. In filial duty to his widowed mother, he has had few equals. In all the relations of life he was faithful to the full measure of opportunity. As husband, as father and stepfather, as eldest brother to younger members of the family, as friend and companion, as citizen, as Christian, as steward in the Methodist Church and trustee of her property, he won the encomium, "Well done!" He began early to seek the Lord in church membership, during during his eighteenth year. As the years went by he grew spiritually, and in. creased in maturity of wisdom and in favor with God and man. A natural hesitancy of speech led him to disconot his own abilities as a talker. So it was many years before he became willing to let his voice be heard in public prayer or testimony for Jesus. A new and divine power came to him in March, 1895. From that time forward he was always ready with a word as well as work for the Master, while the simplicity and earnestness of his prayers and talks touched all who listened. No place was seldom empty when God's house was open for service of any kind. His accounts, as secretary of the Board of Stewards and Trustees, were as carefully and systematically kept as his merchant's ledger. A distinguishing trait of his character was constant and persistent industry. If missed from his store, you knew where to find him—at other useful work. His strong body and tender heart made him specially acceptable at the bedside of the sick. Hither he was always ready to go and to remain, if needed, for forms not for formality's sake, nor for idle gossip, but to help. His sunny nature brightened the sick-room, warmed men's hearts to him everywhere, and filled his home with a grace that made it to its inmates indeed the dearest spot on earth."

Earnest helper of all that was best has passed from labor to refreshment. We all know where to find him now—by the great tree of life.

HOWIE—WM. T. HOWIE, a son of the present Mrs. M. E. Noblin, and a step-son of Bro. Orphas H. Noblin (lately gone home), was born in Smith county, Miss., Jan. 7, 1860, and died of yellow fever in Edwards, Miss., Sept. 30, 1897. Most of his life was spent under the parental roof, enjoying the wholesome influence of a truly Christian home. The subject of many prayers, the object of solicitous love of a pious mother, step-father, and other near relatives, we hope that he made his peace with God. He had a very kind heart; could not bear to see any creature suffer. When stricken with the fever he realized his danger. God gave him space, which we hope he improved, for looking to Jesus, the mighty to save.

May the greatly bereaved mother, brothers and sisters all find comfort and help in Him who died our hearts to win!

A friend, J. P. D.

NOBLIN—E. K. NOBLIN (best known hr his [illegible] was born in Smith county, Miss., March 11, 1855; joined the M. E. Church, South, in Edwards during 1887, and died Oct. 17, 1897, after a protracted illness with yellow fever and its "collapse." He was the fourth member of the immediate family connection whose mortal part was carried from "Noblin Hill" to the old Liberty Cemetery within less than three weeks. Among the many useful citizens snatched away from that community during its direful calamity few had warmer personal friends than "Bro. Scott." The dutiful son, the kind brother, the tender husband, the affectionate father, has left a great gap in the lives of many.

During the Summer of 1896 an invalid sister came to Edwards for skillful medical treatment of a really incurable disease. Homed with the aged mother and another sister, it was very beautiful to see the devotion of all "the boys" to the sufferer. On account of his almost giant strength and capacity as a nurse, it fell to the lot of this youngest brother to be oftenest at the bedside, ministering aid and comfort. Who that witnessed this battle of nine long months can forget the loving devotion shown in so many ways? No matter how busy in the day (and he was always at work), nor how weary at night, he would quickly respond to each call for help.

The mother of such children may weep much because they are not any longer with her here, but these tears are gilded with a gleam of glory; indeed, they are caught up by beams of the Sun of eternal hope, and arch the heavens with a bow of beauty and promise.

Bereaved ones, look upward and see!

A friend, J. P. D.

WIMBERLY—ISAAC C. WIMBERLY was born Nov. 19, 1861, and died Oct. 5, 1897. He professed religion at a very early age, and became a member of the Methodist Church at Shiloh, in Rankin county. On the tenth of November, 1886, he was married to Miss Mattie A. Krown. For eleven years they trod life's way together, keeping step to the music of a mutual love. This happy wedded life was crowned with the gift of two children—Irvin and Lester—who, at two and six years, are spared to be the solace and support of their widowed mother. A father and two sisters are also left on the bereaved side. When the old home was broken up by the death of the wife and mother, our friend offered the shelter of his roof to his father and unmarried sister.

Bro. Wimberly had lived for several years past in Edwards, Miss., where he had gained the respect of all and the love of that inner circle that knew him best. When yellow fever came, last September, he threw himself, with untiring energy and a heavenunselfishness, into the work of relief. He gave up his business to work at the drug store, and answered every call of duty till stricken down himself. Weary and over-wrought from ministering to others, his strength held out through eight days of suffering, and then his liberated spirit winged its way to God. He bore this suffering with beautiful patience, and the gratitude so characteristic of him expressed itself in frequent thanks to the physician and nurses for their tender ministries. One day he told the loved ones present he saw his dear mother, who had crossed the flood the year before. The next he was with her in heaven.

In business life his energy and integrity had won the respect and confidence of all, while his good judgment and the accommodating spirit of the true gentleman kept his services constantly in demand. He was a public-spirited and conscientious citizen, and his death was a community loss. He was also a faithful citizen of Zion. His pastor will miss his moral support and his sympathetic presence in the sanctuary. The beautiful trait of gratitude was especially prominent in his character. But it was in the holy of holies of the home that his virtues shone the brightest, and over its threshold the shadow of their passing must lie deepest.

Dear stricken friend, follow with the eye of faith, and in the thought of his eternal joy lose some of the anguish of the present parting.

"For death
Has only parted you a little while,
And has not severed e'en the finest strand
In the eternal cable of your love."

The Ohio law providing for the collection of $5000 from a county by friends of a person lynched therein has been declared unconstitutional by Judge Duston of the common pleas court at Urbana, who holds that it is an encroachment of the legislative upon the judicial branch of the government.

United States Senator Lindsay, of Kentucky, who, a few days ago, was served with a notice from the Legislature of his State demanding the resignation of his commission, because he had voted against the proposed free-coinage of silver, on Feb. 4, in the Senate at Washington, rose to define his position.

The House of Representatives has passed the bill providing $10,000 out of the unexpended balance of the money appropriated for closing Pass-a-Loutre crevasse for the purpose of making a survey of Southwest Pass, with a view to determining the possibility of securing a 35-foot channel through that pass.

The bonds of all fire and marine insurance companies doing business in California and not incorporated under the laws of that State have been declared invalid by Insurance Commissioner Clunie, of California. This may disturb seriously the business of some eighty-two insurance companies, which have been operating for years in California.

Charles H. J. Taylor, formerly United States minister to Liberia, has started a new movement, by which he hopes to join the negroes of the country in one party, the Afro-American party. Mr. Taylor was born a slave, and has the distinction of being the only negro lawyer ever admitted to the bar of the Supreme Court of the United States.

The annual convention of the South and West Commercial Congress opened in Tampa, Fla., on last Tuesday. This is the same organization which had its beginning about four years ago, at Topeka, Kan., under the name of the South and West Grain and Trade Congress, and was instituted for the purpose of fostering more intimate trade relations between this section and the great West.

THE EVIDENCE in the case proves Hood's Sarsaparilla cures rheumatism, dyspepsia, catarrh, that tired feeling, scrofula, salt rheum, boils, humors, and all blood diseases.

HOOD'S PILLS are prompt, efficient, always reliable, easy to take, easy to operate. 25 cents.

Two gigantic rival milling combines, involving all the mill owners of the Central, Western and Northwestern States, are engaged in a bitter war. The adulteration of flour is the basis of attack and counter-movement. The bill before Congress provides that adulterated bread shall be wiped out by penalty and that a tax for internal revenue shall be placed on blended flour made of wheat and corn. For several days the agents of the newly formed combine between the corn flour millers have been gathering signatures to a petition praying Congress to throttle the bill which was recently introduced in the Senate.

There is no better proof of the excellence of Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup than that it is recommended by leading physicians.

Salvation Oil should always be kept in the kitchen. For the ready cure of scalds and burns it has no equal. 25 cts.

FOREIGN.

Prof. Grunmach, head of the Roentgen laboratory in the Berlin University, has stated that, judging from his own observations, the various reports of the cure of tuberculosis of the lungs by means of Roentgen rays are extremely improbable. He adds, however, that several cases of lupus have improved surprisingly after their application.

Japan has been removed as an element in the opposition to the consummation of the annexation of the Hawaiian Islands by the United States. This result has been attained by the conclusion of an agreement between our government and that of Japan, as represented by Minister Toru-Hosui, which, by practically settling the status of the Japanese in Hawaii, removes the only substantial difference that has existed between the two governments.

The British Parliament will assemble during the present week, and all the cable advices indicate that public men of all shades of political opinion are looking forward with much interest to the developments which are likely to follow closely upon the opening of the debate in reply to the Queen's speech. The various foreign complications into which Great Britain has been drawn will afford excuses for numerous interpellations of the government on the Chinese question, on the subject of the French aggressions in the upper Nile region and the ill success of the campaign against the Afridis in India.

A failure in the harvest has caused terrible distress among the peasantry of the interior provinces, especially in central and southeastern Russia. In some places they are worse off than during the famine of 1891. The Russian editors have been forbidden to refer to the matter. Private letters from Tamboff, in the province of that name southeast of Moscow, say that the peasants are feeding their half-starved cattle with the thatches of their roofs. The prevailing diseases are making rapid headway among them.

Sewing Machines of the Present are very different from those of the past. Very few users of sewing machines know the technical differences; patents have expired on generic features, but "the world moves," and radical improvements have been made in sewing machines, so that the one of to-day shows a tremendous improvement on its predecessor. Women who have used both kinds quickly realize the difference between a cheaply made imitation of some ancient type and the modern light-running machine which is easily adjusted, does all kinds of work, and is always ready to go. The Silent Singer of to-day is the latest result of constant improvement in mechanical excellence. For practical use it compares with the old-time sewing machines sold at department stores much as a modern railway train surpasses a stage-coach of the last century.

Singer machines are so simple that a child can understand them; they are so strong that a bungler can hardly get them out of order. Every part is made with such scrupulous care, from the best materials, fitted in its place with the utmost exactness, and tested and re-tested so many times before leaving the factory, that it never gets the "fits" which try a woman's patience, destroy the fruits of her labor, and consume her time in vexing attempts to coax the machine to a proper performance of duty. Singer machines are sold directly from maker to user; they are guaranteed by the maker, always ready to furnish parts and supplies in any part of the world, and not by a middleman totally unable to render this service. Buy a sewing machine of the Present, and not one of the Past.

SILENCES OF GOD.

BY PHEBE A. HOLDER.

How sweet the joy that fills the soul,
When, after silent wailing long
For answer to the pleading prayer,
The sigh becomes triumphant song.

All darkened hours of trial time,
When we had thought our prayers unheard,
Our God was listening to our cry,
And answering still our pleading word.

In his own time, in his own way,
He comes with blessing, sweet, best,
Drawing the soul that on him waits,
In sacred nearness to his rest.

Prayers which we thought unanswered may,
Like incense, still ascend to heaven,
And to the patient, waiting soul
The sweetest blessing may be given.

LORD TENNYSON'S POETRY.

BY MISS SALLIE WHITE.

(Concluded.)

The songs scattered throughout Tennyson's works are more marked by meditative sweetness, by pathos, by common sense, than by anything like strength. They move and melt, and sometimes instruct, but rarely stir the pulse to much quicker action. They will live both in the hearts and the thoughts of the people. The song in "Enid," "Turn, Fortune, turn thy wheel, and lower the proud;" that in "Vivien," "In love, if love be love, if love be ours," with the very fine rendering of the Parable of the Virgins in "Guinevere," deserve remembering, while they illustrate a striking peculiarity of the poet's. There is often too much word-play about them, a trick of words that makes them extremely hard to retain in the memory. Some of the songs in "The Princess" are very charming. "Home they brought her warrior dead" is well known.

Of the incomparable sweetness and pathos of the laureate's poems it would be easy to point to a multitude of illustrations. Such poems as "The Miller's Daughter," "The Gardener's Daughter," "The May Queen," "Dora," will occur to every reader. What a wealth of true, tender feeling is in the "Enoch Arden," mingling with its beautiful pictures of love and sorrow, its vivid descriptions, its solemn holy teaching of self-sacrifice, even to the bitterness of death! In "Aylmer's Field" the passion and pathos approach very near to true sublimity.

The plan of "The Princess" is essentially defective, but there is much beauty in the poem itself. It deals in a pleasant, lively manner with the vexed question of woman's rights. The poet's view of equality is familiar to all.

"Maud" is the most abused of all Tennyson's writings. But we think the careful reader, who is willing to take pains enough to understand this poem, will find it a work of extraordinary beauty and power. It is a story, a love story, and a sad enough tragedy in its way; a tale of noble, passionate love, and then of insult, crime, madness, told in varied and often most powerful verse. It is highly dramatic, but the reader is left to infer the situation from the poetry. The story is told in the first person, the speaker being the lover of Maud. We must refer the reader to the exquisite songs in Maud, numbered XII., XVII., and XXI., which have this in common: that they represent all nature as transfigured and glorified by the power of love. In the last of these three the well-known song, "Come into the garden, Maud," the happiness of the poem culminates. It relates to a stolen interview in the early dawn, after a dinner and ball given by the father, to which Maud's lover is not invited.

One of the most precious treasures that Lord Alfred Tennyson has bequeathed to the lovers of the beautiful is his last poem, entitled "Crossing the Bar." It is an exquisitely tender expression of the sweet religious spirit dwelling within the singer's breast. Entirely worthy of reading and keeping in mind, we give it in full:

"Sunset and evening star,
And one clear call for me!
And may there be no moaning of the bar,
When I put out to sea,

"But such a tide as moving seems asleep,
Too full for sound and foam,
When that which drew from out the boundless deep
Turns again home.

"Twilight and evening bell,
And after that the dark!
And may there be no sadness of farewell,
When I embark;

"For tho' from out our bourne of Time and Place
The flood may bear me far,
I hope to see my Pilot face to face
When I have crossed the bar."

MRS. E. H. MOUNGER.

BY BISHOP CHAS. B. GALLOWAY.

The death of this cultured and noble woman, the wife of Rev. Dr. E. H. Mounger, and sister of Rev. R. J. Jones, both of the Mississippi Conference, and of Rev. K. A. Jones, of the North Mississippi Conference, occasioned deep and widespread sorrow throughout the State in which her entire life was spent. Suddenly the summons came, and our sainted sister literally "ceased at once to work and live." Seemingly in perfect health, busy with church affairs, the swift paralytic stroke fatally fell, and after some hours of unconscious waiting the loving heart ceased to beat, and the pure spirit left this earthly house for an eternal home.

She was the child of the church, and her whole life was intimately associated with the Methodist itinerancy. Her father, the Rev. R. J. Jones, was a Methodist preacher—an influential member of the Mississippi Conference—and from that pious home went out two of her brothers to become able and faithful ministers of the New Testament. At the age of nineteen she married a young minister, and thus strengthened the ties that bound her to a happy life of itinerant service. She was also the niece of the Rev. Dr. McInnis, of the Presbyterian Church, and the inheritor of some of those decisive qualities that have long distinguished the Puritan faith.

Jasper county, Miss., was her birthplace, and the year was 1841. Her childhood and young maidenhood were spent in that finest school of character—a Southern (Christian) country home of the earlier days. In that model home were developed those pure and radiant virtues that made the fair young girl the almost perfect wife and mother. Discriminating in judgment, cheerful in spirit, and with an admirably poised character, she was the center of a happy home circle—a wise counselor to her husband and a faithful, loving guide to her children.

At the age of fourteen she was happily converted, and formally assumed the vows of church membership. From that time to the hour of her sudden summons home her life was a constant and consistent attestation of the genuineness of her faith and the depth of her consecration. She had intimate acquaintance with the Holy Scriptures, and an unusually clear understanding of theological truth. This made her a model hearer of the Word—appreciative, sympathetic, discriminating, but never hypercritical. She was especially fond of expository preaching—that which enabled her to see most clearly the mind of the Master.

Hers was a modest spirituality. There was in it no spirit of forwardness, no eagerness to be seen or heard. She believed, and properly, that there ought to be some sacred secrets between the soul and God. Hers was the peace that floweth like a river. One who knew her best thus writes: "I never often heard her give public expression to her religious feelings and hopes, but when she did, it was with all the fervor and appropriateness that marked one who deeply loved her Savior. I think I never knew anyone more absolutely truthful and sincere in every word and act. She was very positive in asserting and doing what she believed to be right, though with the utmost gentleness of manner."

Amid all the vicissitudes of an itinerant minister's life she was always hopeful, and faithful to every duty. In many of our Mississippi towns she left warmly attached friends, with whom she took sweet counsel and labored together in the Lord. Bravely standing with her husband at his post of duty in 1878, when the yellow fever raged in Port Gibson, she was a ministering angel to him and many others. When urged to flee before the pestilence, she said to her husband with a manner indicating that the line of duty had been finally settled, "No, you can not go, and I will not." And when near death's door with the prevailing fever, she never regretted her decision, nor complained of the Providence that brought her so near the other world.

Four sons and a daughter, together with their grief-stricken father, by whose side she had walked for five and thirty years, live to mourn her untimely loss and cherish her precious memory. May the vision of that dear one—the very embodiment of quiet dignity, queenly gentleness, serene faith, and unclouded hope—be an abiding comfort and an increasing inspiration to the holiest living!

She died in Brookhaven, Miss., and was there gently laid to rest awaiting the resurrection of the just.

COL. W. L. NUGENT.

"A distinguished citizen, a great lawyer, and a courtly gentleman." These terms have been employed by unmeaning flattery or by undiscriminating partiality in connection with many men living or dead, and often in their use noble words have been degraded by the insincerity of the spirit with which they have been spoken, or by the extravagance of describing by them the amiable virtues of ordinary men.

This writer has known one man to whom they could be applied in all their fulness of praise without more than adequately measuring the conspicuous virtues that adorned his character, and to them must be added, as more honorable still, the words, "A fervent Christian and a generous man." He was a native of Louisiana, for nearly a life-time a citizen of Mississippi, and a resident of Jackson—Col. William Lewis Nugent.

Those who knew Col. Nugent most intimately will be the first to admit the justice of these words of praise. For many years, in both Church and State, he was one of Mississippi's most distinguished citizens. That he was a great lawyer, his simple, but persuasive eloquence, his strong and logical mind, his remarkable resourcefulness in the management of a difficult case and his extensive practice amply prove, while his stately dignity, his polished manners and his kindly heart declared the courtly gentleman. But it was in the beauty of his Christian character that many found the greatest charm of this great man. He impressed one as having consecrated to God all that he was and all that he possessed, and his habitual spirit was one of filial trust, humble, reverent joy, and fervent love.

Naturally quiet and reserved, he seemed undemonstrative, but there was one theme that always caused the voice to grow tender and the tears to well up into the eyes: his love for God, God's love for him, the joys and comforts of the Christian here, and the ineffable joys of the home "where the wicked cease from troubling and the weary are at rest." To see him with closed eyes and the tears rolling down his cheeks as his pastor spoke of these things, or the congregation, led by his own voice, sung some old familiar hymn, was an inspiration; but what words can describe the impression made when he led in prayer, the intonation of his rich, musical voice declaring the height of his spiritual joy, or its tremulous pathos showing the immeasurable depths of the tenderness of his love and his humility? In their devotional spirit, their chaste and beautiful language, and their apposite scriptural quotations, his prayers were the most impressive that this writer has ever heard. They will never be forgotten by those who heard them.

But Col. Nugent was not less conspicuous for his abounding liberality than for the fervor of his devotion, and by many this may be remembered as his distinguishing characteristic. To give was to him a privilege and a joy, and, indeed, so great was his pleasure in giving that up to his ability, and beyond, his generous hands lavished his benefactions upon those who were in need, and so far was he from the spirit of ostentation that he tried to hide from those nearest him the frequency and largeness of his gifts. His pastor, his friends, his acquaintances, the merest stranger, the young, the old—all found in him a ready sympathy and a liberal response.

That the generosity of the good man was sometimes unworthily received no one can doubt, but the spirit of the giver was like the spirit of his Lord, and to many his abounding and joyful liberality was the crowning glory of his character. If all to whom his bountiful hand dispensed the needed financial help could be numbered, a great host would appear. The spirit of the man is illustrated by the case of a young preacher whose work was hindered by the death of his horse. Meeting him, Col. Nugent said: "I hear you have lost your horse. When you get ready to buy another, draw on me for $25. The King's business demands haste." A distinguished preacher is reported to have said: "I have met many great Methodist laymen, but I have met only one W. L. Nugent."

RELATION OF THE EPWORTH LEAGUE TO WORLDLINESS.

(Paper read by Miss Zora Skaggs, of Blossom, Texas, before the Paris District Epworth League Conference, in Paris, Texas, July 28, 1897.)

Worldliness, in Methodist nomenclature, embraces all such pleasures as are not in harmony with the spirit and practice of vital religion. The term is synonymous with that general rule in our Discipline which forbids the "taking of such diversions as can not be used in the name of the Lord Jesus." "The name of the Lord Jesus" is a decisive test, and everything which can not stand such a test is unconditionally surrendered and renounced by everyone who assumes the obligations of membership in our church.

In their address to the church at large on the subject of worldliness, our Bishops specify "the modern dance, card-playing, theater-going, attendance upon race courses, circuses, and the like." These they point out as being especially pernicious and hurtful to spiritual life, and we can see no reason for differing, in the slightest degree, from their godly judgment.

As for the circus and the race course, we do not feel inclined to honor either with anything more than a mere mention in this paper. Of course, they are beneath the dignity and beyond the tolerance of Epworth Leaguers. And while dancing, card-playing and theater-going are but little, if any, better in their effects upon spiritual life, yet they are more popular, and command the patronage of more refined people. With the little time and space at our disposal, then, we will briefly notice each, and see if they, either or all, can stand the crucial test of "the name of our Lord Jesus."

I.—THE DANCE.

There was a dance in progress, we believe, in Belshazzar's house, when a mysterious hand began to write upon the wall, "Thou art weighed in the balance and found wanting." Might not the same thing be appropriately written concerning the head of any other house under similar circumstances? And we also read of a "state ball" in the palace of King Herod, which cost the head and life of John the Baptist, the last and greatest of the prophets. A wicked king, a godless mother and her profligate daughter, all conspired together to bring the prophetic age to a sudden close in the midst of a fashionable dance! Significant fact this—the spirit of prophecy and the spirit of the ball-room—can not live together. The presence of the one means the death of the other, and whenever and wherever the spirit of the ball-room predominates, the head of some faithful minister is apt to be taken off—not with the guillotine's bloody knife, to be sure, but with hatred's slanderous tongue.

The attitude of the Epworth League toward this form of amusement must be that of an enemy. Ask the unfortunate inmates of our rescue homes and reformatories by what route they came to such degradation, and eighty per cent. of them answer back, "By way of the ball-room," for four-fifths of these unfortunate ones, statistics tell us, began their career of shame in the ball-room. This is enough. "By their fruits ye shall know them." "Sow to the flesh, and of the flesh reap corruption."

II.—CARD PLAYING.

We are sometimes told that there is no harm, per se, in this form of amusement, but, as Epworth Leaguers, we must forever repudiate this compromise statement, and hold tenaciously to the only correct and philosophical view, that whatever uniformly leads to bad results is evil in itself. And that card-playing uniformly leads to bad results is a proposition which needs no proof further than unbiased observation. Not all who play the social game become gamblers, but all who become gamblers begin in the social game, and that, too, in many instances, in the parlor at home with mother, father, and loving sisters. And yet there are many mothers who lay the flattering unction to their souls that the same hands which have taught the social game to their children at home shall also sweep the golden harps some day in the New Jerusalem! It seems high time parents were waking up to the fact that they can not send their children to hell while they themselves are going to heaven. As the drunkard begins his career in the first drink, so the gambler begins his in the first social game. Beware, therefore, of the tendency of your actions. When Lot "pitched his tent toward Sodom," the tendency of his course was to evil, and the next we hear of him he was in Sodom and in trouble. The first game, the first drink, the first ball, is the pitching of your tent toward Sodom, and means trouble.

III.—THEATER-GOING.

The theater professes to be a place of innocent amusement. It has had ample time to make good this claim; and yet no minister of the gospel can attend it without losing his influence as such. Why should this be so if attendance upon stage performances is a harmless amusement? Shall the guides and leaders of our society be prohibited by public opinion from participation in that which is altogether harmless? Is society any purer because of the influence of the stage? If the pastors present were asked if their members who attend theaters are the same ones who attend the prayer meetings, Epworth League meetings, and the other regular services of the church, it would not be hard to guess what their answer would be. The history of the stage is an almost unbroken stream of immorality. With here and there a noble exception, the vast majority of theatrical performers have always been men and women of the worst moral character.

But lest you should think us ignorant or prejudiced, we will put a few of the friends of the stage upon the stand, and let them testify.

Some time ago a leading French paper sent out a bunch of queries, asking the opinion of various literary and artistic Parisians on the subject, and nearly all of them agree that innocence on the stage is a real hindrance to art. One answered as follows: "A young woman will express the passionate feelings of her role with the greater perfection, if she has felt them herself. Her art will be made up of the recollections of her experiences, vivified by the emotion that remains to her from her own joys and her own griefs." Another responded thus: "You ask me if innocence is a hindrance to an actress on the stage in rendering roles of passion. Certainly it is. It is necessary," he continued, "to have suffered, wept, cried, despaired, sobbed, loved, etc., to be able, by remembrance, to express it all on the stage." He further said: "All actors have been more or less ambitious, envious, jealous, angry, in love, vindictive, violent, hypocritical; * * * and so with actresses. No innocent girls, then," said he, "or as few as possible, on the stage." But the most significant reply was made by Emile Zola, who said that "a discussion of innocence on the stage is useless, for such a thing does not exist." It is also related that a mother once asked a French master of stage art if it would not be possible for her daughter to go on the stage, and yet remain an innocent girl, to which the master gravely responded, "Madam, I don't see of what use that would be."

Please remember that these admissions come from the leading and most pronounced devotees of the stage, and, coming from such a source, they amount to a most fearful arraignment of theaters. She who plays the role of unfaithful wife on the stage must, according to these men, be such in fact; and he who renders the role of murderer or hypocrite must himself be such. And yet we are told that the performance of such characters afford only innocent amusement!

The attitude of the Epworth League toward this form of worldliness can not be other than one of uncompromising hostility. As young Christians, filled with the Spirit and grace of our Lord, we are called upon to lift up our voices against that which has paralyzed the zeal of so many, and to record our protest against the offer of such characters to furnish our amusements for us. Such institutions must have neither our money, our presence, nor our influence. There is a more excellent way in which, by the grace of God, we will walk, assured that whatever in the way of pleasure we may have to forego, it will be more than compensated for in the last day, when we shall hear it said: "Well done, thou good and faithful servant; enter thou into the joy of thy Lord."

In conclusion, let us brace what has been said by the word of God, which says: "Be not deceived, God is not mocked; for whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap." "And be not conformed to this world, but be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind, that ye may prove what is that good and acceptable and perfect will of God." "Know ye not that the friendship of the world is enmity with God?" "Love not the world, neither the things that are in the world." If any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him."

These explicit utterances of inspiration should be the end of controversy to all who sincerely desire to know the will of God in relation to worldliness.

Fellow Leaguers, let us be a "peculiar people" indeed, "zealous of good works." In the world, and yet not of the world, let us "seek those things which are above, where Christ sitteth on the right hand of God," and "set our affections on things above, not on things on the earth."

Oh, that we might be an unearthly people—a royal, holy priesthood!—Texas Advocate.

LONGING.

Some humble door among Thy many mansions,
Some sheltering shade where sin and striving cease.
And flows forever through heaven's green expansions,
The river of thy peace.

There, from the music round about me stealing,
I fain would learn the new and holy song.
And find at last beneath Thy trees of healing,
The life for which I long.

SUNDAY-SCHOOL—ITS RELATION TO RIGHT LIVING.

It is assumed that those who may read this paper know what is meant by Sunday-school. By right living we simply mean living as "Jesus Christ the Righteous" hath taught us to live both by precept and example. To live right we must think right, speak right, and act right. Now, if we are going to do these things, we must know what is right and what is wrong, so that we may do the one and leave undone the other. But where is the source from which mankind is to learn the right from the wrong? Is it not from the Bible, the Book of books? Evidently it is. It is in the Bible that we find the law and the prophets telling us how to live that we may be right in the sight of God. It is in the Bible that we find the life and works of the only begotten Son of God, setting forth all the beauties and way of right living, and giving us commandments on which he says hang all the law and the prophets. Doubtless, we all agree that without right living no one can enter the home where "there are many mansions" prepared from the foundation of the world. Now, Jesus says: "I am the way, the truth, and the life. No man cometh unto the Father but by me." So, if we expect or desire to enter the heavenly home after this short life shall have ended, we must enter it by the way prepared through Jesus Christ. And it is certain we must learn of the way before we can travel it. The Word says (I. John ii, 3-5): "And hereby we do know that we know him, if we keep his commandments. He that saith, I know him, and keepeth not his commandments, is a liar, and the truth is not in him. But whoso keepeth his word, in him verily is the love of God perfected." Now, how are we going to fashion our lives after Christ's life without knowing his life? And how are we going to keep his commandments without knowing his commandments?

The question now is, How are we going to know these things? Let us look at some of the ways in which the Sunday school helps both young and old in learning these things, without which there can be no such thing as right living.

We will begin by noticing its help to the children, for the destiny of each person and of the whole human race is determined very largely by the training of the young. "Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it." And the contrary may be equally true, "Train up a child (or, rather, let him grow up) in the way he should not go, and when he is old he is not likely to depart from it." A child is not a lifeless being, but he is full of life, and he is going to be something most all the time he is not asleep. So, unless there are some means provided that will give him something useful to do on the Sabbath day, there will very probably be fifty-two days in a year unprofitably spent, and very often quite detrimental to the child, and these fifty-two days in a year will amount to one whole year in seven; so, by the time the child reaches the age of manhood, he will have spent as much as three whole years in Sabbath days, two years of which may have been very profitably spent in learning the things that are so essential to right living. Since a child's mind, while young, is not sufficiently developed to enable him to learn of Christ, his works, and his teachings, as he should by himself, it is necessary to provide some means of assisting him in this study. And the Sunday-school—if it is what it ought to be—will supply this need. Here we have lessons taken from the Bible, and usually the most important in the Bible, and simplified and prepared by learned men who both know and love Christ as a personal Savior. Then we have the best and wisest men and women for teachers (or, at least, ought to have), who can explain the more difficult parts, and impress upon the child the more important parts, so that he may remember them: As the memory is very active in childhood, the child can learn the commandments, the most important lessons, the general teachings of the Bible, and the greater events in the life of Christ, and get them so firmly planted in his memory while young that when he becomes older, and the reasoning powers develop, he can meditate on these things and be able to see their value in the process of right living. We, who have reached the age of manhood, know how fresh and clear the truths are to our minds that we learned in the Sunday-school, perhaps in many cases before we could read.

I think it will be admitted that the Sunday-school is just as important in giving a child a knowledge of the Bible and its teachings as the common literary school is in giving a child a knowledge of the subjects taught in such schools. And, as a rule, a child deprived of the Sunday-school will be just as ignorant of the Bible and the laws therein as a child deprived of the common literary school is ignorant of the subjects taught in such schools. This knowledge of the Bible acquired through the Sunday-school in childhood will exert a great influence on the entire subsequent life, for the study of God's Word is like the study of many other books. We have no real desire to study it until we get some knowledge of it and become partially acquainted with it, which partial knowledge begets a desire to know more of him who is the way, the truth, and the life of right living. I think the Sunday-school is sufficient to give this knowledge of and partial acquaintance with the Bible. One great reason why so many older people know so little of the teachings of God's Word is because they failed to have their partial knowledge of and desire for more knowledge imparted to them while young by means of the Sunday-school. If, as was stated in a former issue of the ADVOCATE, it is necessary to create appetite for strong drink among the young in order to support the saloons and fill the jails, penitentiaries, almshouses, and drunkards' graves, it is also necessary to create among the young an appetite for the Book that teaches right living if our country in the future is to be governed by right principles.

We now come to the class of young men and young women; so we must look at the Sunday school as it influences them. (The Epworth League was organized to help this class of young people, but not for the purpose of supplanting the Sunday-school.) This class, a few years ago, was in the "Little People's" class, and it will not be many years before it will constitute the middle-aged class, which class must bear the heat and burden of the day. These young men and young women will then constitute the superintendents and teachers, on whom the destiny of the Sunday-schools depends. Then, how necessary it is for those who make up this class to be properly taught and brought into the condition of right living before they reach the class on which such a tremendous responsibility rests.

We find the class of young men and young women like the class of children in some respects; in others quite different. Both are alike in being full of life, always doing something; but they differ very much in the manner of looking at life and the affairs connected with life. They think differently, for, as the reasoning powers begin to develop, they begin to notice and to enquire into the causes and effects, the purpose and benefits of the things that confront them. New desires, ambitions and association arise in and around them. Now, wherewithal shall a young man—or a young woman, too—keep his or her way clear and life pure amidst these new surroundings? The Psalmist answers that question for us: "By taking heed thereto according to thy word."

Here is work for the Sunday school again, for since it meets one day in each week for the purpose of studying God's Word, it must be of great benefit to the young men in helping them keep their way clear, and life pure and right. Sunday is a day of rest from our regular line of work, but, then, the mind does not cease to act, but turns to something else, whether good or bad; and this change is rest to the mind. Now, it is very necessary that those who have passed over this critical period of life provide some means whereby the minds of the young men and women may be directed to subjects that will bring them into the conditions of right living, for if the conditions be fulfilled, the life can not be other than right. The Sunday-school, if it is what it ought to be, will supply this need to a great extent.

We have the learned men to blaze out the way and open the road for us, and we all know we can make better headway in an open road than through the woods. But, of course, no amount of help will take the place of individual effort. The great benefit of the Sunday-school to this class is in keeping those in the right way that started right in the infant class, and getting others right who have not heretofore gone right, for if we can but succeed in getting them to taste of the Word of Life and see the beauties of the Christian religion, a great victory will be won for the cause of Christ and humanity. To reach this class the Sunday school must not drag, but be a lively, attractive and progressive one. It must be more attractive than any other Sunday gathering in the community, for if it is not, the effect sought will not be produced. Even if some members of this class were to fail to learn the truths of the Bible from lack of individual effort, the association such ones would be in while attending the Sunday-school would have a marked influence for the right; while, negatively, much good would be done by keeping the young men from engaging in pursuits that frequently would be quite injurious to them.

Now, can there be anything derived from the Sunday-school that will help the fathers and mothers to keep their lives right? We think so. If the fathers and mothers have had the benefit of the Sunday school from childhood up, they know many truths that are essential to right living; but now, as they are to be the superintendents and teachers, they need to know not only the letter of these Bible truths, but also the spirit of them, so that they may be able to teach both by precept and example. And in order to impress the lessons upon the minds of the children so they may remember them, these instructors, whom we say are the fathers and mothers, will have to know these truths better than while they were being taught, and this demand for extra and fresh knowledge calls for more study, and in this way is a great benefit to fathers and mothers. The Sunday-school is a great benefit to the older people, inasmuch as it takes their minds from the temporal affairs of this life, and directs them to spiritual things, which are for eternity. And by changing the subject of the thought from the physical and temporal to the spiritual and eternal, the mind is not only rested, but the whole life is ennobled and elevated, and the nearer it is transformed into the ideal life of "the man, Christ Jesus," the more nearly that life will be right.

Would that all mankind could be brought into the condition of right living, either through the Sunday-school or some other means that have been and may be provided. If such a time shall ever come, then we will need no more jails, no more penitentiaries, no more civil courts; then there will be no more saloons, no more drunkards, no more murderers, no more unhappy homes, no more places of vice and corruption, and no more decaying of nations. But be assured that until all mankind is brought into the conditions of right living, these things will be found. Let the fathers and mothers do their part in bringing mankind into the condition of right living by keeping lively and attractive Sunday schools in every community possible, and by taking the little ones to these schools, and instructing them in the way of righteousness.

Let us, as young men and young women, do our part in this great work by going to the Sunday-school and learning the truths that will make our lives right, so that we may be fully prepared for the great work of the next class, for it will be but a few years till one will be in the class on which the destiny of the Sunday-school depends. Let us, as pastors, follow the Discipline in this work.

KWANSEI GAKUIN.

BY MRS. T. H. HAYDEN.

You may or may not know that the students of Kwansei Gakuin have a society which is known as the "English Language Society," organized for the sake of further improvement in English than can be made in one class room alone. This society meets every Sunday night in the school chapel, and there are speeches, declamations, essays, orations, dialogues, debates and conversation, all in English, and all the proceedings are in English—minutes, report and read in English, etc. One of the foreign teachers is always present and acts as critic for the society. Often we all go—Dr. and Mrs. Wainright, Mr. Hayden and I—and it is really an interesting thing to me to watch their progress, and see their struggle with our noble language. Mr. Nishikawa, so lately returned from America, is now the president of the society, and having used only English for so many years, is a great help to them. About twice a year the society has an open session, to which many friends, both Japanese and foreign, are invited, and for these sessions there is special preparation. Some weeks ago Mr. Nishikawa asked me to assist in the training of the young men who were to take part in the open session to be held in Kobe, Dec. 11. I very gladly consented to do what I could for them, and my work soon began. He had taken the beginning of the training by, very sensibly, translating, to some extent, what they were going to speak and read, and trying to make them fully understand it and enter into the spirit. When I first heard, "Friends, Romans, Countrymen, lend me your ears," from the lips of a young Japanese who knew so little English that I could not talk to him at all except as far as my Japanese would go, I was somewhat alarmed. It was certainly what he would have said of a Japanese oration from my lips, "taihen okashii" (very funny). I felt almost tempted to give up the task I had so gladly (and rashly) undertaken and say, "I can't." But I did not give it up. I said, "I'll try," instead of "I can't," and went to work. You ought to have seen the way I declaimed and emphasized and gesticulated for that young man! Shade of Shakespeare and Mark Anthony, pardon me! I imagine if Prof. Merrill and his elocution class could have looked in on the scene they would have said, "taihen okashii," too, or words to that effect. I sometimes thought of them, but as that rather endangered the gravity of the situation I tried to banish them from my mind. Another young man had a selection from Mark Twain, "The Bad Little Boy Who Didn't Come to Grief" (which we called on the programme "Sinful Jim"), and that from an entirely different standpoint was as difficult as the funeral oration. Then there was a dialogue between Alexander and a Robber, in which the Robber Chief talks back at the great Conqueror, and tells him he is not any better than himself, though as he was born a king, he has been able to be the mightier robber of the two. You can imagine, perhaps, from past experiences, that I had to work. I did have to, whether you can or not, and the results were so surprising and gratifying that I shall never undertake a similar enterprise with a feeling of discouragement or hopelessness. The boys worked hard, improved daily, and did so well the night of the open session that I was proud of them. The house was full, most of young men, all of whom were quiet and attentive, and apparently enjoyed the programme. The foreign friends who were present were interested and delighted and heartily congratulated Mr. Yoshioka as president of the Kwansei Gakuin, and Mr. Nishikawa as president of the society, upon the progress the boys were making in the study of English. An oration on "The Need of New Japan" was a thoughtful, earnest address, showing the need of the country, in all its departments, to be "the religion of Jesus Christ, the Son of the living God." An essay on "The Vanity of Fame" was a good paper, showing the worthless ness of mere fame, reputation, and the value of a true and noble life spent in the work for the uplifting of humanity. This and the oration were by theological students. I corrected for them the actual mistakes, but made no attempt to put them into idiomatic English, so that they had a decidedly foreign flavor. I thought they were really the more impressive that they were not exactly idiomatic. The funeral oration was delivered in a manner that was well worthy of praise, and the young man deserved credit for his faithful work. He was entirely conquered by one word only—"wood." He would make his mouth into a round "O," and then shoot out "ood," in spite of all my efforts to convince him that "wood," while moaning a very different thing, was pronounced exactly the same way as the verb "would," which he said in its proper place without the least difficulty. It was no small undertaking for him to memorize and declaim that famous and difficult selection, and I was surprised that it was so well done. Alexander and the Robber Chief had quite a spirited little talk, and were much commended. A Japanese oration on "Principle" was interpreted, both speaker and interpreter doing well, though the interpreter was a little too quick to understand, and not quite attentive enough to the speaker to keep down a suspicion, even in the minds of the uninitiated, that he had learned the speech pretty thoroughly before hand. Between the speeches we had music on the violin and accordion by a young man who is quite a musical genius. Taken as a whole, the evening was a great success, and the young men of the English Language Society have every reason to be encouraged.

I have written so far, in lighter vein, of this work, but it is by no means a light matter. It means much to these young men to be able to read English intelligently. It opens to them the whole realm of Christian literature, which is a new world to them, and enables them to come in contact with Christian thought as nothing else can. Some of our very best and thoughtful Christians have been led to investigate and embrace Christianity through their study of English. Teaching English without teaching the Bible, I, for one, do not approve of, but in connection with the Bible and the religion of Christ, it is a most valuable means to the end we are working for—the Christianization of Japan. I heartily wish we had a man here who could give his entire time to the teaching of English—a man of piety and culture, whose life, day after day, would tell upon the student-body, as he opens to them the fields of Christian literature.

"Lull'd in the countless chambers of the brain,
Our thoughts are link'd by many a hidden chain:
Awake but one, and, lo! what myriads rise!
Each stamps its image as the other flies!"

Such would be reflection of one who inspected the little, almost sacred, manuscript volume recording the Minutes of the W. F. M. Society of Holly Springs.

When we take a retrospective view of this work such a long list of worthies appear that were all mentioned, no space would be left in the paper, and, perhaps, but little patience with the reader. The following names are mentioned as the presidents of the society: Mrs. Cameron, Mrs. N. B. Fant, Mrs. Barcroft, Mrs. Inge, Mrs. Randolph, and Mrs. Honnoll. It is worthy of mention that the present president, Mrs. Honnoll; treasurer, Mrs. Clara Fant, and secretary, Mrs. Walker, have held these offices nine years.

The first meeting was called by the order of our present presiding elder, Dr. Cameron, and was organized with 13 members, Feb. 16, 1880. His honored wife became the first president, and the majority of her successors have been the wives of the pastors, still proving the grand work that preachers' wives have done in the upbuilding of the Master's kingdom. How many of these pearls of great price, whose influence seemingly went no farther than the parsonage walls, yet their daily sacrifice, their earnest, faithful, efficient work was the power behind the throne, giving permanence and solidity to that wrought before the public by the pastor.

When attending these meetings, and listening to the reading of the Minutes containing such earnest, hopeful words, the mind of the listener has wandered from the scene of action in speculation as to the inspiration of the zealous work these brave soldiers of the cross were monthly trying to accomplish.

Memory reverted to the first meeting of that enthusiastic missionary worker, Mrs. Annie B. Fant, and the appreciation shown by her co laborers in unanimously electing her their Conference president. How clearly imagination pictured to the mind the great benefit her sweet Christian character would be to the writer, when the expected time came for a close companionship! But, alas! before that time the "death-ax" had cut the full growing sheaf, and the Lord said, "Come up higher." Oh, the grandeur of a consecrated Christian! Strangers may come and take up their abode, but they soon become conscious of the life of one "who, being dead, yet speaketh." How carefully should we weigh our words—yea, our thoughts—that we may be treasured as this devotee of the Master's cause! Her name is mentioned as the first lady who led the society in prayer. It is stated of her in the first Minutes after her death, "that she always came with her head and heart full of plans to advance the work that lay so near her heart."

In the earlier history of the society it is recorded that the pastors assisted, but as the years went by the ladies did the singing and praying, too. The Minutes record various meetings more or less interesting, some at long intervals. No Minutes recorded from August, 1882, to March, 1884. No meeting from December, 1884, until the following August. A few regular meetings from October, 1885, to January, 1888. A bare existence, but some money remitted to the Conference treasurer every year.

A continuous revival in the church in 1888, during the pastorate of the gifted and lamented G. S. Inge, was followed by a corresponding revival in the cause of missions. The Minutes report that he called a meeting on Jan. 4, and gave a most inspiring talk on foreign missions; and only those who have listened to his grand bursts of eloquence can have an idea of that stirring appeal. Later, after a week of prayer, his sermon was in behalf of heathen women, such as was never before heard. His motto was, "Attempt great things for God; expect great things from God."

In 1888 the annual meeting of the W. F. M. Society convened in Holly Springs, and that year the auxiliary remitted $418, reaching a "high-water" mark never attained since.

Selections.

Wait upon God for guidance, and God will lead you into new power for his service, into new gladness in his fellowship; he will lead you up into new thoughts about what his church needs, and about what the perishing world needs; he will lead you out into a larger trust in him; he will prepare you to expect new things from him. Let each one of us say: "May my life be to live, and die, and to labor and to pray continually for this one thing, that in me and around me, and in the church, and throughout the world 'God may be all in all.'"

"There is an impression among some people that a man is a better man after having tasted sin, after knowing evil experience, then repenting, being forgiven and restored. This is a mistaken impression. Innocence is far better than penitence. Penitence is infinitely better than despair, but a life is never so beautiful after sin's fires have swept over it as it would have been if it had been kept untarnished and had realized God's first thought for it.

Experience gives power if we use it aright, for experience is simply the practical knowledge of God's ways in life.

THE JOINT BOARD OF FINANCE.

The Joint Board of Finance is appointed by the president that presides over the Annual Conference, at the close of the session, to hold their office until the close of the next ensuing Annual Conference. One clerical and one layman for each presiding elder's district. The clerical members of the Board are also members of the Conference, and I think the laymen should be members of the Conference during the time they are members of the Joint Board.

My reasons are these: When the District Conference elects delegates to the Annual Conference, it is a mere accident if the appointee of the district is elected. In fact, very few, if any, of the members know who the appointee is; and if they do, they don't seem to see the importance of electing him.

In no District Conference I have ever attended, when the election for delegates was being held, was the question asked, Who is the member of the Joint Board for this district? Now, if the appointee is not one of the delegates elect, as a rule, he will not go to Conference. If he does not go, his place must be filled by the Board, and the object of the appointing power is defeated. If he does go, not being a member of the Conference, he does not take the interest in the work he would take if he was a member. His name does not appear on the roll of applicants for a home at the seat of Conference, and when he applies for a home, he is told that, as his name is not on the roll, there has been no provisions made for him. (But I will do the best I can for you. I will get you in somewhere.)

Just here I will say the good brother does not feel altogether as welcome as he would feel if a home had been provided for him. The work assigned to the Joint Board is of no mean importance, if they do their duty (and I am of the opinion that the term of office should be much longer than one year). Very few men are competent to do the work intelligently and satisfactorily until they are in possession of all of the facts touching each claimant on the Conference funds. It is very human-like for everyone representing claimants to do the very best that can be done for them. With these facts to adjust, the Board has some hard points to discriminate. Self and selfish ends should cut no figure in the doings of the Board, and a new member, even with the reports of preceding Boards before him, is not prepared to do the work as well as members that have been on duty in the past.

I would suggest that Par. 317, Sec. 5, Discipline, 1891, be changed to read: "Said Board shall consist of one clerical member of the Conference, and one layman for each presiding elder's district, who shall also be a member of the next ensuing Annual Conference, provided that each District Conference shall recognize said appointee as one of their delegates."

And change Ans. 1 to Ques. 1, Sec. 2, Par. 44, to read: "All the traveling preachers in full connection with it, and three lay representatives, one of whom may be a local preacher, from each presiding elder's district."

FROM THE WORK.

Rev. C. C. Evans: "The new year begins well with us. Satartia circuit is for the upgrade. We hope to do much better this year than last. Our new church-building in Satartia is under good headway. Will not be very long before the Methodists will have a church-house they can call their own, and they will be so proud of it. God bless you and the ADVOCATE."

Rev. R. A. Davis, Waterproof, La., Jan. 7, 1898: "On the nineteenth of January we bid farewell to our dear friends in Oak Ridge, took train for Vidalia, La., arriving about 10 P. M. We sought and found a boarding-house where we remained, of course, until next morning, the twentieth, when, paying our fare, we sought the steamboat landing, where we went aboard of the nice and commodious steamboat, the "Saint Joseph," whose officers treated us with great kindness, and after a seven eight hours' travel the boat landed us about a mile and a half of Waterproof; but the ladies and gentlemen of Waterproof were up to the emergency, sent a large hack, which met us as we went ashore and brought us direct to the parsonage, where—oh! delightful—the brethren and sisters met us and gave us a cordial greeting and reception, and soon invited us to a splendid supper, which was already prepared and in waiting for us. The larder was filled; and more, the storm has not arrived, but the shower continues to fall, and if you could see the nice preserves, pickles, and jellies that come in by the market-basketful, you would certainly feel that it was good and pleasant to be a pastor of such kind and generous people. I have preached at two of the appointments—Waterproof and Wesley—and received a warm welcome. Our prayer meeting is increasing in interest, congregations growing larger, and there is a prospect of a revival in the future. Our first Quarterly Conference came off, but no presiding elder came. The stewards, however, did their duty, and the work was duly apportioned. We are looking forward for good times, as 'all things work together for the good of them that love the Lord.' Truly, this is a noble people, and 'our lines have fallen to us in pleasant places.' Pray for us, that this preacher may do a good work this year for the Lord, and bring many souls to the blessed Christ. We are looking after the interests of the ADVOCATE."

WINONA DISTRICT.

Methodism in the bounds of the Winona district, North Mississippi Conference, is in a highly prosperous condition. Rev. J. B. Stone is serving his fourth year as presiding elder, and is devoting himself to the work with his accustomed zeal and energy. He and his preachers are sanguine of a successful year.

At Winona Rev. Geo. H. Lipscomb is pushing the work with the same hopeful enthusiasm and resolute vigor that have caused him to score a success in every charge he has served. He already has more than one hundred dollars in cash for foreign missions, and doubtless by the time this communication appears in print he will have paid the assessment in full. Preacher and people say the Annual Conference assessments will all be paid in full. There is no room to doubt the building this year of a ten-thousand-dollar church. Capt. J. T. Lay promised four thousand dollars on condition that ten thousand be raised. Already five thousand of the required additional six thousand is in sight, and the canvas has scarcely gone beyond the officials of the church. The Official Board, by a unanimous vote, resolved that the church should be known as the "Moore Memorial Church," in honor of that devoted layman, who was the founder of the town of Winona and a pioneer of Methodism in this section—Col. O. J. Moore. This church will be a worthy monument to his memory, an ornament to the town and a great forward movement for Methodism.

At Greenwood our work is prospering in a like measure. Rev. J. H. Mitchell is demonstrating that four years successful work as presiding elder did not unfit him for active, successful work in the pastorate. Greenwood will also build a ten-thousand-dollar church this year. Sister L. H. Henry, who has nobly stood by and generously supported the church for a generation, has already paid one thousand dollars in cash; and an active, judicious committee is at work, and erelong work will be begun on the building.

Rev. G. W. Gordon is bringing to completion a handsome two-thousand-dollar church begun last year at Itta Bena, one of the most prosperous and rapidly growing towns on the Southern railway.

At Carrollton Rev. H. F. Cunningham is diligently looking after all the interests of the church, which he reports to be in a prosperous condition. The Epworth League is well officered and actively at work in all departments. The assessment for foreign missions has been paid in full, and all others will be if those people do not break their record of several years' standing. Dr. Murrah spent the first Sunday in February there, and preached a great sermon to a large congregation. We learn they are expecting a visit from Bishop Galloway in the near future.

Rev. W. H. Sanders is serving with great acceptability his third year on Carrollton circuit. His young people are helping to raise the collections, and are succeeding. He expects to dedicate a splendid church at McAnerney the first Sunday in March.

Rev. J. F. Evans, true and tried, is serving his third year at Vaiden to the delight of the people on that circuit.

At Indianola, Rev. W. T. Browning, a "Millsaps boy," is working with zeal and hope, and the people are delighted with his ministry. There is a career of usefulness before this choice young man.

Of the other charges your correspondent has no particular information, other than that preachers and people are mutually pleased, and the work moves forward.

LETTER FROM FLORIDA.

Again under the sunny skies of my native Florida, and amid the associations of the large part of my itinerant life! It is sweet to be again in the old field of labor, and with fellow-soldiers, by whose side so many battles were fought for the Lord; yet I do not forget the newer and briefer experiences in old Mississippi, the people among whom some of my most earnest labors were expended, and the brethren beloved in the Lord, both lay and clerical, who honored me with their friendship, and made my life brighter with their love. To these I send a hearty "God bless you." They live in my heart in an undying love. I trust they will still pray for me. I do not regret my Mississippi experience, though glad to return to my Florida home, for God dealt very graciously with my soul while there. Its very trials brought me nearer to God, and I find my faith stronger, my hope brighter, and my love for God and men deeper.

My welcome back has been warm, tender, and sincere, and I shall try to merit the confidence of my brethren by devoted service.

Bartow is a beautiful town of two to three thousand people, with an electric light plant, waterworks, an ice factory, fourteen miles of hard-paved streets, a State Military Institute, and a fine grammar and high school, with nearly four hundred pupils and eleven teachers. Our church here has a good hold, but there is a great field for development, and the prospects very hopeful for a good year. We need a new church-building, which we hope to have within the next two years. The severe freezes of 1895, which, at a blow, paralyzed for awhile the orange industry, was a severe stroke on Florida's prosperity; but in many sections the orange trees have grown out again, and are entering profitable bearing, with fine prices for "the best orange in our markets." To appreciate an orange, one must eat a genuine, well-ripened Florida sweet. Another freeze about the first of January, 1898, scorched the foliage and made the people very blue, but did not seriously affect the branches. We are just now passing the crisis (Feb. 4) of another blast from the north, and the tender young twigs and leaves look fresh and green, with no sign of damage, and the warm sun-rays are driving away the forces of the ice king. Early vegetables are profitable, tobacco is being planted by many; while strawberry culture is largely followed. Soon ripe berries will be going into the markets of the North at seventy-five cents per quart.

The kingdom of Christ is here to stay—freeze or no freeze. Through financial disasters and years of prosperity wonderfully promising, through Summer's heat and Winter's disastrous freezes, the noble band of Florida preachers have toiled on, and will "till Jesus come." Already revival fires are burning among us.

I go next week to assist for a few days an old friend in a meeting already begun. The following week a union service is to begin here, in which Methodist, Presbyterian, Baptist and Christian Churches will join forces against the common foe. This is a prohibition town and county, and I have not seen a drunken man since coming here.

Louisiana and Mississippi both hold a part of our heart, as in the former my dear oldest daughter resides, and we have left our Grace with that splendid educator and Christian gentleman, Prof. Beeson, of the East Mississippi Female College.

I ask a remembrance in the prayers of the brethren. May the Lord bless them abundantly!

HENRY E. PARRIDGE.

Bartow, Fla.

Test your sincerity by the manner in which you control or resist your evil thoughts. Do you suffer your thoughts to tamper with evil, to dally with wrong-doing? If so, you are not sincere. The tyrant Nero tried to degrade some of the great Roman nobles to as low a level as his own by making them appear as actors in the arena on the stage. To disobey was death. Florus was bidden thus to appear, and, doubting whether to obey, consulted the virtuous and resolute Agrippinus. "Go, by all means," answered Agrippinus. "Well, but," replied Florus with astonishment, "you yourself refused to obey." "Yes," answered Agrippinus, "because I did not deliberate about it." The categorical imperative, the naked, absolute prohibition of duty, must be implicitly, unquestioningly, instantly, obeyed. To deliberate about it is to be a secret traitor; and the line which separates the secret traitor from the open rebel is thin as the spider's web.—Canon Farrar.

What love can compare with the tender self-sacrificing spirit of the weary, watch-worn mother by the side of her suffering little one? Such mothers take little or no account of their own weariness and weakness, but keep on until they drop. They seldom realize how completely their baby's health depends upon their own.

Every mother, and every woman who expects to be a mother, ought to obtain the health-bringing, strength-creating assistance of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. It gives elastic endurance to the organs concerned in motherhood, and nourishing vitality to the special nerve-centers.

Taken early during gestation, it makes motherhood perfectly safe and almost painless. Its beneficial effect is transmitted to the child in increased constitutional vigor. It protects the mother against relapse and improves the quantity and quality of nourishment during the nursing period.

It reinforces tired over-wrought women at every critical stage, and heals the special diseases to which they are subject. It was designed for this express purpose by an educated physician and skilled specialist.

Dr. Pierce has devoted thirty years to this particular field of practice. His thousand-page book, the "People's Medical Adviser," will be sent free, for 21 one-cent stamps to pay the cost of mailing only. Or, cloth-bound for 31 stamps. Address R. V. Pierce, M. D., Buffalo, N. Y.

Mrs. J. B. Clough, Box 203, Lisbon, Grafton Co., New Hampshire, writes: "I am the mother of a nice baby four and a half months old. He is a perfect child and weighs about eighteen pounds. If you remember I wrote you about a year ago about my condition. I cannot give too much praise to your 'Favorite Prescription' as it saved me a great deal of suffering. I got along remarkably well, this being my first baby."

REVIVAL OF BIBLE STUDY.

One of the most encouraging signs of the times is the increased and increasing interest in the study of the Bible, both as literature and as the revelation of God to man. No other book is being so much written about, so earnestly read, or so carefully investigated. Books by the million on subjects innumerable are being turned out by the presses of this and other lands, but books anent the Bible exceed all others in number and in carefulness of preparation. Certain novels and books on socialistic and scientific lines have big runs occasionally, but the interest in them is only temporary. It is a fact of momentous significance that the Bible is the most salable book on the market. Said Mr. O. E. Turner recently, who is one of the most well-known book men of the United States, and the representative of one of our mammoth publishing houses: "The one book whose sales go on increasingly year by year, and which leads all other publications by hundreds of thousands of copies, is the Bible. Right now there is no book enjoying a specially heavy run. The 'Heavenly Twins' and 'Trilby' were the last to score big hits with the reading public; but to-day both are a drug on the market."

In addition to the extensive study of God's Word by children and youth in the Sunday-school, Bible classes numbering thousands of attendants have recently been organized in several large American cities for the week-day study of the Word, the movement having started from Mr. Moody's Bible classes in Chicago. That in the rush of modern city life hundreds of business and professional men, laborers, society people and others can be induced to lay aside their cares and pursuits long enough to attend a Bible class one or two nights a week, and read not only several chapters, but whole books in the Scriptures each day, almost passes belief; and yet such is the case at present in several cities.

Listen to what Dr. R. A. Torrey, in a recent number of the Baptist Standard, has to say about the Moody Bible classes in Chicago, which have now been in operation over three months, the average weekly attendance being thirty-seven hundred:

"There are five classes, one being held each week night, with the exception of Wednesday night. Twenty-five denominations are represented, and among the attendants are a number of avowed skeptics and infidels. Every class of society is represented. One of the evening papers had an amusing account of a traveling man who was noticed in the sleeper poring earnestly over some book. One after another retired for the night, but still the man read on far into the night. At last the conductor's curiosity was piqued, and he asked the man what he was reading. 'Exodus for the next week's Bible class.' The meetings are full of life and interest. Many put all their spare time at home, in leisure hours at store and work, and in cars going to and fro, into Bible study. A prominent man in one of Chicago's most prominent business houses said last week that he had been unable to look at a newspaper for a week, he had been so absorbed in the study of the lesson. A laboring man in my own church, who had to get up at six to go to work, has gotten up at five for months so as to study the Bible. The delight with which members of the class talk of the Bible is touching.

"The direct effect of the truth upon the lives of those in the classes has been very noticeable. There have been many definite cases of conviction of sin and confession and abandonment of it. Many have been led to long and seek for a deeper life in Christ. Many have come to know the abounding joyfulness of true Christian living. Many have been led into usefulness in teaching the Word and in personal work, both by spoken word and correspondence."

Such a movement is fraught with deep meaning, and we trust that it will spread from city to city, and from village to village, until the whole country shall feel its mighty impulse and heavenward tendencies.

Pastors can scarcely do a better thing than to enkindle in their people a deep interest in and love for the Word of God. The average Christian knows very little about the Bible, and his reading thereof is both scant and unappreciative. He needs direction, instruction and encouragement in Bible study from those who are familiar with the Scriptures. A sermon or short talk now and then on "How to study the Bible" would be vastly beneficial in most congregations. It is true there are books on the subject by the score, but the average church member does not know their names, and is with great difficulty induced to buy such books. The religious papers also frequently contain very helpful and suggestive articles on Bible study. Multitudes, however, never see them, so if not given such instruction from the pulpit, they go uninstructed. If people can be gotten to read the Bible for themselves, incalculable good will be done. After long and fierce contentions about the evolution of religion, the canon of Scripture, and the antiquity of man, theologians have begun to cry, "Back to Christ." Let the church join in the refrain, and also add the watchword, "Back to the Bible;" for too oft has it been neglected.

AT WHITE CASTLE.

By invitation of the pastor, Rev. C. C. Weir, we lectured at White Castle on Tuesday night, the eighth. Dr. Weir had advertised so extensively and judiciously that we had an audience sufficient to fill the Opera House, the audience comprising not only Methodists and other Protestants, but also a number of Jews and Catholics. Whether interested or not, they seemed so, and gave respectful attention to what we had to say. The proceeds of the lecture will go into a fund which Dr. Weir is raising for the building of a $1,000 parsonage, which he expects to complete within a few months. As he has a habit of succeeding in his enterprises, we do not doubt that he will succeed in this. When he does so he will be entitled to very great honor, since our membership in White Castle is small, and our resources meagre. Bro. Weir is exceedingly popular, not only with his own flock, but with people of all creeds and of no creed. Although only about eight or ten years old, White Castle claims a population of 1 500. It is a live, progressive town, and will doubtless continue to grow.

In accordance with an engagement made by Bro. Weir, we went to the church in the afternoon to officiate in a baptismal service. We also visited with him a member of the Protestant Episcopal Church, who was supposed to be entering the "valley of the shadow of death," and administered to him the sacrament of the Lord's Supper.

During our stay in White Castle we were delightfully entertained in the hospitable home of Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Jefferson, to whom we are indebted for many appreciated courtesies.

We also enjoyed delightful companionship with Bro. and Sister Weir, and with Bro. Kent, of Plaquemine, and Miss Miller, of Calcasieu. But our delightful visit was soon over, and we were back in the treadmill.

AMERICAN INSTITUTE OF SACRED LITERATURE.

The Home Study Department of the Sunday-school is one which is gaining every year a greater importance and acceptance in the Sunday-school world. It contains wonderful possibilities in the way of promoting the side of Sunday-school work, which sometimes suffers amid the multiplicity of exercises and the miscellaneous interests of a well-organized school, namely: the study of the Bible. In most schools a period of thirty minutes is devoted to the study of the lesson. In a one hour session no longer time can easily be given. In the home, however, there are no such limitations. If the subject and material are interesting, the study period can be indefinitely extended, even through all the days of the week.

The essential condition of success in home work is interesting material in an attractive form. This can be found in many directions, but in its selection certain questions should be asked: (a) Is it systematic and continuous? (b) Is it to be studied? (c) Does it require the study of the Bible itself more than outside helps? (d) Does it require the student to think for himself? (e) Does it guide his thinking into right channels? These are important questions in work where there is no teacher to give instruction.

In this connection The American Institute of Sacred Literature has called our attention to its courses in the 'Life of Christ," and we think that all superintendents of Sunday-schools who are interested in the Home Department, or even in the best material for adult Bible classes or teachers' training classes in the main school, should examine these courses. The institute may be addressed at Hyde Park, Chicago, Ills.

THE WORK WELL-NIGH DONE.

It will be a joy to the church to know that the "Missionary Debt," so nobly pledged by our people, is being as promptly paid. It is now reduced to where the entire removal is nigh. The large majority of subscribers have paid, and it only remains for those who have not taken up their pledge to do so, and the debt is no more.

Both the fiscal year and the quadrennium close March 31; and we are aiming for a clear deck on that day. Help us by sending all unpaid subscriptions to the treasurer, G. W. Cain, Nashville, Tenn., before the day above mentioned.

We have sent out letters to the pastors in regard to early collections, and the responses to those letters are full of assurance, and give such financial hope and promise as we have not known.

While we give thanks for blessing and success, let the whole church pray for the continued prosperity and progress of our Zion.

NEW BOOKS.

CHRISTIAN INSTITUTIONS. By Alexander V. G. Allen, D. D., professor of Ecclesiastical History in the Episcopal Theological School in Cambridge. Crown, 8 vo. 577 pages. $2.50 net. New York: Charles Scribner's Sons.

The volume in hand belongs to the International Theological Library Series now being prepared under the editorship of Charles A. Briggs, D. D., of Union Theological Seminary, New York, and Stowart D. F. Salmond, D. D., professor in Free Church College, Aberdeen. As the author remarks in the preface: "This treatise is a summary of the church's history from the point of view of its institutions. The effort has been made to show how organization, creeds, and cultus are related to the spiritual life and to the growth of Christian civilization. The field covered by the title, 'Christian Institutions,' is so large that the selection of the subjects to be treated, and the proportion of space assigned to each, must reflect to some extent the personality of the author, obliging him to tell what connected impressions he has gained from the wide survey."

The work is divided into three parts, Book I. treating of "The Organization of the Church;" Book II., of the "Catholic Creeds and the Development of Doctrine;" Book III., of "Christian Worship." An excellent index is provided.

This is a critical and exhaustive work in its line, embraces the latest results of modern scholarship, and forms a valuable contribution to theological literature. It furnishes in compact compass a vast fund of information upon matters of deep interest to students of theology and church history. The author's style is clear and forceful. Many ancient and modern authorities are quoted from, so that the reader may judge for himself as to the precedent for certain usages and teachings. The work necessarily has to do with many controverted subjects, as, for example, the supposed identity between bishops and presbyters in the early church, the nature of miracles, the significance and modes of baptism, etc. The author displays no small degree of historic skill, philosophic insight, and erudition. While not every reader may be prepared to accept all the conclusions reached by the author, the work must be regarded, on the whole, as an impartial, lucid and able history.

PRIMARY SCHOOL HISTORY OF THE UNITED STATES. By Susan Pendleton Lee, author of Lee's Advanced History of the United States. 246 pages. Richmond, Va.: B. F. Johnson Publishing Co.

This history, designed for pupils between the ages of eight and twelve years, bears all the marks of careful preparation, and is worthy of a place in any school-room. Though written from a Southern standpoint, it is just and reliable, the facts being stated without evasion or misrepresentation. We do not believe that Southern youth will become any the worse citizens for knowing the exact truth concerning the causes for which their fathers fought. Our children ought to be taught to revere the memory of Southern heroes. The author has made this a highly interesting text-book, and one well adapted to its purpose. The advanced history by the same author has met with quite a warm reception. The work is profusely illustrated, as well as beautifully printed. Each chapter is followed by well-selected questions and summaries for review.

An attempt has been made on behalf of some of the railroads in the Central Passenger Association to abolish special Sunday excursions at reduced rates. At the last meeting of the association a resolution was presented to the effect that Sunday excursions are repugnant to a large number of the better class of people, that they seriously affect the week-day business, and that they involve an excessive amount of labor on the part of employees. The resolution, which recommended that no road be allowed to offer special rates for Sunday travel, was laid over until a later meeting. It is not likely to be adopted, because it is opposed by some of the largest railroads, which derive a large profit from those excursions during the Summer. But it is true that, aside from moral considerations, these Sunday excursions, which have grown to be such a nuisance in the neighborhood of large cities, are poor policy in the long run both for the railroads and for the communities which allow them.—Baptist Standard.

Says the Central Advocate of recent date: "One night last week Eli Blake, postmaster at Tongowa, Okla., who had been the leader of a crusade against the saloons in that region, was waylaid while going home from his office and beaten to death by a gang of ruffians, who, it appears, were invited to this cowardly crime by the saloon men. Such exhibitions as this incident embodies of the murderous spirit which the saloon engenders ought to help open the eyes of the people to the malevolent character of that institution, and further the movement for its suppression. A saloon, no matter where it is located, nor how orderly it may be conducted, is a fruitful source of crime and a constant menace to society."

Humility must be the final test. He who talks about his humility, has no humility to talk about. He who laments the want of humility in others, is simply airing his own pride. We are not to claim humility—we are to be in reality humble. Humility is to be an active principle, and to show itself by what it does.—Christian Work.

HELP FROM CHURCH EXTENSION.

The notice published by Dr. Morson, secretary of the Board of Church Extension, in the church papers, informing all who desire aid from the Parent Board that it will be necessary to have their applications acted upon at a meeting of the Executive Committee of the Conference Board, during the first half of the month of March, has doubtless been read by all who are interested. I would, therefore, say to all interested parties within the bounds of the Louisiana Conference, that if you desire the action of the Conference Board on an application to the General Board, you will please send your application at once to Rev. Jas. Ivy Huffpanir, secretary, Amite City, La.

I hereby call a meeting of the Executive Committee and all the local members of the Board, to meet at the office of NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, 512 Camp street, New Orleans, La., at 11 A. M., Wednesday, March 9, 1898. And all persons interested can come before the committee at that meeting.

JOHN T. SAWYER,
Pres. La. Conf. Bd. Ch. Ex.

FROM DR. I. W. COOPER.

Moss Point is enjoying a gracious revival, one of deep spirituality. Large audiences and deep interest. The membership of the church has been greatly revived. There have been several accessions and conversions. Rev. D. P. Bradford preached six days very acceptably, and greatly endeared himself to the people of Moss Point. His visit was a source of pleasure and profit. Rev. Wm. P. Hurt, of Mobile, is now doing the preaching. Bro. Hurt is one of the most remarkable preachers in the Methodist Church. Plain, spiritual, powerful, he brings a blessing with every message. Few men combine as many gifts. How Mississippi would love to take this son of thunder from Alabama! Rev. G. H. H. Jackson, of Mobile, is the leader of song, and his coming has also brought joy to many hearts.

Rev. Henry P. Lewis, an honored member of the Mississippi Conference, has leased the Williams Hall, Millsaps College, and will take charge July 1, 1898.

Bro. Lewis has a delightful Christian family, and we predict that Williams Hall will be a model students' home. Bro. Lewis, kind, sympathetic, and thoughtful, and Sister Lewis, with a heart full of motherly love, they will bring a blessing to Millsaps College. There will be found music, religion, and every attention in that college home.

NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE NOTES.

Bishop Galloway will dedicate our new church in Lexington the first Sunday in March, and Dr. Hoss will perform a similar service in Booneville the fourth Sunday in March.

Rev. J. B. Stone is recovering from a painful surgical operation, by which he has been hindered for awhile from his work.

Rev. G. H. Lipscomb, the energetic pastor in Winona, has raised almost the amount necessary to build a ten-thousand-dollar church in that enterprising town. With his co-operation, we have just placed in the Sunday-school a teachers' library of twenty-four volumes. Who will be the next on this line? Look out in next week's ADVOCATE for particulars in reference to this and other Sunday-school matter. G. W. BACHMAN.

SUNDAY TRAINS.

I see reference has been made several times to that portion of Governor McLaurin's message wherein he speaks of the Sunday freight trains. I heartily commend the governor for what he said; am glad to know that we have a governor who realizes the evil of the Sunday train and who has spoken of it in his message.

I am sorry that the Church is behind the State in this matter, when she should be in the lead. Ought the State to lead the Church? Why do we have the Sunday trains? Simply because the public, including some preachers and laymen, demand it—the preacher to travel on, and the layman for the same purpose, and also that he may receive his freight one day earlier.

How will we stop the Sunday trains? By preacher and layman refusing to travel on them under any circumstances. We want the Sunday trains stopped, not simply because humanitarianism demands it, but because God's law demands it. God made no more provision for the Sunday train than he did for the Sunday plow; one is as necessary as the other, and as good an argument can be advanced for the one as for the other.

A few suggestions as to how we can aid in this matter of stopping Sunday trains:

1. Let us obey God's law, and only then can we consistently suggest to the State.

2. Let times for holding all meetings, such as Conferences, conventions, etc., be so arranged as to convene in the middle of the week, and then endeavor to get the State to pass laws to govern courts and all public gatherings, and have them convene in the middle of the week.

3. Let the managers of camp meetings forbid the stopping of trains on Sunday at said places wherever it is in their power to do so.

4. Let preachers arrange their appointments so as not to violate God's law by traveling on the Sabbath trains, and only then are they prepared to successfully urge the assistance of the State.

I will again state that when churches have learned to strictly keep the Sabbath will we have little or no trouble in calling the State to our rescue. S. S. COPE.

Paulding, Miss.

AN AMENDMENT.

MR. EDITOR: Will you allow a young man to suggest an amendment in our Discipline, which I believe to be needful and prudent—namely, paragraphs 165 and 166, page 77, section xi—so as to include the following: "The District Conference shall elect, on nomination of the presiding elder, a committee of five—three clerical and two laymen—who shall have power to examine, license to preach, and recommend to the approaching Annual Conference any man who, in the providence of God, may be called to the itinerancy in the interim of the District and approaching Annual Conference; provided such license shall be signed by the presiding elder and secretary of past District Conference."

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE MINUTES.

The printers commenced distributing the Minutes of the last session of the Mississippi Conference on Wednesday, Feb. 2. Nearly all of them were sent by express. The printers misunderstood my instruction to send in every instance by postoffice where the express office was different from the postoffice. Brethren will please apply to the nearest express office. As usual, I have received notice of the change of postoffices days after the MSS. were all sent to the printers; hence, if brethren do not receive their Minutes, let them write, and I will try to remedy the matter.

A CALL.

The sixth annual convention of the Woman's Parsonage and Home Mission Society, Louisiana Conference, will be held in Lafayette, March 3-6, 1898. Auxiliaries will elect delegates at once, and notify Mrs. I. T. Reames, Lafayette, so that entertainment may be provided.

We fully expect to secure special rates from the railroads. Delegates, in paying full fare going, must secure certificates, to be signed by Conference secretary at the convention.

Rally, dear sisters, to this meeting for encouragement and enlightenment. Come praying that it may be a season of spiritual power, and prove a center of light from which will radiate warmth into the very extremities of our noble work.

NOTICE.

The Sunday school Board of the Louisiana Annual Conference is now ready to aid all needy Sunday-schools in the bounds of this Conference in furnishing them with the necessary literature. Applications for assistance should come from the superintendent of the school, and said application must be endorsed by the pastor in charge and by the presiding elder of the district. The application should itemize the material wished, and give number of each kind desired.

Brethren, order all that is necessary, but do not over-order, as we shall have many demands.

Applications for aid should be sent to the president of the Board, at his residence, No. 1329 Josephine, corner Coliseum street, New Orleans, La.

I find that some of the brethren failed to turn over the funds raised on Children's Day to our Conference treasurer, Bro. N. S. Cornell, and he wishes me to state that he would be glad if they would send the money to him at Knox Point postoffice, La., sending it by money order on Shreveport, La.

Brethren, please turn over these funds, as we will need them. We know it was an omission on your part, of course, and will be much pleased if you forward them at an early date. JNO. F. FOSTER, President.

CHURCH BELLS

Epworth League

BY H. N. HARRISON.

FEB. 20.—SAVED TO THE UTTERMOST.

(Heb. vii, 25, and Eph. iii, 17, 18, 19.)

1. In Heb. vii. 25, we have a powerful statement of the ability of our great High Priest to save from all sin. If we ever had any doubt as to the strength of his great arm, we ought now to lay them aside forever. His grace, as well as his power, avails for all who come unto God by him, of every grade and station and of every age. (Isa lxiii, 1, and lix, 1.) "His blood avails for me."

2. As we have sinned to the uttermost, so also do we require to be saved to the uttermost. Grace must reach down as far as the roots of sin have struck. Having been thoroughly tainted and polluted with sin, so do we require also a thorough regeneration and a perfect cleansing. Could he offer us less? Have we obtained both? John iii, 7, tells us of this essential and marvelous work of regeneration, and I. Thess. v, 23, gives us Paul's prayer for another and most glorious work. His words are addressed to those who are already saved. (1. Thess. i, 2, 3, 4, 5.)

3. This great salvation is for present needs and exigencies; a practical, every-day experience.

4. In Eph. iii, 17, 18, 19, we are taught the great truth that Christ reproduces himself by faith in the hearts of true believers. He rules and reigns and dwells within.

5. We are taught also that love is not a sentiment, but a mighty force, permeating, regulating, transforming, broadening, deepening, and enlarging human character and intellect until we come to contain more and more of the holy attributes of God up to the fullness of our capacities. These capacities are constantly enlarging, so that we take in more and more of this blessed fullness.

Happy Homes
..AND THE..
Hearts that Make Them;
Or, Thrifty People and Why They Thrive

BY
SAMUEL SMILES,
AUTHOR OF SELF-HELP, CHARACTER, DUTY, THRIFT, ETC.

A beautifully illustrated book of 644 pages, cover stamped in gold, marble edges, size 8vo, red cloth. Probably no books of the same general type were ever written that have so much interested and inspired to worthy action the various classes to whom they were addressed, as have the productions of SAMUEL SMILES. The marked interest which attaches to MR. SMILES' productions is chiefly due to his happy use of biography. Readers who tire of extended biographical histories find here groups of the wise and distinguished of earth, each giving testimony to the various principles the author wishes to inculcate. The interest excited by the novel arises solely from our interest in the lives and struggles of men and women. They are interesting biographies; but much more interest should attach to lives actually lived and conquests actually made, provided they are produced with equal care. The home is the epitome of society and government. The application of these principles to every member of the home—the importance of their inculcation in the home, where character is chiefly molded—and the value of such lessons in making every home what it may be and should be, has dictated the title,

"Happy Homes and the Hearts that Make Them."

INSINCERITY.

There are few disappointments so keen as those that come from finding out the depth of insincerity that lies under the pleasant surface of some acquaintance's graceful, polished speech. Not long ago I introdneed an acquaintance of mine to a distinguished lecturer who had just concluded an exceedingly advanced and progressive sort of address to a very conservative audience. As my acquaintance asked for the introdnction I naturally concluded that she was in sympathy with the speaker's views, and this opinion was confirmed when she said in her loveliest manner: "I am so glad to have had the pleasure of hearing you. I enjoyed your lecture so much." And then she sat down by the side of the lecturer and listened with every sign of deep interest and agreement, while Mrs. Livermore discoursed on municipal suffrage for women and kindred topics with which the lecture had dwelt. Next morning I was shocked beyond expression to hear that my friend had gone away from her interview with Mrs. Livermore and told a gentleman that she thought "Mrs. Livermore and the lecture both disgnsting." Yet she is a devout church member and prides herself on her good breeding.

Such conversation can have no charm for honest souls. Disgraceful falsehood like this would neutralize the wit, culture, beauty and learning of Recamier herself; and as sincerity must be the foundation of good conversation, I might amend my words and say that a hostess who encourages conversation is not only a social, but a moral, benefactor, if she has the conrage to exclude from her entertainments all those whose pleasant, witty, agreeable speech is but a mask for vulgar insincerity. Suppose we begin to cultivate the lost art of conversation—to think our own thoughts, and to utter them in our own words, with all the charm of manner and voice that we can naturally command. Suppose we go to the genial Professor at the Breakfast Table, and hear what he has to say of this neglected art; and if we are willing to devote half as much attention to this as we now give so cheerfully to music and painting and dancing, for which we probably have far less talent, we may yet make the intellectual desert of fashionable society blossom, like the rose, with flowers of graceful, sincere, original speech. —Womankind.

WORDS.

Another fault boys and girls sometimes have is a habit of using words without proper regard to their exact meaning. They are not careful enough to weigh and measure the exact force of words. They often speak against facts more from a lack of proper effort to accurately express ideas than from a mean desire or intention to deceive. If this fault is thoughtlessly indulged, it will grow into a very grave offense. Many a man has a general reputation as a common liar because he has a confirmed habit of using words without thinking carefully what meaning they carry to those who hear them. It is no unusual thing for people to gather from words a man uses ideas he never intended to convey at all. This is called a misunderstanding, and when words are carelessly used the speaker must admit that the fault was all in him. When a man comes to look at words he knows he has used, but which can not be made to mean anything else than what he is quite sure he never intended to say, his predicament is very embarrassing. To say he did not mean it is but another way of confessing he lied when he said it. Boys and girls ought to remember that words are signs of ideas. If they use the wrong word, they convey the wrong idea. Young people are somewhat given to exaggeration. They frequently say thousands when hundreds would fully represent the facts. A little attention and a few mild and timely corrections and reproofs from old folks would go far to correct this fault in young people. If it is not corrected, it may and almost certainly will grow into an ugly habit. It would be well for every reader of these lines, young and old, to form a resolution right here and now to abstain from this very common fault of exaggeration.—Youth's Advocate.

A POINTER FOR BOYS.

Another thing which led me to make up my mind never to touch liquor was the damage which I saw wrought by it upon some of the finest minds with which it was ever my privilege to come into contact, and I concluded that what had resulted injuriously to others might prove so to me. I have seen, even in my few years of professional life, some of the smartest, yea, brilliant, literary men dethroned from splendid positions, owing to nothing else but their indulgence in wine. I have known men with salaries of thousands of dollars per year, occupying positions which hundreds would strive a life-time to attain, come to beggary from drink. Only recently there applied to me, for any position I could offer him, one of the most brilliant editorial writers in the newspaper profession—a man who, two years ago, easily commanded one hundred dollars for a single editorial in his special field. The man became so unreliable from drink that the editors are now afraid of his articles, and, although he can to-day write as forcibly as at any time during his life, he sits in a cellar in one of our cities writing newspaper wrappers for one dollar per thousand. - Ladies' Home Journal.

HOW IT WORKS.

A mechanic who had been in the habit of dropping into a beer saloon twice a day, and spending five cents each time for a glass of beer, was captivated one day by a new thought. "I am poor," he said to himself; "my family need every cent I can earn; it is growing more and more expensive every year; soon I shall want to educate my children. Ten cents a day for beer! Let me see; that is sixty cents a week. That is thirty-one dollars and twenty cents a year. And it does me no good; it may do me harm. Let me see—" And here he took a piece of chalk and solved the problem on a board. "I can buy two barrels of flour, one hundred pounds of sugar, five pounds of tea, and six bushels of potatoes for that sum." Pausing for a moment, as if to allow the grand idea to take full possession of himself, he then exclaimed, "I will never waste another cent." He never has, and he is to-day a prosperous man.—Golden Censer.

THE INVINCIBLE PURPOSE.

The invincible purpose masters circumstances; a result which talents can not attain. A one-talent person with a lofty aim will accomplish more than a ten-talent one without it. While the latter scatters and dissipates his physical, mental and moral powers, the former gathers them into a mighty force, and sends them like an arrow to the mark. He hits, and the other misses. An irrepressible resolution has the right of way always, and the great multitudes fall back to let it pass. It scarcely knows the impossible: if Alps on Alps arise, it swears, "There shall be no Alps." Its words become "half-battles," like Luther's. "I will take it or die," answered Wolfe when asked if he could capture Quebec. "Right about, face," cried Sheridan to his retreating army, and hurled them against the foe with victorious power. "I will fight it out on this line if it takes all Summer," exclaimed Grant on his way to Richmond. Here was purpose, irrepressible, defiant, mighty, next to almighty—such purpose as never drifts, but steers straight into port.—Success.

LUCK HAS NEVER HELPED ANY PERSON.

"No man prospers in this world by luck, unless it be the luck of getting up early, working hard, and maintaining honor and integrity." What so often seems, to many young men, on the surface, as being luck in a man's career, is nothing more than hard work done at some special time. The idea that luck is a factor in a man's success has ruined thousands: it has never helped a single person. A fortunate chance comes to a young man sometimes just at the right moment. And that some people call luck. But that chance was given him because he had at some demonstrated the fact that he was the right man for the chance. That is the only luck there is. Work hard, demonstrate your ability, and show to others that if an opportunity comes within your grasp you are able to use it.—Henry Ward Beecher.

Parents can not discharge their obligations vicariously. The Sunday-school teacher does a good work when done in the fear and love of God. But the Sunday-school teacher can not undo the ruins that follow paternal neglect. The preacher may do much for a child neglected at home, but he can not give what has been denied the child by unfaithful parents. Parents only can do parents' duty. We need revival in home government; then we will grow a race of men and women capable of noble deeds. A boy neglected by father and mother, and growing up in willful ways, may, through infinite grace, escape hell, but he will never be what he might have been had his father and mother been faithful to him. Even conversion does not make a boy what he would have been, if taught obedience and drilled in the elementary virtues of childhood. And this not a few will deny, but it is the truth, as both the Bible and experience make plain.—Sunday-School Magazine.

Kidney and Bladder Troubles Quickly Cured.

Men and women doctor their troubles so often without benefit, that they get discouraged and skeptical. In most such cases serious mistakes are made in doctoring and in not knowing what our trouble is or what makes us sick. The unmistakable evidences of kidney trouble are pain or dull ache in the back, too frequent desire to pass water, scanty supply, smarting irritation. As kidney disease advances the face looks sallow or pale, puffs or dark circles under the eyes, the feet swell and sometimes the heart acts badly. Should further evidence be needed to find out the cause of sickness, then set urine aside for twenty-four hours; if there is a sediment or settling, it is also convincing proof that our kidneys and bladder need doctoring. A fact often overlooked, is that women suffer as much from kidney and bladder trouble as men do.

Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root is the discovery of the eminent physician and scientist and is not recommended for everything, but will be found just what is needed in cases of kidney and bladder disorders or troubles due to weak kidneys, such as catarrh of the bladder, gravel, rheumatism and Bright's Disease, which is the worst form of kidney trouble. It corrects inability to hold urine and smarting in passing it, and promptly overcomes the unpleasant necessity of being compelled to get up many times during the night.

The mild and the extraordinary effect of this great remedy is soon realized. It stands the highest for its wonderful cures. Sold by druggists; price fifty cents and one dollar. So universally successful is Swamp-Root in quickly curing even the most distressing cases, that to prove its wonderful merit you may have a sample bottle and a book of valuable information, both sent absolutely free by mail, upon recipt of three two cent stamps to cover cost of postage on the bottle. Mention NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE and send your address to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghampton, N. Y. This generous offer appearing in this paper is a guarantee of genuineness.

A DOCTOR'S PRESCRIPTION.

The young woman who takes music lessons and practices scales, had announced to her friends that she was going away. "Isn't it rather a sudden determination?" "Yes: it's the doctor's orders." "Why, you don't look the least bit ill." "Oh, I'm perfectly well. Auntie is the one who is sick."—Exchange.

The measure of a man's success in life is his influence for good, and this influence is in proportion to his spiritual power and attainment. He who denies himself for others, receives the most from the life of others, and from his own life. Influence has harvest in the years that follow life, and these harvests multiply.—Exchange.

Hygiene.

DIGESTION AND HEALTH.

Let not him who abuses his digestive organs expect to live long or happily. When all the body's vitality is needed in the work of digestion, the stomach has absorbed all the power which is needed for accomplishment elsewhere. Voltaire declared that the fate of a nation has often depended on the good or bad digestion of a prime minister; and Motley holds that the gout of Charles V. changed the destinies of the world. Disease is simply the result of wasted power. When one is sick or "run down," or losing flesh and strength, it simply shows that most of the vital force which he ought to get from the food he eats is wasted and lost because the digestive and nutritive functions are only able to extract a very small percentage of the nourishment which the food contains.

The longest, most useful, and happiest life must come from one's extraction from good stock, adequate early training, high ideals, a pure life, simple habits, and the exercise and most perfect adjustment, one to another, of all the organs and faculties of body and brain and spirit.—Success.

HEALTH PRECAUTIONS.

Never lean with the back against anything that is cold. Never begin a journey until the breakfast has been eaten. Keep the back, especially between the shoulder blades, well covered; also the chest well protected. In sleeping in a cold room, establish a habit of breathing through the nose, and never with the open mouth. After exercise of any kind never ride in an open carriage or near the window of a car for a moment. It is dangerous to health or even life. When hoarse, speak as little as possible until the hoarseness is recovered from, else the voice may be permanently lost, or difficulties of the throat produced. Merely warm the back by the fire, and never continue keeping the back exposed to the heat after it has been comfortably warm; to do otherwise is debilitating.—American.

AY—EDDIE MAOKIE CLENNAY WAS , 1876, and died Jan. 25, 1898. a young man loved by all who His cheerful, winning ways went to the hearts of all with whom he came in contact. He had not an enemy. He was ever ready to assist the needy and helpless. The writer has known him to give his last cent to an unfortunate widow.

He was blessed with Christian parents, and joined the M. E. Church, South, when quite young. Though sometimes seemingly thoughtless, he gave the subject of religion much thought. The last time the writer saw him alive—one month before his death—he spoke very thoughtfully and seriously of the future, and expressed his intention to so live in the future as to be prepared for the call of the Master at any time to lay aside his earthly garments.

To the bereaved father, mother, brothers and sisters I will say that Eddie has only fallen asleep to awaken in that bright home into which sorrow never enters, where death is unknown, and that he is now happy in the arms of the One who died for us all. He is now basking in the clear sunlight of God's presence, and is there "waiting and watching for you." May God sanctify this seeming affliction to your good, and fit and prepare you to again meet Eddie in that bright home above! FRIEND.

GOAR—GEORGE R. B. GOAR, son of Rev. R. P. Goar, of the North Mississippi Conference, and S. F. Goar, was born Aug. 23, 1867; was baptized by the Rev. H. S. Featherston in September, 1869; was received into the M. E. Church, South, at seven years old by the Rev. T. J. Lowery; was married to Miss Jadie Shook, of Charleston, Miss., in August, 1888. By this union there were five children born to bless their home—four girls and one boy—but the oldest of these, little Sallie, a beautiful, obedient, sweet little girl, preceded him to the glory world one month and three days, and, no doubt, was at the beautiful gate waiting and watching for him, for Jesus said, "Suffer the little children to come unto me, for of such is the kingdom of heaven."

Bro. Goar was a man that loved his church and preacher, and was willing to do anything in reason, or make any reasonable sacrifice as a steward to build up his church and take care of his preacher. I was his pastor last year, and I feel that I have lost a true friend.

Bro. Goar stated to his father that he was ready to go and meet loved ones that had gone before, and in referring to little Sallie he said she could not come to him, but, glory to God! he could go to her; so he quietly passed away on Jan. 6, 1898.

We pray God's richest blessings on the widowed mother and the little fatherless children, and that they may all meet in heaven.

A. P. LAACH.

LUMSDEN—RUBY LUMSDEN, oldest child of Mr. Dave and Mrs. Mollie Lumsden, was born Dec. 19, 1883, and died near Cayce, Miss., Dec. 26, 1897.

A great shadow has thus fallen upon this home. Ruby was a precious child—one who readily learned the right way and loved to walk in it. She was regular in her devotional exercise, and loved the services of the church. Her sweet spirit won all hearts, and the large number of people who attended the burial service told how well she was loved. We loved the brightness of this star; the bursting flower shed a fragrance around that promised a sweet life of devotion; but we are sure that God preserves the brightness and sweetness, and we shall, by the grace of God, see her in the fuller life.

May God, in his gentle mercy, soothe and comfort the hearts of her grief-stricken parents, and may they be kept by divine power unto eternal life! HEN P. JAOO, P. C.

Mt. Pleasant, Miss.

MORGAN—Mrs. NANCIE E MORGAN, the daughter of Mr. A. W. and Mrs Frances E. Bishop, was born July 8 1851, and died Jan. 8, 1898. Her age was thirty-six years and six months.

Sister Morgan was converted and joined the Baptist Church in 1879. A few years after she attached herself to the M. E. Church, of which she was a faithful member until death.

I have been acquainted with Sister Morgan for eight or ten years, and I always found her to be a gentle and sweet-spirited Christian. She bore her last illness with patience and in the spirit of meekness, as one who was possessed with sanctifying power. She hath done what she could, and our loss is her eternal gain.

Sister Morgan has left G. W. Morgan, her husband, and her father and mother, with three sisters and four brothers, with a host of friends, to mourn her loss. May the Lord bless and comfort! B. H. K.

NIXON—Whereas, It has pleased Almighty God to remove from our midst to that celestial building not made with hands, eternal in the heavens, Bro. T. C. NIXON, whose kindness of heart and gentle disposition endeared him to all who knew him by the strongest ties of friendship; therefore, be it

Resolved, That in his death our church has lost a faithful and true follower of Christ—one whose place will be hard to fill.

Resolved, That it is due the memory of departed worth to say that in all the relations of life he discharged his duties with affection and fidelity, and that in his death his wife and children have sustained an irreparable loss, and are entitled to our Christian sympathy.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent the CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE for publication, and a copy be spread upon the Minutes of the Quarterly Conference.

H. S. FOOTE, for Com.

WRIGHT—Resolutions adopted by the Methodist Sabbath-school, Newton, Miss., on the death of BEULAH WRIGHT:

Whereas, It has pleased God to remove from our midst our sweet little friend and classmate, Beulah Wright; therefore, be it

Resolved, That while we mourn her loss and miss her sweet, smiling face, we bow humbly in submission to the will of him who doeth all things well.

Resolved, That we deeply sympathize with the parents and relatives, and trust that her death will prompt them to strive to meet her on the golden shore, there to form an unbroken family where God's children are gathering home. HER CLASSMATES.

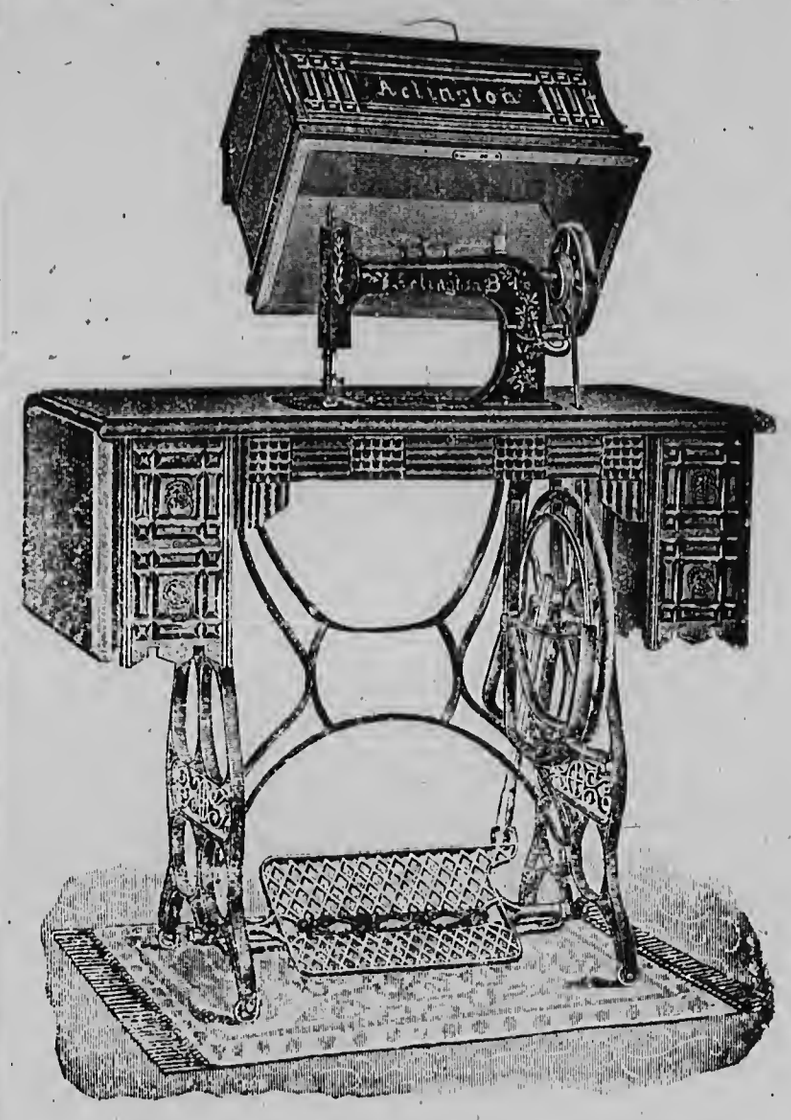
Our Machine Offer.

New Improved High-Arm "Arlington B" Self-Threading Sewing Machine.

A recorded certificate of warranty for 10 years accompanies each machine. The "Arlington B" is complete in every detail, combining all modern and late improvements, such as automatic bobbin winder, self-threading shuttle, self-setting needle, upper spring tension, etc.



The "Arlington B" self-threading sewing machine has a large high arm, its mechanical appearance is perfect, its adjustment is absolute, positive take-up, convenient foot rest, with the best style furniture, either oak or walnut; in addition to which each machine is furnished with the best steel combination attachments free, as follows: One tucker, one foot ruffler, one set of plain hemmers (five different widths up to seven-eighths of an inch), one binder, one shirring plate and one under-braider, packed in a handsome velvet lined case. It is also furnished with one foot hemmer, one screw driver, one wrench, one oil can with oil, one gauge, one package of needles, six bobbins and one instruction book.

THE HEAD is strong and substantial; has large space under the arm for handling bulky goods, is finely japanned and protected by a hard finish. Has so few bearings and friction points that it is easily oiled and kept clean.

NEEDLE BAR is round, with adjustable bearing polished and fitted, insuring great wear, and can run a long time without oiling. It has a sleek dip motion, relieving the strain upon the thread when the shuttle is passing through the loop. Using the adjustable take-up, controlling the threads perfectly on all grades of work.

IMPROVED AUTOMATIC BOBBIN WINDER which is so positive and reliable in its action that an imperfectly wound bobbin is an impossibility. So simple that a child can easily operate it. This valuable attachment renders possible a perfect control of shuttle tension.

SELF THREADING—The "Arlington B" is self-threading, requiring no change from light to heavy work. Uses double thread, and makes the lock stitch.

THE NEEDLE is the same as used on the New Home machine, and is self-setting both as to height and position with reference to shuttle, with short blade and long shank, insuring great strength; finely polished.

SELF-THREADING SHUTTLE—A perfect steel cylinder shuttle with delicate and perfect tension, open at one end to allow the bobbin to be inserted without displacing any of the parts; runs loose in the shell, without spring centre or point bearings, thus insuring no even tension; can be threaded in the dark, and easily understood.

LOOSE PULLEY for winding the bobbin without running the machine requires no change or adjustment, nor is it necessary to remove the work from the machine.

PARTS SUBJECT TO WEAR are made of the finest steel, case hardened, light and noiseless and are very durable.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

Congress is to be asked for $3,000,000 for a new custom-house for New York.

The South Carolina House has passed a separate coach bill, providing for separate cars or separate sections in the cars for the races.

The formation of another trust is advised from Chicago—the stove trust. The capital of the proposed monopoly is said to be $10,000,000.

It is said that Rev. Sam Jones makes $30,000 a year by his preaching, and says that the secret of his success is the fact that he has something to say and says it.

The Virginia House has passed a bill to reduce the salaries of nearly all the State officials, the cut varying from 10 to 25 per cent., the total saving being $11,180.

Bills have been introduced in the Maryland Legislature to place married women on the same legal standing as their husbands in the matter of holding or transferring property.

The holding in this city, during the present month, of the Convention of the International League of Press Clubs, will assemble in New Orleans newspaper writers from our own and adjacent countries.

The members of the sub-committee of the Commerce Committee of the United States Senate and the gentlemen of the Jetties Conference visited the passes last week and made a thorough inspection.

The Chicago city government has issued an ultimatum to the various electrical companies, notifying them that unless their wires are buried before March 1, they will be cut. About 4000 wires are affected by the order.

The United States Senate has now had the Hawaiian treaty under consideration for a number of weeks, and apparently is no nearer a solution of the problem involved than at the beginning of the session, two months ago.

The Kentucky Senate has passed the bill providing that a railroad company shall be liable in damages to an injured employee, regardless of the fact that such injury may have resulted from the neglect of fellow-employees.

The sugar market has recently taken a very pronounced upward turn, and prices have advanced to a degree that has greatly improved the profits on that portion of the Louisiana crop which has been late in coming to market.

General Lew Wallace has announced that at his death the city of Crawfordsville, Ind., shall come into possession of his handsome study, which has just been completed at a cost of $40,000. It will be used as a public library.

At a meeting in Boston, on Feb. 13, of fifty-five representatives of textile employees in New England, it was unanimously voted to recommend that all unions call out the operatives in every cotton mill in New England.

The action of the German government in the matter of the prohibition of the importation into Germany of American fruit has served to fully arouse the authorities at Washington to the importance of seriously considering the hostile attitude Germany has assumed towards us for some time past.

Last week the Senate passed the bill permitting the use of $10,000 of the unexpended balance remaining from the amount appropriated last year to close Pass-a-Loutre for the purpose of making a survey of Southwest Pass, with a view to its improvement. The measure now goes to the President for his approval.

In spite of the attempts made by the jingoes to distort the De Lome letter incident into a serious quarrel between this country and Spain, there is every prospect that the whole affair will be amicably arranged and blow over without serious consequences. The prompt resignation and retirement of the offending minister has settled the phase of the matter which involved the personal disrespect to the President.

FOREIGN.

The relations between Germany and China are seriously strained over the former's fresh demands.

Senor Dupuy de Lome, the Spanish minister at Washington, is now in private citizen. He expressed himself too freely in a letter regarding McKinley's administration, which was published, and, knowing his position to be untenable, resigned his office.

Japan has notified China that she intends to keep Wei-Hai-Wei permanently. China, in notifying the Chinese ministers abroad to this effect, directs them to notify the powers also that in view of this no foreign loan is required, as the purpose of the loan was solely to pay the Japanese war indemnity.

The only blood-purifier admitted on exhibition at the Chicago World's Fair was Ayer's Sarsaparilla, all others being excluded as secret preparations and patent medicines. With doctors and pharmacists, it has always been considered a standard remedy.

A STORM.

There was a storm gathered at 1014 Tchoupitoulas street on Saturday evening, Jan. 29, about seven o'clock P. M., and silently made its way up the Annunciation and Tchoupitoulas car lines. It came together on St. Mary street at half-past eight o'clock. My wife and I were sitting quietly in our home, 628 St. Mary street, not dreaming of danger from any source, when the full force of the storm struck our gate, which caused the door bell to ring violently. On going to the door, I found about twenty ladies and gentlemen, who rushed into the house with their arms filled with bundles and commenced to pile them in a corner of the room. When through, the corner was full of the substantial and good things of life to cheer and strengthen the inner man. There was no devastation or sorrow left in the track of this storm.

I assure you, after an hour of singing of hymns and prayer to our God, we all felt that we were drawn closer together and nearer to God. May God's richest blessings rest on these dear people! While they minister to us in temporal things, may he aid us in ministering to them in spiritual.

C. T. MUNHOLLAND.

READ THIS, PREACHERS.

I doff my hat to every preacher within the bounds of the Mississippi, North Mississippi and Louisiana Conferences, whether local or traveling, married or single, rich or poor, large or small (in body), weak or strong (intellectually), handsome or ugly, whether or not he ever expects to be a presiding elder, a president of a college or a Bishop, and beg him, for the sake of the cause of Christ along the Mississippi Coast, to send me, in a letter at my own risk, the small sum of 10 cents to aid in building a Methodist Church in the town of Mississippi City, situated on the L. & N. R. R., about seven miles west of Seashore Camp Ground, immediately on the Gulf of Mexico. This is a good point for a church, as every preacher who knows anything about the place will testify. The lot has been donated, the brick for the pillars are on the ground, and about $150 in hand. Here, as in almost every town along this coast, the Catholics are largely in the majority, but there is much good material that can be utilized if we can only build a house in which to worship. At present we have the use of the court-house.

Now, my dear brethren in the ministry, if each one of you will send us only one dime apiece, with what we can do among our own exceedingly small Methodist band, in a very short time we can worship in our own house, and not have to depend upon others. So let the dimes roll in thick and fast. Address me at Wool Market, Harrison county, Miss.

G. R. ELLIS,
Preacher in charge of Whittington circuit, Seashore district, Mississippi Conference.

INDIAN MISSION.

MR. EDITOR: Our Indian Mission is progressing satisfactorily. At our second preaching service we had at least fifty Choctaws present. We have a weekly prayer meeting and Sunday-school; a public school for the children, with eighteen names enrolled, and a night school once per week for the men, with thirteen matriculated, four of whom began in the alphabet, but others are more advanced. All are learning satisfactorily. Some, I think, will make teachers. Their greatest need is books, both in the public and private school. Will the readers of these lines kindly donate such books as they no longer need for these children and men to study? We can use in this and other settlements all the books likely to be sent them. The following are the kind I prefer: Spellers, readers from the first to fourth series; arithmetics—mental, written, and practical; United States History, grammar, physiology, first and second series; History of Mississippi; civil government, geography, first and second series; and, above all, a lot of object-lessons, such as are taught in kindergarten schools, maps, charts, etc.

If it shall be the good pleasure of the donors, the full amount of the postage, express or freight can, with great favor to the mission, be prepaid; but, if not, send them anyway to my address by mail, to Toles P. O., Kemper county; by express or freight to Meridian, Miss.

In my report of the mission, published in the ADVOCATE dated Feb. 3, 1898, one sentence was greatly marred by the misspelling or mispriuting of the word "dier," which, if the reader will substitute for the word "dear," the sense will be clear.

The following are the amounts received by me during the month of January for the support and development of the mission: Monticello, Providence circuit, $6.50; Silver Creek, Mt. Carmel circuit, $2.35; Taylorsville, Rawley circuit, $1.90; total, $10.75. Traveling expenses, $2; net credit to the mission, $8.75.

Soliciting the prayers, sympathies and co-operation of all who may read these lines, I am,

Your servant for Jesus' sake,
J. N. TUCKER.

THE MOST ATTRACTIVE ROUTE TO BALTIMORE VIA WASHINGTON CITY.

The Chesapeake and Ohio railway with its connections offers by far the most interesting route to the Conference in Baltimore in May. The route from Louisville is through the Blue Grass region of Kentucky, passing Frankfort, the State Capital, Lexington, and the home of Henry Clay. At Ashland the line from Cincinnati is joined; the route from Cincinnati being along the banks of the beautiful Ohio river for 165 miles. Shortly after entering West Virginia the banks of the Kanawha river are followed, Kanawha Falls is passed and the canons of New River are penetrated. After skirting the picturesque Greenbrier for 50 miles, the heights of the Alleghenies are reached, and next comes the Shenandoah Valley, the Blue Ridge Mountains and Piedmont section, the most beautiful of the Appalachain Valley. After passing through Charlottsville and Gordonsville, the route is through the most memorable battle-fields of the Civil War, among them Cedar Mountain, Culpepper, Rappahannock, Warrenton Junction, Manasses and Bull Run.

UNSPOKEN WORDS.

BY JOHN BOYLE O'REILLY.

...e kindly words that rise within the heart,
And thrill it with their sympathetic tone,
...t die ere spoken, fail to play their part,
And claim a merit that is not their own.
...e kindly word unspoken is a sin—
A sin that wraps itself in purest guise,
...d tells the heart that, doubting, looks within,
That not in speech, but thought, the virtue lies.

...t 'tis not so; another heart may thirst
For that kind word, as Hagar in the wild—
...r, banished Hagar! prayed a well might burst
From out the sand to save her perishing child.
...d loving eyes that can not see the mind
Will watch the expected movement of the lip;
...h! can ye let its cutting silence wind
Around that heart and scathe it like a whip?

IN REPLY.

Nothing is more tedious than to ...ply to fallacious argument and mis...ated facts; but, in the interest of ...nth, one must sometimes consent ...o be rated a bore. With this apol...gy I ask leave to point out some in...consistencies in the article by Alice ...oleman Oates in the ADVOCATE, of ...eb. 10.

Apparently the writer expects only ...er closing paragraph to be consid...red seriously. For so much grace ...hanks are due her. "They (suffra...ists) uphold in many instances di...vorce, no Sunday, no God, no home." ...his is confusion of facts and false ...ccusation—unintentional, of course. ...n the suffrage work there is no ...ibboleth of creed, but its advocates ...re everywhere men and women of ...he highest character. The Boston ...erald said recently, "It would be ...ard to beat the list of vice presi...nts of the Massachusetts W. S. A. ...a point of fame and distinguished ...chievement." Among those officers ...re Senator Hoar and Hon. John D. ...ong, a member of the Cabinet, Sec...retary of the Navy. If space al...lowed, similar facts could be given ...rom other States.

Abraham Lincoln among men, ...rances Willard among women, are ...wo of the low characters who have ...dvocated woman suffrage. Miss ...illard is quoted as a devoted Chris...tian woman. All this she is, and is ...lso a thorough suffragist.

The National Suffrage Association ...s thirty years old, the National ...W. C. T. U. is only twenty four years ...old; hence it is clear that the sar...casm, "Woman suffrage is the W. C. ...T. U. gone to seed," originated with ...a person who knew little of either. ...The woman suffrage movement itself ...is fifty years old. The Woman's ...Bible, so called, is no more nor less ...than a commentary. Since commen...taries have been written by the ...dozen, each denomination giving its ...own interpretation to disputed pas...sages, it is not easy to understand ...why further attempt in that line ...should be considered sacrilege. As ...to the merits of that work, no asser...tion is made, as I have not seen a ...copy. I am conversant with the ...plan, and do assert that its projec...tors do not claim to have received ...any new divine revelation. Doubt...less it is as edifying as some others ...that could be named. The idea and ...plan originated, not in the West, but ...in New York.

In regard to the suffrage campaign ...in California, it is said: "It had nei...ther numerical strength nor exten...sive influence in the State." "Its ...victory can not be attributed to the ...combined efforts of the liquor men ...of San Francisco." People who are ...opposed to woman suffrage seldom ...read suffrage journals, nor do they ...usually inform themselves of the ...facts on that side of the question. ...Being ignorant of the facts, they ...suppose them to be non-existent. ...Miss Kearney did not draw on her ...imagination for the facts she stated ...in regard to the California campaign. ...She doubtless gathered those facts ...from women who had taken an act...ive part in the campaign.

The officers of the California W. S. Association state in official reports that an immense amount of work was done, and done well. Every political party except one endorsed it, forty-six county conventions were held, 250 newspapers in the State gave editorial endorsement, and in all 9,000 newspaper clippings on the subject were preserved. The women distinctly asserted that they were defeated by the Liquor Dealers' Association, and the liquor men claimed the victory as theirs. But while claiming that the organized opposition came from that source, no one has asserted that all the good people in California favored the amendment. It is unfortunately true that in every election many good men vote blindly for party or prejudice without regard to moral issues. If this were not so, the Prohibition party would long since have become dominant in this country. The total vote for the amendment was 110,000 out of a voting population of 270,000. The statement that "bad women and those under liquor influence in San Francisco will outnumber all those who desire the ballot in the State," is the old assertion that good women will not vote, or do not want to vote. Regular petition work was carried on in California, and the results disprove that assertion.

Denial of connection between the suffrage movement and industrial and educational opportunities for women arises from failure to observe the relation between cause and effect. The pioneers in suffrage work were also the pioneers in demanding educational and industrial opportunities. Present conditions are the result of the labors of suffragists. However, it is my painful duty to state that in some States many avocations are still closed to women; also the best educational opportunities. Suffragists are trying to have those disadvantages removed. What are anti-suffragists doing in that direction? "Does she really wish the same train of evils to be hurled pell-mell on her own land?"

Here we have the intimation that woman suffrage is responsible for or inseparable from evil conditions existing in the West. This is not good logic. For instance, has woman suffrage (being non-existent) caused the "no Sunday" and the slave trade in Chinese girls in California?

In Idaho and Colorado woman suffrage has not existed long enough to be conclusive. In Utah, after being denied, it was restored only in 1895. In Wyoming alone has it existed for a long, uninterrupted term of years. Wyoming, then, is the proper battle-ground, though in other States suffragists can hold their ground.

Governor Adams, of Colorado, has received so many inquiries about equal suffrage that he has prepared a circular letter in answer, as follows:

"When the question was submitted in Colorado, I supported and voted for the proposition as a question of abstract right, as every fair man must admit, when the question comes to him, that a woman has the same right of suffrage as a man. In advocating suffrage you need no platform but right and justice. Those who will not accept it upon that ground will not be persuaded though one rose from the dead.

"I will, however, add that not even the most virulent enemy of woman suffrage can prove that any harm has come from the experiment. The test in Colorado is still too new to expect a unanimous verdict; yet all fair-minded observers are justified in predicting a higher standard of moral and of political life as a result of woman suffrage."

In 1897 Hon. H. V. S. Groesbeck, ex-chief justice of Wyoming, wrote: "The influence of women voters has always been on the side of temperance, morality, and good government. Three-fourths of a jury can render a verdict in a civil case. Sparsely settled school districts receive a stipulated sum from the public moneys before they are apportioned pro rata among the pupils. The influence of women upon our legislation and our elections has been marked. Party conventions have abandoned nominating corrupt, dishonest, or immoral men, as they can not obtain the woman vote. Wyoming women have exercised the franchise generally, and there are scarcely any who do not vote. It must always be borne in mind that the women voters constitute only about one-third of our voting strength, and that their influence would be greater were there not such a disparity between the male and female voters. We have fewer divorces and fewer resident criminals in proportion to our population than the male suffrage States. These claims can be easily verified."

Here it seems proper to ask: What is the source of the information that in Utah the women do all the voting and law making? Will the writer give the figures? How many registered women voters and how many men voters are there in Utah? Is the Legislature of that State composed entirely of women?

Neither Miss Kearney nor any other suffragist will claim that all the temperance—or any other good work—has been done by the suffragists. They do claim that woman suffrage, wherever tried, has been "a cleansing factor," and the claim is justified by facts. Judge Groesbeck has said Wyoming has "fewer divorces and fewer resident criminals than man suffrage States;" but were this not so, and were Wyoming worse and not better, that fact would not furnish true evidence as to the value of woman suffrage. The logical line of inquiry and argument would be the comparison of the conditions in Wyoming before woman suffrage was granted with those existing now. "Before and after taking," as the patent medicine advertisements say. If woman suffrage is to be ridiculed for not turning certain States into an Eden in a few years, what might be said of the failure of man suffrage to produce that result in a century?

But our friend, the enemy, is not very far from the kingdom after all, since she admits that woman's right to the ballot has been proved. Here lies the root of the matter. In the domain of morals expediency must never be confounded with pure right. One must do what is right without regard to results. Is woman suffrage right? If so, let us have it, and trust God for the results. The woman suffragists of Mississippi have no apology to make for their existence. The question was introduced into our State by the Constitutional Convention and a two-fifths vote given in favor of it. We follow the example set by a body of the best and wisest men in the State.

In the hurry of preparation for our State convention, to be held in a few weeks, little time can be given to the preparation of this paper. I, therefore, beg the indulgence of the kind readers of the ADVOCATE for offering them anything less than my most painstaking effort.

NELLIE N. SOMERVILLE.

REV. HENRY J. HARRIS.

This remarkable man of God died at the home of his daughter, Mrs. A. E. Wyatt, Tampa, Fla., at 12:30 A. M., Jan. 15, 1898. Had he lived till Feb. 1 he would have been seventy-six years old. His daughter's words, in writing of her father, are so true and appropriate that it seems most befitting to reproduce this tribute of affection: "I scarcely know what to tell you of papa's life, only that he never faltered in his Master's work, nor lost faith in his promises. Up to the very last time in which he was able to attend church, which was the first Sunday in December, he gladly filled his place in the house of prayer. His last act of divine service was to administer the sacrament, and at that time he was so happy in the love of Christ that he spoke of the fullness of his blessing to the pastor of the Methodist Church at Tampa, Fla. He was taken sick with chill and fever on the second Sunday in December. With occasional slight improvements he grew steadily worse, having several violent convulsions. His mind failed, and he was indeed a perfect child in all save age, although physically strong. He never recognized his loved ones for weeks before the end came. The morning of Jan. 12 he would try to sing, but his words could not be distinguished. That afternoon he was taken with another chill, followed by high fever. He turned on his side, closed his eyes and lips, and fell into a profound slumber, from which it was impossible to wake him. On Thursday night his spirit took its flight to a better land. We longed for a parting word of love and blessing from his dear lips, but none came. He was lonely here on earth without our angel mother, who had trod the rough paths of the world by his side for over fifty-eight years, and who went home to heaven just one year and twenty seven days before he did. He commenced preaching at the age of seventeen, gave himself up wholly to the itineracy, and was always happy in the work. Even a few days before he died he expressed a longing to be again engaged in the active work of the Conference. He transferred some years ago to the Texas Conference, and filled fine appointments there for four years. Then, as he expressed it, he became 'homesick for the Mississippi brethren,' and came back to live and die among them. We had his body embalmed and sent to Centerville, Miss., to be laid beside mama's. He died so peacefully, so gently, that we scarcely knew when he left us. He was born at Columbia, Miss. Next to his religion he loved his Masonry, and his memoranda show that at one time he was an Odd Fellow. Of ten children—five sons and five daughters—only three of each are left to mourn and to miss him. The other four went on before to welcome him home."

Bro. Harris was thoroughly identified with the Mississippi Conference. Its history and his labors are bound up together. For very many years he was the secretary of the Conference. Faithfully and efficiently he served in that capacity. He was a ready scribe. He was quick in conceptions, rapid in his movements, thoroughly versed in the law and in the terminology of his church—qualifications that fitted him to become, as he did, a most accomplished secretary. The sessions of the Conference were at several times enlivened by pleasant episodes when his brethren, through a chosen spokesman, testified their appreciation of his secretarial services in kindly words and substantial tokens.

Bro. Harris was a most acceptable preacher, at times filling some of the most important positions in the Conference. He served in all positions—presiding elder, station and circuit preacher, and missionary. In all of these he left behind impressions for good. In his earlier days he was eminently successful as a revivalist. A number of men famous in the professional and political ranks of Mississippi's sons were converted under his ministry, and became ministers or useful workers in the vineyard of the Lord. He possessed a peculiar aptness in moving men to immediate action. It is remembered that a camp meeting, a fine sermon, had been delivered, but it fell without impression upon the people. An earnest and continued effort by the preacher to get persons to indicate a desire for a blessing utterly failed. The occasion seemed to be spiritually lost, and the feeling as cold as an iceberg. Bro. Harris arose and made an exhortation, simple, heartfelt, tearful, and the altar was crowded with weeping penitents. He was especially gifted in bringing poor, perplexed sinners from darkness to light. He was useful in more ways than one. As a boy, he learned the art of printing. He loved his trade, and made it profitable to himself and helpful to others. He had a good, practical knowledge of the laws of his country, and as magistrate and mayor he rendered most valuable service to the neighborhood in which he lived.

He was a most excellent writer. His style was flowing and natural. The reminiscences of early experiences of Methodism, which he contributed at various times to the periodical press, furnished most interesting reading, and were valuable indeed in perpetuating local history. It is a great loss to the church and to secular history that the volume of his life's labors and observations, which he was striving to publish, never saw the light.

Bro. Harris was possessed of a most genial nature and of a most sympathetic heart. He loved his church better than his own life, and his brethren in the ministry were drawn to his heart by most tender and sacred ties. How blessed the thought that these sacred ties, now so ruthlessly torn asunder by death, shall be reunited around our Father's throne, and that the living over again together of our joys and sorrows, of our labors and triumphs, of our sowings and reapings, shall brighten the experiences even of that glorious realm!

"CONFERENCE RIGHTS"—KERLEY.

BY REV. J. A. PARKER, D. D.

"Conference Rights" is the title of a book recently issued by our House at Nashville. The author, Rev. T. A. Kerley, of the Tennessee Conference, in this book traverses a field of literature practically uncultivated in the past. There was need for the work Mr. Kerley has done. The historic facts which he gathers and groups, and which go to show the nature of Methodist polity, are nowhere else to be found as they are presented in "Conference Rights." The conclusions seem to be fairly reached:

1. That in the formative period of our church the control was entirely in the forming hands.

2. That so soon as the church was formed, the control of all matters was transferred from the individual former to the Conferences with deference to the wishes of the originator.

3. That at first this control was vested in the Annual Conferences, but was gradually transferred to the General Conference, till that body became the controlling power, both legislative and judicial.

4. That early in the history of the church it was deemed wise to invest the episcopacy with administrative authority, subject to review by the General Conference.

5. That the episcopacy has never been invested by authoritative enactment with unrestricted judicial power.

6. That the exercise of this power in episcopal decisions is above law, and has had the effect of annulling laws enacted by the General Conference.

7. That the Manual of Discipline is not only not law, but is, in some instances, in direct opposition to the law of the church.

8. That with all the grace and intelligence of our episcopal college, there have been instances in which Conference rights have been infringed and authority exercised without sanction of law.

9. That the tendency is, and ever has been, to centralization of power, resisted and held in check by the General Conference.

Having for many years made ecclesiastical history a special study, I think myself prepared to express an opinion of Mr. Kerley's book as a valuable and much-needed production. What I say of the body of the book, however, I can not say of the last chapters on local preachers and evangelists. To my mind the author does not sustain himself on these questions, and, contrary to his method in treating other great questions, rushes to conclusions not justified by historic facts. It seems the very essence of folly to suppose the General Conference would lay the responsibility on the pastors of calling on the local preachers to know what work they were "able and willing to do" in the charge without laying upon them a corresponding obligation to do the work assigned them.

The book is a fine specimen of mechanical work, well printed on good paper with large, clear type. It is edited by our Book Editor, has 398 pages, and will go down to posterity as a classic in Methodist literature.

BLESSINGS IN DISGUISE.

It is difficult sometimes to see the bright side of sorrow, sickness and death. And yet there is distinctly a bright side. No sorrow comes to us without a reason. We never know our friends until sorrow or illness come to us. We never know what loving kindness and thoughtfulness mean until we stand in need of them, and our hearts seem to beat against the walls of a cold, merciless world. We learn something from every grief and from each pain which comes to us. . . . That is why sorrow and trials are given us: not to give pain, but to develop us, to better equip us for something unknown which lies in the future, and which we could not meet nor understand unless we had first gone through certain experiences.

We are far too apt to regard actual blessings as calamities, to look upon the dark side of things. Some sorrow comes to us and we rebel. It never occurs to us that, perhaps, we need the experience which sorrow alone can give. Illness comes and we fret. But we can not always be well. Ailments are very often given to us to make our appreciation of good health the keener. . . . God has an aim, a direct purpose, in everything he does. His blessings come in different forms. Nor are these forms always such as we would choose. Lessons can be more effectively taught in innumerable cases through sorrow than through pleasure. We should never know what a pure, beautiful color white is if we did not have black to bring out the contrast. We want only pleasure in our lives. When sorrow comes we rebel, and refuse to recognize it for what it so often is—a blessing in disguise. We can not always have it June. There must be March. Yet March has its Spring violets.—Edward W. Bok, in Ladies' Home Journal.

You have all heard of Florence Nightingale, who nursed the sick soldiers in the Crimean war. But you may not know this fact relative to her. After the close of the Crimean war a dinner was given to the military and naval officers who had served in the campaign, and it was suggested that each guest write on a slip of paper the name of the person whose services during the Crimea would be longest remembered by posterity. Hundreds of slips were handed in, but only one name mentioned—Florence Nightingale. She is seventy seven years old, and lives at the home of her nephews in England.—Guardian.

Duty does not always wear a pleasant face when it confronts us; but if we meet it in the right spirit, we shall find its countenance gradually shining like that of an angel.

BEFORE I GO.

BY LILLIE WALLS STANSBURY.

I would that I some humble good might do,
Before I go.
That I might speak some little word of cheer,
That I might make some path a little more clear
Before I go.

Where weeds are growing, cultivate some flowers,
Where one may know;
Some dark recess open to the light,
Some lonely garret, or some nightless night,
For those below.

Leaving some footprints on the way,
That I might show
Some trembling, faltering, heartsick soul,
A pathway smoother to heaven's goal,
From earth below.

Or drive some woe
From a heart in trouble, or pain, or fear,
And make the dear in life more doubly dear
To those I know.

Only that I may strive each day I live,
Some good to do;
To some burden lighten, some pain relieve,
Some gladness scatter, some wrong retrieve,
Or joy renew.

Yet why need I though humbly seek to share,
This work below?
Hosts of stronger hearts unfailing, unafraid,
Are brave, and wait to give the Master aid
Before they go.

Yet as the child upon the beach at play,
Its pebbles throw,
It fain would finger yet upon the shore,
To gather shells and toss one pebble more,
Ere it may go.

The time is short, and I so little yet have done,
Too well I know;
Though the tide rises and the sea moans by the shore,
Yet I would stay to cast one pebble more
Before I go.

A CHRISTMAS JUBILEE UNDER THE ROOF-TREE.

"It shall not be so again," said one of the absent boys too busy to come home for the holidays. For the first time since children had gladdened our hearts and home, Merry Christmas, the one before the last, had come with not a "chick nor child" to help us welcome the day. It was of this Christmas, of the "lone roof-tree," that the words were spoken, "It shall not be so again." The words came true, and the late Christmas tide was a time of jubilee under that same roof tree.

"Lady," a pet name for our youngest born, was at home, while hints and half-promises led us to hope that others far away would return to the old roof-tree. And sure enough, the early days of December brought one who, many moons before, had married and gone to her distant home in the beautiful Indian country. Sunshine and cheer, as always, came with her, and jubilant notes enlivened the home. Christmas week we welcomed her loyal consort, and the jubilee tide kept steadily advancing.

And still we watched the trains; one more, maybap others, would come; but the early evening train of Thursday added no new arrival, and we returned, doubtful, home. The evening, however, passed pleasantly. The home circle had adjourned for the night, and things had assumed their wonted quiet, when the alert, quick ear of the mother caught sound of a footstep on the porch. "Who's that?" she called. "That one of my boys?" And suiting her actions to her thoughts, she promptly opened the front door, and found herself in the strong arms of a young man, or he found himself in hers. Perhaps it was both. More than a year had passed since he had said good-bye on the same threshold for his busy life in the far-away West. A little in the background, dimly shadowed, was another form. "That another one of my boys?" And he, too, responded to the fond welcome of his mother. It all happened so quickly that I had scarcely taken in the situation, when the mother and her boys were ushered into the family room. The other members of the family, who had retired to their rooms, hearing the glad commotion, kept dropping in until all were again present. Nor did we break up the circle again till the midnight hour had passed.

Friday, a red-letter day in our home calendar, passed amid the kindly, tender influences of a glad reunion. One of the sons returned the night before. Though fond of home and loved ones, had not found it in his way to visit the roof-tree since leaving it to make his home in the border city of Arkansas seventeen years before.

Saturday morning the household was astir and enlivened with the gladness of the blessed day first ushered in by the song of the angels. "Christmas gift," and like greetings of the days long agone, were heard again. The beautiful snow, in large flakes, came softly down till the earth was mantled in robe of purest white. It was an ideal Christmas day. Santa Claus had contributed to the cheer. For each one a stocking had been hung up. We gathered round the fireside, these grown up boys and girls, mama, papa and "Jennie Wren" — Aunt M. — some emptying their generous store of fruits, nuts and bonbons upon the hearth-rug, and all participating joyously in a scene of the days lang syne. Another scene of our earlier home life was re-enacted as we assembled around the family altar, read God's precious Word, and bowed with hearts full of gratitude to our heavenly Father. The absent ones were not forgotten at the throne of grace. Committing ourselves and them to his care, we rejoiced in the blessings of the glad day. The tide was on. It was a Christmas jubilee under the old roof tree. The Christmas turkey and other accompaniments invited a lively company about the dinner table. Good cheer, humor and wit, derived from Irish ancestry, graced and gave zest to the board.

Sunday, under varying phases the jubilee went on. We all worshiped together, the mother and children occupying the same pew, and heard a good sermon from the new preacher.

How restful is home to the long-absent ones! Shut in from the outside world, every feeling is abandoned to the warm sympathies and loving ministries of the sacred retreat. Weary with the toil and jostle of life, the quiet nap on mama's couch, or across the foot of her bed, is enjoyed as nowhere else on earth. They will go out again with new inspiration of courage and strength for this touch of home life. So passed the short, but glad days. Monday came, and one went away, Tuesday another, and later still all were gone; but their visit was a benediction to the home, and left a lasting joy in the memories of a Christmas jubilee under the ROOF-TREE.

LOCAL PREACHERS.

MR. EDITOR: I would like to say a little on the subject of local preachers, if you will give it space in your valuable paper. I have been pondering the questions in my mind: Is the local preacher of any value to the church? If so, how much? If of any value, why is he not compensated in some way by the church? Is not the laborer worthy of his hire?

Now, if I understand it aright, if he is a faithful laborer in the vineyard of the Lord, he is certainly worthy of his hire. He is expected to visit the sick, bury the dead, preach funerals, and if he can, fill an appointment each Sabbath; and when revival season comes on, he is expected to turn his back on home interests, and assist his own and other pastors. He is also required to carry up a good report to fourth Quarterly Conference of a faithful year's work in the cause, and many times I have noticed that the people he serves in these revivals very often allow him to return to his, maybe, very needy family with little or nothing to show their appreciation of his services. Now, I also notice that if a local preacher does all that he is expected and required to do, that it takes up a good part of his time. We all know he has a support to make, maybe, for a large family, and also go decently dressed and pay his debts at the end of the year, just like other preachers.

Now, I believe local preachers ought to be provided for by the church. We have not got so many of them, but Conference could appropriate something to them for their services. I do not mean dead-heads, but live, wide-awake men of God. Why not some of our brainy, wide-awake ministers bring up this subject, and discuss it pro and con? I am sure the local preacher has friends in the itinerancy that will help him, if in their power; and if his services are not worth something, why, then, not strike him out altogether?

Now, Mr. Editor, I am no local preacher, but I am his well-wisher and sympathizer, as I see so many good men in the local ranks needing help, and do not get it. Will not some one set the ball to rolling in his behalf, and see if he can not get a little help from the church?

Now, don't some of you "pitch into" me, but "pitch into" the subject, as I am anxious to know if there is anyone else that feels as I do on the subject.

Your paper, Mr. Editor, is a welcome visitor in our home. Long may it flourish and bless us with its weekly presence! is the wish of

A METHODIST READER.

THE PEACE OF JERUSALEM.

When Paul, the inspired, wrote, "I beseech Euochias, and beseech Syntyche that they be of the same mind in the Lord," he was, doubtless, deeply concerned for this thorn in the spirit which was rending the church; so deeply, perhaps, as for his own "thorn in the flesh," about which there has been so much speculation. Into this speculation this writer does not propose to enter, believing that had it been a matter of such vital importance as some consider it, the question would not have been left to doubt. Nor does it much matter to us whether Paul wrote in large or small letters, whether his hand-writing was good or bad, any more than to know what writing materials he used, and whether these materials were his own or borrowed. But it does behoove us to inquire whether the hymns of our church are inspired by the Holy Ghost, and to determine this we should go to the hymns themselves, and to the Scriptures with which we Methodists claim that they coincide. The Bible says, "Every good gift and every perfect gift is from above, and cometh down from the Father of lights, with whom is no variableness, neither shadow of turning."

That Wesley's poetic fervor was as surely the gift of God as that of David or Isaiah is indisputable. Therefore, the question to be decided is whether the Holy Spirit does or does not still inspire his people in their worship and good works. In the fourteenth chapter of John, sixteenth and seventeenth verses, the Savior says: "I will pray the Father, and he shall give you another Comforter that he may abide with you forever; even the Spirit of truth whom the world can not receive, because it seeth him not, neither knoweth him: but ye know him; for he dwelleth with you and shall be in you." In the twenty-sixth verse he promises that "The Comforter, which is the Holy Ghost, whom the Father will send in my name, he shall teach you all things, and shall bring all things to your remembrance, whatsoever I have said unto you." If, therefore, the hymns of Wesley, and others, are faithful exponents of the Word, these truths must certainly have been brought to their remembrance by the Holy Spirit—the work be of God! That any Methodist claims, or ever has claimed, verbal inspiration for these hymns, we do not believe; but that "holy men wrote as they were moved by the Holy Ghost," we must believe, since the doctrines taught in them accord with the Word of God.

He has chosen the foolishness of preaching to save the world, but the beauty of the Lord is in the songs of Zion. Let this beauty be upon us, and upon his Israel everywhere, and let us "pray for the peace of Jerusalem," remembering the exhortation, "speaking to yourselves in psalms and hymns, and spiritual songs, singing and making melody in your heart to the Lord."

"Jehovah's everlasting days,
They can not numbered be;
Incomprehensible the space
Of thine immensity:
Thy wisdom's depths by reason's line
In vain we strive to sound,
Or stretch our lab'ring thought t' assign Omnipotence a bound." (C. Wesley.)

(Concluded.)

The society, since 1884, has forwarded $3,052 30.

In 1889 that sweet-spirited missionary, Miss Viola Blackburn's name, is entered upon the roll. Now, how different must be her life and labors with Mexico's children!

In 1889 the liberality of the organization was made prominent by its noble treasurer, Mrs. Clara Fant, who paid $100 for the establishment of a mission school to be named for her angel daughter, "The Lucy Fant Mission."

The letter from Miss Helm acknowledging this donation closes with this earnest wish: "May God make it the means of bringing many Chinese daughters to know and love Christ!" No doubt in the eight years past many such prayers have been owned and blessed.

The Minutes record a very interesting meeting during the session of the Annual Conference in December, 1889, in which Bros. Lipscomb and Hargrove, also the Conference secretary, Mrs. Stone, took part. One impressive feature was a song by the former, composed by a Hindoo woman, "In the secret of his presence," which he rendered in a touching manner. A talk from the latter gentleman, discussing some of his wife's plans among the children. How much good her earnest work and encouraging words have done only eternity will tell. Mrs. Stone gave a short, interesting talk on the general work, and called upon Mrs. Clara Fant to tell what gave the greatest impetus to the same. Her answer was, "The presence of the members of the Conference society," it having convened in the place the previous year. This fact impresses the old opinion that knowledge creates interest, and interest begets love.

For several years there have been many changes in the roll, but the average has been forty. Now, whence comes the motive power that inspires these untiring labors? We unhesitatingly say it is the home life of this band of workers. It is easy to do for God in a weekly or monthly meeting, when the daily experience becomes radiant by Bible reading, love to fellow-mortals, and communion with the blessed Master. One can always feel, "I was glad when they said unto me, Let us go unto the house of the Lord."

As the fern leaves its modest epitaph in the coal, so will the influence of these godly women sound along the future years, like the roll of a trumpet along the mountain gorges, and be a benediction to those who follow. The record of this auxiliary is a beautiful mosaic, which, if taken separately, seem little insignificant items; but when we remember the universe is composed of atoms, we may be assured that when all these little deeds and words are collected and laid as "trophies at Jesus' feet," he will make of them one entire, perfect chrysolite, and render the welcome plaudit, "Well done, good and faithful servant."

In concluding this little review, we realize that one element of success has been the work of the secretaries, with a consistency of purpose, an abiding sense of duty so appropriate in a lover of the lowly Nazarene. These officers have recorded the proceeding, and now their neat penmanship, bracing their pure and loving thoughts, remains as a testimony of their beautiful lives.

We feel that too much can not be said in praise of this band of workers, and from one who has often admired their constancy. May your zeal be such as can not be quenched by Winter snows, nor injured in its freshness and life by Summer's heat! May your faith, as a body of Christian pilgrims, be such as will build the sublimest shrines under the greatest difficulties, and may it prove a key with which to unlock the mysteries of God's kingdom, in order that you may reach forth and secure treasures with which to adorn your character and fit you for your place in the beautiful beyond, where you will forever bask in the light of God's love, where Jesus will wipe away all tears, and reward every service done "In his name!"

P. AND H. M. SOCIETY.

Sisters of the North Mississippi Conference Society: Your Publication Committee is forced to ask your forbearance. In the first place, we did not get the Minutes of our sixth annual meeting until very late, as they were in a trunk that our recording secretary was so unfortunate as to lose temporarily in making the move from one pastoral charge to another. Since their receipt one hindrance after another has prevented the completion of our report, the principal of which is the protracted illness of the most important member of the committee. I am now doing the work alone, and hope to have it ready for the printer in a day or two, and in your hands in a few weeks. In the meantime, please "let patience have her perfect work."

A PRECIOUS INHERITANCE.

Gold bequeathed from generation to generation has not always resulted in the highest good. Bitter divisions have often wrought animosity in families on account of inherited wealth. It is not thus with the legacy of noble and virtuous character. Loving companions and devoted children delight to honor it. When the anniversary day comes and the scattered company is permitted to enjoy a renewal of early associations around the old hearth-stone, no theme is so welcome as the recital of manly or womanly virtues, no joy so sweet as that which comes from admiring those who, having faithfully toiled on earth, are now crowned in celestial light.

If this is so, what a lesson of encouragement is taught those who are sometimes weighted down to life's river brink with present responsibilities! We may, like those who have preceded us, transmit to our descendants the bright coin of a holy character. We may live hereafter, in the lives of our successors to the latest generation, by our loyalty to truth, by our charity, by our godly hopefulness, by our deep sympathy for the distressed—above all else, by our union with Jesus Christ, with all its accompanying fruits. If we build right while we live, the superstructure of our character will be made enduring, for we in this way build with "gold, silver, and precious stones," the permanent substances that will forever stand because of their intrinsic value. The apostle said: "Moreover I will endeavor that ye may be able after my decease to have these things always in remembrance." This world has been enriched with such wealth during the past ages. Holy character is constantly swelling the stream of sacred influence. At last, with an accumulated force, the current will undermine the hoary citadels of error, and the kingdoms of this world shall become the kingdom of our Lord. Measuring the magnitude of the wide and permanent influence of Christian character through the Holy Spirit, the world will become ready for spiritual victories that the church has not dreamed of hitherto.—New York Advocate.

READING THE BIBLE.

It is discouraging to some good people to find that they can not enjoy reading the Bible at all times and under all circumstances. "I can enjoy reading a newspaper at almost any time," says one, "and if the Bible is as dear to me as my paper, I ought to enjoy reading that at almost any time, too." Plausible as it is, the argument is wrong, both in its premise and in its conclusions. It is not true that one can enjoy reading a newspaper at almost any time. One can not enjoy reading it in the shadow of a great sorrow, for instance. Nor can one enjoy reading it in the middle of a crisis, or when one is at high pressure from any cause. The daily paper is keyed upon the level that a man usually finds himself on when at the breakfast table, or in the store waiting for a customer, or after tea, when the cares of the day are to be put away. But even if one can enjoy the daily paper at any time, and can only enjoy reading the Bible at certain times, it is no evidence that his heart is set upon the world, of which the daily paper is its mirror, rather than upon heaven, of which the Bible is the mirror. The Bible is not keyed to a level with ordinary, every-day life and thought. It is keyed up to a level with the thoughts which men think when they leave the busy street and go out upon some mountain-top and uncover their heads to the cooling breeze, and look up into the blue veil which separates the holy place into which they have entered from the holy of holies. It is just as unreasonable that we should find fault with ourselves for not enjoying the Bible in the midst of the whirl of business as it would be to find fault with ourselves for not being able to enjoy a humorous story while sitting by the bedside of a dying friend.—Bible Reader.

THINGS TO LIVE FOR.

There is no doubt that every hard thing that God permits to come into our life has a blessing wrapped up in it. The things which appear before us as discouragements prove to be helps toward nobler attainments. A Christian physician, whose career has been full of faith and noble ministry, gives this experience: He was a poor boy, and a cripple. One day he was watching some other boys on the ball-field. They were active, strong, and wealthy. As he looked on, his heart grew bitter with envy. A young man who stood beside him noted the discontent on his face, and said to him, "You wish you were in those boys' place, don't you?" "Yes, I do," was the answer. "I reckon God gave them money, education and health," continued the young man, "to help them to be of some account in the world. Did it never strike you," he continued, after a moment's pause, "that he gave you your lame leg for the same reason—to make a man of you?" The boy gave no answer, and turned away. He was angry, but he did not forget the words. His crippled leg God's gift! To teach him patience, courage, perseverance! To make a man of him! He thought of the words till he saw their meaning. They kindled hope and cheer, and he determined to conquer his hindrance. He grew heroic. He soon learned that what was true of his lame leg was true also of all the difficulties, hindrances and hard conditions of his life—they were all God's gifts to him to help him to be of some account in the world—to make a man of him.—J. R. Miller, D. D., in "Things to Live For."

You can serve God on the farm, or in the bank, or pleading before the bar, or practicing medicine, as truly as in the ministry, if the Lord truly calls you to one of these positions. But be sure he calls you in that direction. Do not make the mistake of taking ship for Tarshish if the Lord sends you to Nineveh.

SUNDAY TRAINS.

MR. EDITOR: Enclosed please find a clipping from the Alabama Christian Advocate, which I wish you would publish with article I sent you yesterday.

S. S. COPE.

Goulding, Miss.

The Jew rides a Sabbath train with impunity. Theatrical troupes ride Sabbath trains with constancy. Sinners ride Sabbath trains with impiety. Some church members ride Sabbath trains thoughtlessly. Business men ride Sabbath trains for money. Pleasure lovers ride Sabbath trains haughtily. But when ministers ride Sabbath trains they do it wickedly and godlessly. I write the last sentence painfully, reluctantly, prayerfully; with pain because I do not know but it may cause pain to some of my best friends; reluctantly because I like so much to charge brethren in any way, and prayerfully that these our brother ministers of mine may quit now and forever their patronage of Sabbath-breaking and Sabbath-destroying trains run by their owners for pecuniary profit and not for the promotion of piety.

A gentleman said to me: "I ride trains on the Sabbath sometimes, but my minister rides them at all times. It may be right, but my Bible and my conscience and my mother's teachings are all on the other side."

Brother preacher, for the sake of Christ who denied himself of heaven for our time for you, will you not scrupulously avoid conduct on the Sabbath which is dubious and odious to many people? "Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy" is for ministers to teach about and to practice in their personal lives as well. For God's sake and us preserve the Christian Sabbath to the country. Preachers can do it.

EDWARD BOK TO LECTURE.

A POPULAR YOUNG EDITOR TO COME SOUTH TO MEET SOUTHERN PEOPLE.

Edward Bok, the famous young editor of the Ladies' Home Journal, has finally been persuaded to appear on the lecture platform, and he will make his debut as a lecturer in the South next October. He will lecture in twenty of the principal cities and in a few of the neighboring Western States. The title of his lecture will be, "The Keys to Success"—the most interesting subject he could have chosen to talk about. Mr. Bok is, perhaps, the most successful and popular young man in America. Women read him as they do no other writer, and it may be confidently said that around the personality of no other man in America is there a greater interest and curiosity on the part of thousands of women than centres on this successful editor. The women will not be disappointed in him, as, in looks and manner, Mr. Bok possesses all the qualities which they like. He is as popular personally with women as are his writings. Up to this time he has declined the most flattering terms to lecture, but last week the Southern Lyceum Bureau, of Louisville, succeeded in closing a contract with the Philadelphia editor. Mr. Bok has chosen the Southern field entirely because he wishes to acquaint himself with the South and its people, and has stipulated that his lecturing tour shall be so arranged as to allow him time for social engagements and observation. He will not speak more than three times each week, and will spend seven weeks in the South.

HOW TO GET TEACHERS.

Write to J. M. Dewberry, Manager of "The School Agency," Birmingham, Ala., stating kind of teacher desired and the pay. He recommends efficient teachers to Schools, Colleges and Families free of charge throughout the South and Southwest. Sells and rents school property. Efficient teachers desiring information should write for circulars.

Ours is a sunny religion, born of divine love; and one of the fruits of the Holy Spirit is joy. A joyless Christian is a libel on his profession. We ought to walk so close to Jesus as to be always in his sunshine, and make so little of earthly ills and vexations and losses as never to let them envelop us in an atmosphere of Arctic midnight. Paul made a dungeon ring with holy melodies. Every follower of Christ should strive to make his daily life a song as well as a gospel sermon.—Theodore L. Cuyler, D. D.

We often wrong ourselves, but we soon forgive ourselves these wrongs, and they do not at all lessen our love to ourselves; and in like manner we should forgive and love our neighbors.

Patient, hopeful waiting is hard work when it is the only work possible to us in an emergency. But patient waiting is in its time the highest duty of a faithful soul.—H. Clay Trumbull.

FROM THE WORK.

Rev. W. C. Harris, P. C., Friar's Point, Miss., Feb. 14, 1898: "We have just held our first Quarterly Conference. Our presiding elder, Rev. J. W. Dorman, was with us in his usual fine spirit, and did us faithful work, both in the pulpit and as president of the Conference. Financial reports showed considerable advance over corresponding period last year. We have recently hold a meeting of eight days, assisted (except the first day) by Bro. J. E. Thomas, of Greenville station. As yet only four have joined the church as a result of the meeting, but others are expected to join. Besides this, very much good was done, and we hope, under the blessing of God, to nurture and develop the good done, until the church, as a whole, shall have been revived and scores of sinners saved. A great work is needed. I ask that everyone who reads this pray earnestly for a genuine all-pervading, Holy-Ghost revival at this place."

Rev. C. C. Griffin, P. C., Hiram, Miss., Feb. 12, 1898: "I was appointed to the Wilkinson circuit by the Conference at Jackson. We left Pelahatchie, Jan. 27, and arrived in Gloster on the twenty-eighth, and was met by Bro. J. K. Cobb and wife, and others, with conveyance to convey us out to the parsonage, where we found a large crowd awaiting our arrival. We were invited into the house where we found everything set in order, with a good fire burning in the fireplace. After we had warmed we were then invited out to dinner, which had been prepared by the good sisters, that was good enough for a king. After we had eaten our dinner, we then had a good social chat; then some good singing by the young folks; then we were led in prayer by Bro. H. W. Day; then the crowd dispersed and left us in possession of our new home, and the good people make us feel at home by their deeds of kindness and love. We feel that we have made a good beginning. We will try and let you hear from us again when we see more of the work and people. Pray for us."

Rev. W. J. Dawson, Williamsburg, Miss., Feb. 12, 1898: "This is my fourth year on this charge (Williamsburg circuit), and, of course, my last. Hence I shall be prepared for the inevitable next Conference. Last year was the best year of the three already served on this charge, and I intend, by God's grace, that this shall be the best of all. We had good revivals last year, but I want a revival in every home this year. Last year the collections ordered by the Conference were about 22 per cent. in advance of the year before; this year I want 100 per cent. of the whole. I want a revival in every church and home, and every dollar of every collection. I used to dislike to take the collection, but I have learned to love it, and to look upon it as a part of our ministry. Bishop Key says that every preacher is sent out to preach the gospel and to collect the means to advance the work. I hope to have the parsonage repaired and better furnished during the year. This is a pleasant work; compact, kind and appreciating people. There are some as godly, consecrated men and women on Williamsburg circuit as you will find anywhere. But we have far too many who fail to measure up to their ability, and to what a Methodist ought to be—many who have scarcely a name that they live. I shall bring the ADVOCATE before the people as I have always done, but I trust that I shall have better success than heretofore. I have met my first round of appointments, and have had good and appreciative congregations. May God's blessings rest upon you and the ADVOCATE!"

Rev. P. H. Howse, P. C., Trenton, Miss., Feb. 9, 1898: "I left Walnut Grove Tuesday, Jan. 18, with my wife and six children, a young lady friend, three wagons and teams, with brethren to drive those teams. We had a muddy, watary time; the mud began as we left the parsonage door and extended all the way to Forest. We had gone two and a half miles when we reached the famous Tuskalameta, over which Bro. Ben Jones said he would not cross again unless judgment was held on the other side, and the water was one mile wide, and we traveled through it from one to three and a half feet deep. After passing this trouble we move on nicely until we reached Talabogue. (Indian—Translated, 'Terrible Beg.') Then such bumping on causeway and dropping into mud holes! Forest was reached just in time to escape a heavy rain. Wednesday A. M. we left Forest for Trenton with my family, and one of the brethren who was with us the day before, and a brother with his team who came to meet us. The first six miles were awful. Flat-woods prairie; then our road was not so bad from there on. But it rained on us all the way—a distance of eighteen miles. We reached Trenton just before night and found a fire burning brightly, and a number of my good people there to receive and welcome us—among whom were Rev. R. A. Sibley, Dr. Patton and Bro. Summer. When we had warmed and exchanged courtesies, the good ladies invited us out to supper, and the table was richly furnished with provisions; and those who know us best need no further explanation. Since that time there have been but few days that something nice and substantial has not been brought to the parsonage. My little boy, Charlie B. Galloway, took the pneumonia soon after we reached here; but, under the skillful treatment of Dr. Patton, he is again well. I anticipate a good year. Success through Jesus Christ my Lord is my motto. Pray for us."

EBENEZER CIRCUIT.

We arrived here Christmas week from the swamp, and, looking out on the little country village from the great high hill on which the parsonage is located, and seeing beautiful little cottages dotted here and there among the tall oaks, forming a most picturesque scene of loveliness, and feeling that God had sent us here to teach transgressors the way of the Lord, wondered if any preacher could be so happy as I. Not the surroundings, not the scenery, not the pleasant home and comforts of life that made my soul exult for joy, but it was being so honored as to be sent by the hand of God to "tell the old, old story of Jesus and his love." Thank God, it seems, "each time I tell it," that it becomes "more wonderfully sweet," and "those who know it best seem hungering and thirsting to hear it, like the rest." Most all my people are loyal, and we move hand in hand, one solid rank against the mighty foe, calling the truce breakers back to their allegiance with God.

We have six splendid houses of worship on this circuit, and just as soon as the painter is through repainting our church here at Ebenezer, all will be in good repair. Our people at each appointment pride in good houses of worship and attend regularly "the public worship of God." Ebenezer circuit is blessed with loyal, patriot, generous, God-serving people.

We don't see much newadays written by our more eminent divines of the North Mississippi Conference from their work—too busy, I suppose. Brethren, encourage us occasionally by telling what you are doing. We who are the least of all God's servants take pleasure in raising our voice in loudest tones through the medium of our pen and telling you that we, too, are in the fight, although our blows may be feeble. Pray for us.

REVIVAL AT SHERMAN, MISS.

We closed last Sunday a gracious revival, resulting in much good. Twenty-five were converted, twelve joined the Methodist, seven the Baptist, one the Presbyterians. But the greatest work was in the churches. Yes, all denominations engaged heartily in the work—in fact, we never saw an entire town labor so harmoniously together, and so nearly every man, woman and child blessed. The high school, with its noble Christian faculty, dismissed every day at eleven o'clock, and came and took an active part, and, of course, were greatly blessed. The business houses were closed for services, and nearly everyone in town who were not already members were saved. This glorious work was going on three services a day, during that very cold weather. The work started with our Quarterly Conference on Thursday, when our excellent presiding elder, Bro. Tucker, preached two unusually good and well-timed sermons, which had a gracious effect upon the church and people generally. Then Bro. W. D. Bass came to my assistance, and proved to be the right man in the right place. Bro. Bass is as prudent, safe and loyal Methodist preacher as I ever worked with, and preaches such clear, strong and effectual sermons, just such as are needed everywhere. True as steel to our church, yet so kind and Christ-like as to command the respect and even the admiration of all men. We worked together for ten days as true yoke-fellows, preaching myself every day at 3 P. M., and the last two days I carried on the meeting by myself, closing out on Sunday night with as good service as we had had. Bro. Bass leaves the pastor so well tied on to his people, and, of course, I was encouraged very much to hear him say that he had never left a pastor in better favor with a people than he did the one at Sherman; and I can say gladly that no soul-winner ever left a town in greater favor with all than did Bro. Bass in leaving Sherman. None of our good pastors need destitute to invite him, and stand by him. The Lord is still with us. Praise his name.

Woman's Work

Is never done, and it is especially wearing and wearisome to those whose blood is impure and unfit properly to sustain the wasting of nerve, muscle and tissue. The only remedy for tired, weak, nervous women is in building up by taking a good nerve tonic, blood purifier and vitalizer like Hood's Sarsaparilla. For troubles Peculiar to Women at change of season, climate or life, take

A Letter for Grandpa.

The man who takes proper care of his health in youth and maturity lives to smile as he reads the letters of his grandchildren. It's worth something to do that. It's worth a little daily care and thought for health. It's worth a dollar here and there for the right remedy for the insidious ills that make the big diseases.

When a man's liver is "out of whack" or his digestion is bad, or his appetite "finicky," he should take Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. It makes a man "hungry as a horse." It fills the blood with the life-giving elements of the food a man takes. It is the great liver invigorator. It makes the digestion perfect. It is the great blood-maker, flesh-builder and nerve tonic. It drives all impurities from the system. It cures nervous prostration, bilious complaints, malarial troubles and 98 per cent. of all cases of consumption. The medicine dealer who offers a substitute for the sake of a few extra pennies profit, is dishonest.

"Would have written you before now, but thought I would wait until I got entirely well," writes Mrs. Mary Tibbs, of Hitchcock, Galveston Co., Tex. "Now I am pleased to say that I am sound and well. I have been using Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, the 'Favorite Prescription' and 'Pleasant Pellets.' We think your medicines the best in the world. I was troubled with female weakness, headaches, cold feet and hands, a disagreeable drain and general weakness; was exceedingly nervous, had poor appetite, constipation, distress in the stomach, too much flow, falling of internal organs, of two years' standing. Three bottles of 'Favorite Prescription' and three of 'Golden Medical Discovery' completely restored my health."

Constipation and biliousness are nasty, nagging disorders that keep a man or woman dull and miserable. Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets are a sure, speedy, permanent cure. One little 'Pellet' is a gentle laxative and two a mild cathartic. They never gripe. Dealers sell them. Nothing is "just as good."

WHEAT OR CHAFF—WHICH?

What men think depends very largely upon what they read. It is as foolish to expect wholesome, vigorous thought of people who feast their minds upon vile or worthless literature as it is to look for sound health in those who eat improper, indigestible food. Our souls are dyed by our thoughts, and our thoughts are dyed by what we give them to feed upon. Hence we owe it to ourselves to choose our reading with the utmost care, remembering that the hasty perusal of a bad book or a filthy newspaper will leave impressions that no power of will can obliterate. Many a youth who reads immoral papers and works of fiction, in after years finds his memory haunted from time to time with evil pictures and suggestions, though he has long repented of his folly and renounced such literature.

Since "of making many books there is no end," good, bad and indifferent being poured out in a huge and steady stream from the presses of this and other lands, there is greater need than ever for wise discrimination in the purchase and perusal of literature. As the author of "Life and Conduct" wisely remarks, "There are people who read books, which if they took to themselves bodily form and became personified, would be kicked out of their houses." . . . "Evil books poison the springs of thought and feeling much more thoroughly than an evil acquaintanceship could do."

It is claimed that one boy has been ruined for every copy of "Peck's Bad Boy" that was ever in circulation. While this statement may be an exaggeration, there is no doubt that the book mentioned has done a vast deal of harm; for in it disrespect to parents and disregard of parental authority are held up as virtues. The newspapers every now and then contain accounts of crimes committed or attempted by boys scarcely in their teens who were led into the paths of vice through reading vile books and papers—reports of robberies, murders and such like. Not many months ago a young criminal in New Hampshire, who at the age of twenty two was condemned to the gallows for a brutal murder, in his confession stated that when a little boy he began reading novels, and that he read anything and everything he could get pertaining to mysterious crimes. Here was the prime cause of his criminal career.

Wise parents are bound to exercise a strict censorship over the reading of their children, taking pains, however, to furnish them with attractive, wholesome literature. It is not enough to prohibit the bad. Good books and papers must be put into their hands, else they will obtain pernicious literature on the sly.

Such multitudes of entertaining and elevating books are now obtainable at marvelously low rates that even the poor can afford a choice library. The neglect of many parents to provide attractive and helpful reading for their children is nothing short of criminal. Many a dollar goes for finery, frivolity, and ought to be spent in the purchase of noble books for the improvement of mind and character. Thousands, however, act as if the body only were worthy of serious attention.

The influence of a good book is inestimable; its value above rubies. The reading of a single volume has sometimes served to mould a whole life. Benjamin Franklin traced his entire career to Cotton Mather's "Essays to Do Good," which he read in boyhood. Homer's Iliad did no little to kindle the fires of military ambition in the bosoms of Alexander, Hannibal, and Cæsar. Cobbett's "birth of intellect," as he considered it, dated from his purchase at the age of eleven of Swift's "Tale of a Tub." John Wesley's life received a profound impress from reading Kempis' "Imitation of Christ," Bishop Taylor's "Rules of Holy Living," and Law's "Serious Call."

While a few great men have been omnivorous readers, a large proportion of them have confined themselves, in the main, to a small number of well-chosen volumes, which they read repeatedly until these were thoroughly mastered. As Bacon sagely says, "Some books are to be tasted, others to be swallowed, some few to be chewed and digested." Not a few books that are healthful in tone are hardly worth more than a mere skimming. Superficial reading of the masterpieces, however, is of little profit.

While books are more numerous than ever before in the world's history, the reading public now passes them by in a large measure for the sake of periodical literature; newspapers and story magazines with their sensationalism and chaff being almost the sole mental pabulum of a large class. (Of course, no one will accuse us of bringing a wholesale charge against the periodical press.) Many of those who read something besides newspapers read simply for amusement, or pastime, seldom taking up anything more solid than the latest novel. Nor are they at all scrupulous about the tone or the authorship of the volumes they read. Literature that is inspiring and helpful the masses do not read or care for.

Parents, teachers and pastors have, in view of this state of things, an important duty to perform in cultivating wholesome literary tastes in those under their care, in guiding the reading of the young, and in encouraging in every possible way the circulation of pure and helpful literature. Many more people would buy and read good books than do so now, if those who are prepared to lead in such matters would direct and encourage the rest. "A literary taste," says Dr. William Matthews, "is at once the most efficient instrument of self education and the purest source of enjoyment the world affords."

Reading circles ought to be formed in every town. Let pastors commend good books by name, lend those they can spare, and do their utmost to foster intelligence along with piety, for the two are mutually helpful. Let the intelligent and the God fearing everywhere awake to the crying necessity of doing something to check the blighting, destructive progress of vile literature.

"Where one good, honest, healthful book is read now, there is a hundred made up of rhetorical trash consumed with avidity. When the boys on the cars come through with a pile of publications, look over the titles and notice that nine out of ten of the books are injurious. Taste for pure literature is poisoned by this scum of the publishing house. Every book in which sin triumphs over virtue, or in which a glamour is thrown over dissipation, or which leaves you at its last line with less respect for the marriage institution, and less abhorrence for the paramour, is a depression of your own moral character. The bookbindery may be attractive, and the plot dramatic and startling, and the style of writing sweet as the honey that Jonathan took up with his rod, but your best interests forbid it, your moral safety forbids it, your God forbids it."

MISS WILLARD DEAD.

Miss Frances E. Willard is dead. Miss Willard was, perhaps, the most widely known and the most ardently loved woman in the world. She was most extraordinarily endowed by nature, and her gifts had been developed and strengthened by an extensive and varied culture. In the field of oratory, which until very recently has been regarded as the exclusive possession of the sterner sex, she won the brightest of laurels. The following quotation from an editorial which we wrote for the NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE, a few years since, gives our deliberate estimate of her from the standpoint of oratory:

"Those who have been accustomed to regard a coarse, repulsive mannishness as a necessary accompaniment of feminine oratory have only to hear Miss Willard once in order to have all their ideas on the subject revolutionized. A more perfect specimen of womanliness can not be found. Her voice is sweet and womanly, and yet has sufficient volume to be heard with the utmost distinctness by a large audience. Her diction is absolutely marvelous. She seems to have at her command all the rich resources of the English tongue. She does not belong to the 'write-out-and-commit-to-memory' school of oratory. She simply talks, using the words which come to her at the moment; but such talk who ever heard before? For propriety and elegance of diction she has no superior and scarcely an equal. Her style of speaking is simple and unaffected. She stands in one place with no attitudinizing and with almost no gesticulation. Although at the head of the great temperance reform movement of the century, she has no words of invective against those who are engaged in the liquor traffic. Kindliness beams from her face and breathes through her every utterance. She carries a key with which she can unlock the fountain where tears are kept. At times her pathos is almost irresistible."

The muse of history will certainly record her name among the very ablest orators of the present age. She was almost equally gifted as a writer. Though she gave much less time to writing than to reading and speaking, the products of her pen stamp her as a genius of a high order. She also possessed a rare talent of organization, and this has been no inconsiderable factor in the success of the great temperance movement with which her name will forever be indissolubly connected.

But her intellectual endowments, transcendent as they were, pale into insignificance in comparison with those qualities of heart which made her the best-loved woman of the age, and one of the most potent factors in several of the greatest reformatory movements of the nineteenth century. She was a philanthropist in the highest sense of that noble word. Every movement that looked to the uplifting of humanity from the depths of sin and degradation and misery found in her a friend. All this and much more can be said of her without endorsing her views on woman suffrage and some other sociological questions. We regard it as an honor that we have enjoyed Miss Willard's friendship for a number of years. In spite of her multifarious duties she has found time occasionally to write us an autograph letter.

She was a thoroughly consecrated Christian, living continually in conscious communion with the Father, showing in her daily life the fruits of the indwelling Spirit.

GENEROUS GIFTS TO MILLSAPS COLLEGE.

It gives me pleasure to know that the increasing prosperity of Millsaps College is attracting the wisely directed offerings of our people. Such assurance encourages the hope that our equipment will continue to steadily increase, and our plans constantly enlarge. Not long since a valued friend, whose generosity has greatly blessed the college several times before, sent me a check for one hundred dollars, which has been applied to our growing library fund. And another noble spirit, whose name she insists must be withheld, a few days ago made a subscription of one thousand dollars to endow a scholarship, and intimates that this amount may be increased. All honor is due such sanctified generosity. On what a divine mission and ministry will this prayerfully given money now enter! Long after the fair hands of the givers have been folded in death these sacred gifts will be multiplying and ministering to the enrichment of the church and nation.

CHAS. B. GALLOWAY.

Jackson, Miss., Feb. 17, 1898.

A NEW BOOK.

THE HOME OF THE BIBLE: WHAT I SAW AND HEARD IN PALESTINE. By Marion Harland, author of "Common Sense in the Household," "The Royal Road," etc. 446 pages. Historical Publishing Co., Philadelphia.

A more charming book of its kind it has never been our pleasure to examine. Many excellent books on Palestine have been written by travelers and others; but a volume on this subject from a woman's point of view is rarely met with. Hence this one is all the more pleasing for that reason. Miss Harland is a close observer, a gifted writer, possesses great warmth of heart, and is withal a woman of superior intelligence. In the volume before us she gives us a realistic and delightful account of her recent journey through the Holy Land, the scenes, customs, and people there—all being described in the most graphic way. "My object in going to Palestine," she remarks in the introduction, "was to see with fresh eyes and judge with unprejudiced mind what this, the most interesting of lands to the Christian, is like to day; how the inhabitants look, and live, and think, and what traces the traveler finds in the ruins of the past of the nations who flourished, battled, and were, in turn, swept from home and country by the march of God's providence."

This work is by no means a tedious diary of travel and moralizings, nor is it burdened with dry statistics. It abounds in beautiful descriptions, pleasing, and, in some instances, touching incidents and valuable information. Miss Harland calls attention to the remarkable fact that the people of Palestine have changed less in their manner of living, customs, and prejudices, than those of any other country, being almost the same to-day that they were two thousand years ago.

This book is profusely illustrated with fine engravings from photographic views taken in Palestine. Many of the illustrations occupy a full page. Added to Miss Harland's work is "The Thrilling Story of Armenia," and their cruel persecutions by the Moslems, by G. H. Sandison, of the Christian Herald.

The volume before us will delight young and old alike, and is worthy of a place in every home.

INTERNATIONAL STUDENT VOLUNTEER MOVEMENT AT CLEVELAND.

The International Student Volunteer Movement for Foreign Missions will hold its convention in Cleveland, O., from the 23d to the 27th of this month. It will probably be one of the largest missionary gatherings of the century. Some of the best known men engaged in missionary work, both in the field and at home, and the greatest number of Missionary Boards and organizations ever brought together at one time will be there. Practically every nation of civilization, as well as of heathendom, will send delegates. Students, men and women, and professors, will come from the five great countries of the world and from the islands of the sea.

Five thousand young men and women of education and refinement, many of them the possessors of more than one college or university degree, and hundreds of them pledged to go into the mission field—such is the character of the Student Volunteer Movement, and of such material will the coming convention be composed.

The character of the Student Volunteer Movement, which is interdenominational and not officially connected with any denomination, will be apparent from the statement of one of the officials that "over sixty of the denominational bodies are sure to send their leading representatives to the meeting in Cleveland."

The Student Volunteer Movement has been in existence only twelve years, yet it has accomplished, as claimed by its friends, what other enterprises for the outlet of missionary zeal have failed in doing. The denomination Missionary Boards have been hampered and handicapped in their work by the fact that it was difficult for them to secure an adequate number of men and women, properly educated and equipped who would go as missionaries to foreign lands. The Student Volunteer Movement, in its function as an enlisting and training agency for volunteers among college and university students, has, it is said, changed the condition of affairs. Men and women are no longer lacking, but the means wherewith to send them, 5,000 students, largely of the colleges and universities of North America, being now ready to go. In the last few years a great change is said to have taken place among the students in their attitude toward religious matters, and it is said that the colleges are becoming the centers of religious influence and missionary zeal.

More than sixty of the Missionary Boards will send official delegates.

The students of 1000 colleges of the United States, Canada, Great Britain and other lands have within the last few years united themselves together to plan a religious campaign throughout the entire world. Thousands of the most prominent scholars and athletes in the universities have pledged their lives to foreign missions, either as teachers, preachers or physicians, and they are ready at any time to cross the ocean under the direction of the various denominational Mission Boards as missionaries.

President McCosh, of Princeton University, said of it: "Has any such offering of living young men and women been presented in our age, in our country, in any age, or in any country, since the day of Pentecost?"

The object of the movement may be briefly stated in its watchword: "The evangelization of the world in this generation."—New Orleans Picayune.

We regret to learn that Rev. C. Grisham, of the North Mississippi Conference, is in feeble health. He has been able to preach only twice since Conference. We hope he will soon be entirely restored.

* * *

We were pleased to receive a call a few days since, from Rev. H. Clay Brown, of the Mississippi Conference. Bro. Brown is in vigorous health with the exception of his throat, and that is steadily improving. We hope that by the close of the present year he will be ready for service.

Under the wise leadership of Rev. A. T. Buck, Sallis circuit is making progress along many lines. The charge has seven schools that do not hibernate. Several members have been received on profession of faith since Conference. The wants of the preacher and his family are carefully looked after.

* * *

Rev. T. K. Faunt LeRoy and family had a royal reception at Opelousas. He has entered upon his work with vigor, and his efforts have thus far been decidedly successful. During the month that has intervened since his pastorate began he has received fifteen persons into the church. The outlook is decidedly encouraging.

MR. EDITOR: My precious mother, Mrs. L. A. Tucker, died this morning in Memphis, Tenn. She was a good woman, and for many years a Christian. Yours,

HESLEP R. TUCKER.

We deeply sympathize with Bro. Tucker in his bereavement. But he sorrows not as those who have no hope. There will be a blissful reunion by and by.

At the Annual Convention of the Woman Suffrage Association, held last week in Washington City, a committee was appointed to appear before the Constitutional Convention now in session in this city, in behalf of the woman suffrage cause. The personelle of the committee is as follows: Miss — Clay, of Kentucky; Mrs. Chapman Catt, of New York, and Miss Belle Kearney, of Mississippi.

Dr. H. W. Featherston, of the Mississippi Conference, spent last Sabbath in the city. He preached in the M. E. Church in the morning and at night delivered an address in Carondelet Street Church in the interest of the Louisiana Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children, the occasion being the anniversary of the society. Rev. A. P. Clay submitted his annual report showing a large amount of work done along the lines marked out by the society.

FROM D. L. MOODY.

East Northfield, Mass., Feb. 12, 1898.

Dear Friend: I want to ask for the prayers of the readers of your journal on behalf of the eight days mission that will be held in the Grand Central Palace, New York City, from March 13 to 20.

It is our intention to hold meetings morning, noon and night. The building is one of the finest for the purpose that I know on this continent. There is seating capacity in the main auditorium for 7000 people and upwards, with two smaller halls on the same floor that can be used for overflow and inquiry meetings. It is easily accessible from all points, by suburban railroads, and street car lines. It is by location the very heart of a population of over three million people.

All the appointments of that kind are favorable, and now if we can call down blessing from Heaven, great good may be done. If New York catches fire, is it too much to hope that the good work may spread from Maine to California?

Will you not urge your readers to pray for these meetings from now on—that God may endue with power all who shall preach and deal with inquirers, and those who shall lead the singing, and that he may incline the hearts of the people to receive the gospel gladly?

Yours in the work,

D. L. Moody.

"READ THIS, PREACHERS," BY REV. G. R. ELLIS.

The appeal from Bro. Ellis, under the above caption, is timely and deserves the practical endorsement of every preacher in the Mississippi Conference. If possible, I want to strengthen what he has said by adding that there are between 700 and 1000 souls in Mississippi City, many of whom would attend the Methodist Church, and some of whom are already members. The court house of Harrison county is located there, and, as a Conference, we should conserve the interests of the church in that community.

Ordinarily an appeal of this character does not gain the attention and result in the assistance that is anticipated by the writer; but in this case I hope Bro. Ellis will realize his expectations.

An acquaintance with Mississippi City as to its needs of a Methodist Church leads me to follow up Bro. Ellis' appeal through the columns of the Advocate. May many be disposed to contribute to this very worthy enterprise! Robt. Selby.

INDIAN MISSION.

Mr. Editor: We need some second hand or first-hand books for the Indian Mission. Anyone furnishing them will greatly oblige. Please send postpaid to Rev. J. N. Tucker, Toles P. O., Kemper county, Miss., any of the following: Webster's or McGuffy's spellers, McGuffy's readers, first to fourth; small geographies, first series; first and second series of physiology; also a sphere to explain to them the world, and song books and Bibles. Will some one please furnish any or all of them? If so, you will help us very much in the work. Send money, as before, to me at Hermanville, Claiborne county, Miss. Yours in the work,

A. D. Miller.

Hermanville, Miss., Feb. 15, 1898.

A minister stands between God and the people. He speaks for God, he prays for the people. He must know both if he would minister aright. He must know God in his greatness, righteousness, and love; he must know his people in their sinfulness of nature, in their actual lives, and in their present needs.—United Presbyterian.

When Queen Victoria ascended the throne more than 41 per cent. of the people of the British Islands could not write their names. The proportion in that condition has now been reduced to 7 per cent.

CHURCH BURNED.

Mr. Editor: Our people at Kelley, Miss., met with a great misfortune on last Wednesday night between nine and ten o'clock. Their neat, new and comfortable little church was burned to ashes. It was evidently set on fire. Nothing saved except seats, organ, books, and lamps. We had no insurance. Our people thought they had exhausted themselves on the other, but will try to rebuild. Yours in Christ,

R. I. Allen.

CHURCH DEDICATION.

Sunday, March 13, 1898, has been fixed for the dedication of the new M. E. Church, South, at Gouldsboro, La. The hour for service will be 3:30 p. m., Rev. John T. Sawyer, D. D., preaching the sermon and Mr. T. O. Adams leading the singing. The Methodists and friends on both sides of the river are cordially invited to attend. The Richard street ferry goes direct to Gouldsboro. Those who prefer to go by way of Algiers or Gretna will be carried to the church on the street cars running between those towns.

Chas. T. Munholland, Pastor.

TO THE PASTORS OF THE SEASHORE DISTRICT.

Dear Brethren: Our beloved Bro. Powell is sick, and has been for some time, and will be for some time to come very likely, and, therefore, requests you to hold your Quarterly Conferences at the appointed time, not forgetting or neglecting to elect delegates to the District Conference, which will come off at this place, probably the first of May. Just as soon as he can he will be with you again. We are anxious for him to recover thoroughly before he goes out on the district again. You all know something of his condition, and, too, how much he dislikes to give up. He is now in bed, but we are glad to announce to you that his symptoms to-day are more favorable than for two or three days past. We hope, brethren, that you and your people will pray earnestly for his speedy recovery.

Yours in Christ,

Isaac L. Peebles.

A NEW CHURCH.

The completed foundations indicate the form, style, and ample accommodations of the new church the Methodists are building corner of Myrtle and Clark streets, Magnolia, Miss. The cornerstone will be placed in proper position in the northeast corner with due and ancient ceremony Wednesday, March 9. Ex-Gov. John M. Stone, grand master, A. F. and A. M., will perform the functions of the Grand Lodge, escorted by the local and neighboring lodges. Bishop Charles B. Galloway will deliver one of his characteristic and inspiring addresses. The occasion is to be a day of memorable privilege and festivity.

OAKLAND COLLEGE.

We call the attention of our readers to the request in another column from the Rev. W. A. Hall, of New Orleans, La., addressed to the friends and alumni of this honored institution, so long an efficient factor in the educational and religious interests of the great Southwest Oglethorpe in Georgia and Oakland in Mississippi, both wrecked by the war, did a noble work for the Southern Church while they lived; and though dead they yet speak. Oakland is more fortunate than her sister in having as a lineal successor Chamberlain-Hunt Academy at Port Gibson, Miss. Mr. Hall is an alumnus of Oakland, and both by devotion to his alma mater and scholarship is well qualified to be her historiographer. We hope he will have all the aid he needs and asks in collecting authentic material for a most desirable history. As the postage or freight on each document will be to the sender a trifle, but the aggregate of all considerable to the collector, we respectfully suggest the propriety of prepayment.—Southwestern Presbyterian.

Mississippi Legislature and Anti-Sunday Freight Train Bill.

Until the governor recommended it in his message, it was not expected that the special session of the Mississippi Legislature, which closed last week, would have an opportunity to make a statute against the running of freight trains on Sunday. The champions of the measure in the Legislature had made no preparations for it and its friends outside had not agitated the question.

When Hon. W. M. Cox, of Prentiss county, introduced the bill it was referred to a committee, and this committee reported on it adversely. Mr. Cox had to leave Jackson on account of sickness in his family, but just before leaving he got a hurried hearing for this bill. Mr. Underwood seconded Mr. Cox, and Mr Weems made a short speech in its favor. All the twelve others who took the floor spoke in opposition. Ridicule was resorted to—a very common weapon always with the enemies of reform. Some of the speakers would praise religion one minute, and in the next talk somewhat lightly of men's efforts in that direction.

In the attempt to laugh the measure down several ridiculous and frivolous amendments were offered, such as: "And that each employee be furnished a valise in which to carry his 'Sunday-go-to-meetin' clothes';" "And that each railroad company be relieved of one-seventh the usual tax;" "And that no railroad man be allowed to kiss his wife on Sunday."

Probably the most ingenious objection raised was by Mr. Houston, of Monroe county, viz: "That railroad employees, if allowed the Sabbath, would use their time in shooting craps and in teaching the youth so to do, and that, therefore, it were better for the morals of the State that they be made to work on Sunday."

Mr. Cox's rejoinder of five minutes just before the voting was very forcible, and it is probable that if he had had an hour in which to have answered in detail the different objections raised, the House would have easily passed the bill and sent it to the Senate. For there were made by those who claimed knowledge of railroad matters some arguments which had weight with those who were not familiar with the subject, and which could have been answered, but were not. Several members were paid railroad attorneys, and these with a show of superior knowledge were opponents.

The vote stood 57 yeas, 60 nays. If the friends of the Sabbath will agitate the matter for the next two years, and inject the question into the next canvass, they can get a law probably more stringent than the one now operating in Georgia. But there must be agitation because this law means a departure from the time-honored custom of conceding to railroad corporations the power to demand of their employees that they give up their God-given right to the Sabbath. Because it is a departure there will always be a conservative element in the Legislature which will vote nay, unless they know that their constituents desire the yea.

Some effort is being made in this direction in Alabama, and the Legislature of that State is being urged to give relief. The principal hindrance to the passage of such a statute in a solitary State, is that it seems to discriminate in favor of roads in adjacent States. Let Alabama have it and the battle in Mississippi is half won.

At Birmingham, in April, the Alabama State Sabbath Association, auxiliary to the National Association, convenes for the work of reform.

Feb. 27.—Temperate in All Things.

(I. Cor. ix. 25.)

1. We are in the Christian race striving for an incorruptible crown. If we would win this crown, we must keep our bodies under control of spiritual law. We have appetites and propensities which are perfect, natural and God-given; yet we must take care that they do not get the mastery over us. Thus:

2. "Be ye angry and sin not." Anger is an attribute of the soul. It is God-given; be as God, "slow to anger." In excess it is vengeance, and, therefore, sin. Anger is not in itself sin; the misuse of it is. (See Mark iii, 4, 5; Ps. vii, 11.)

3. Be temperate in eating and drinking. Hunger, with its concomitant, thirst, is a natural appetite; yet in excess it is gluttony. A glutton is as vile in God's sight as a drunkard. (Phil. iii, 18, 19.)

4. Be temperate in dress. You observe, we are to be temperate in all things. We do harm by indecorous dressing. Beware of following the world; we are following the Nazarene. (1. John ii, 6.) Excess in dress is the same as excess in eating—wrong.

5. Be temperate in speech. We must eschew the habit of exaggeration, so common nowadays. Many people tell lies by using the superlative degree when they ought to use the positive. (Ps. xix, 14.)

6. Be temperate in our love and admiration for another. Even love has its other and terrible extreme—lust. It may pass into idolatry. Only one being may be idolized—God. Neither must we idolize anything whatever, unless it be truth in the inward parts, or holiness of heart. (Ps. li, 6.)

7. If we believe that this lesson includes, also, temperance in the sense of total abstinence, or prohibition, then we must, by all means, vote as we pray. As both the great political parties have licensed, and, therefore, endorsed the sale of intoxicating liquors, we ought on going to the polls to ask our consciences this question, Which is God's side of this matter? In the moral realm a thing is either right or wrong.

8. Finally, "Better is he that ruleth his spirit than he that taketh a city."

(1) Spiritual senses to correspond to the physical senses.

(2) Spiritual hunger is just as essential to the spiritual life as physical hunger is to the physical.

Hearts that Make Them;

Or, Thrifty People and Why They Thrive

BY

SAMUEL SMILES,

Author of Self-Help, Character, Duty, Thrift, Etc.

A beautifully illustrated book of 644 pages, cover stamped in gold, marble edges, size 8vo, red cloth. Probably no books of the same general type were ever written that have so much interested and inspired to worthy action the various classes to whom they were addressed, as have the productions of Samuel Smiles. The marked interest which attaches to Mr. Smiles' productions is chiefly due to his happy use of biography. Readers who tire of extended biographical histories find here groups of the wise and distinguished of earth, each giving testimony to the various principles the author wishes to inculcate. The interest excited by the novel arises solely from our interest in the lives and struggles of men and women. They are interesting biographies; but much more interest should attach to lives actually lived and conquests actually made, provided they are produced with equal care. The home is the epitome of society and government. The application of these principles to every member of the home—the importance of their inculcation in the home, where character is chiefly molded—and the value of such lessons in making every home what it may be and should be, has dictated the title,

"Happy Homes and the Hearts that Make Them."

SWEET STORY OF OLD.

I think when I read that sweet story of old,
When Jesus was here among men,
How he called little children as lambs to his fold,
I should like to have been with them then.

I wish that his hands had been placed on my head,
That his arm had been thrown around me,
That I might have seen his kind look when he said,
"Let the little ones come unto me."

Yet still to his footstool in prayer I may go,
And ask for a share in his love;
And if I this earnestly seek him below,
I shall see him and hear him above;

In that beautiful place he has gone to prepare
For all who are washed and forgiven;
And many dear children are gathering there,
"For of such is the kingdom of heaven."

LIVING IN THE PAST.

There are many people that insist upon living in the past, no matter how bright and pleasant the present is. They talk constantly about the "good old times," although the passing days are crowned with life's brightest sunshine. They only breathe the fragrance of dead flowers, although the sweet perfume of bright roses and snow-white lilies comes upon every breeze. Even the Autumn time of the silent years are brighter than the sun-bright Spring-time of the present.

Duty calls in vain to these old-time dreamers. It may speak in sweet low tones, but its voice is not heeded. Their ears are deaf to the call of the present, as well as to the holy music all about them. They only hear the melody of days gone by when their feet walked in pleasant ways.

Neither will they bury the past sorrow. The dead face moldering beneath the grass and daisies in the old churchyard evidently possesses more charms than the one flushed with health that smiles up to their own. The feet that tripped into the silence of the grave; the arms which dropped the burden and the eyelids that closed so wearily, are more to these than the bright, glad world, with its myriads of dancing feet, busy hands and love-lit eyes. How strange that the dim past with its shadows and echoes should possess more charms than the glad present, touched with living reality and with heaven's own sunlight resting upon it. Yet it is true and the years go onward—the fair bright years, rich with blessing and promise. Nothing could ever have been more bright and beautiful than what is; along with the beautiful years there walks one who watches over every interest of human life, from whose faithful hand blessings fall as thickly as the Autumn leaves.

O dreamer, living in the past, look up. There is brightness and glory all around you. Never was there a day more radiant than this. Never was there a Spring-time brighter with bloom or a Summer-time with fairer days or more starry nights. Never did the birds sing sweeter in the grey dawn or at dew-fall. Never were the whispered words of love dearer or sweeter. Never did God's angels come nearer to humanity. Never did the bright heaven bend more tenderly above the world.

Live no longer in the silent past, but clasp the warm hand nearest to you and a glad new life shall be yours.—Mrs. M. H. Holt, in New York Observer.

CORRECT SPEAKING.

Correct speaking is a science and art which can not be mastered without much careful study and diligent practice. It involves much more than proper pronunciation of words and grammatical construction of sentences. One of the most important things in it is a clear understanding of the exact meaning of words. What idea does a word properly carry or express? The study of words is a duty everyone owes to himself. Neglect of such study will constantly involve him in embarrassment through life. Young people are more given to the fault of improperly using words than older folks, as a rule, because they have had less time in which to study words and observe their effect in conversation. Love of accuracy in speech is the foundation of a proper study of the meaning of words. When boys and girls begin to study the exact force and carrying power of words in order to know precisely how to accurately express their ideas, they will soon acquire a good and flexible vocabulary. On the other hand, a loose and heedless manner in ordinary conversation will always produce confusion in thought and blunders in speech. It is a very serious fault in anyone to rattle words off at the end of a clattering tongue without taking time and pains to know exactly what the words mean to those who hear them.—Youth's Advocate.

SKILL OF DOCTORS TESTED.

Fifteen Years of Suffering.

"I thought I should surely die."

When the stomach begins to fail in its duties, other organs speedily become affected in sympathy, and life is simply a burden almost unbearable. Indigestion and dyspepsia are so common that only the sufferer from these diseases knows the possibilities of misery that inhere in them. A typical example of the sufferings of the victim of indigestion is furnished in the case of John C. Pritchard. He went on for fifteen years, from bad to worse. In spite of doctors he grew constantly weaker, and thought he would die. He got well, however, and thus relates his experience:

"For fifteen years I was a great sufferer from indigestion in its worst forms. I tested the skill of many doctors, but grew worse and worse, until I became so weak I could not walk fifty yards without having to sit down and rest. My stomach, liver, and heart became affected, and I thought I would surely die. I tried Dr. J. C. Ayer's Pills and they helped me right away. I continued their use and am now entirely well. I don't know of anything that will so quickly relieve and cure the terrible sufferings of dyspepsia as Dr. Ayer's Pills."—JOHN C. PRITCHARD, Brodle, Warren Co., N. C.

This case is not extraordinary, either in the severity of the disease or the prompt and perfect cure performed by Dr. Ayer's Pills. Similar results occur in every case where Dr. Ayer's Pills are used. "They helped me right away" is the common expression of those who have used them. Here is another testimony to the truth of this statement:

"I formerly suffered from indigestion and weakness of the stomach, but since I began the use of Dr. J. C. Ayer's Pills, I have the appetite of the farmer's boy. I am 46 years of age, and recommend all who wish to be free from dyspepsia to take one of Dr. Ayer's Pills after dinner, till their digestive organs are in good order."—WM. STEINKE, Grout, Neb.

Dr. Ayer's Pills offer the surest and swiftest relief from constipation and all its attendant ills. They cure dizziness, nausea, heartburn, palpitation, bad breath, coated tongue, nervousness, sleeplessness, biliousness, and a score of other affections that are, after all, only the signs of a more deep rooted disease. You can find more information about Dr. Ayer's Pills, and the diseases they have cured, in Ayer's Curebook, a story of cures told by the cured. This book of 100 pages is sent free, on request, by the J. C. Ayer Co., Lowell, Mass.

GARFIELD'S STRUGGLE.

Garfield was said to be only one of a very few who kept up their literary studies while in Washington. He never did so well but it seemed he could easily do better. He always gave the impression that he had much more power than he used. As Trevelyan said of his Parliamentary hero, Garfield succeeded because all the world could not have kept him in the back-ground, and because once in the front, he played his part with an intrepidity and a commanding ease that were but the outward symptoms of the immense reserve of energy on which it was in his power to draw.

"When I was a freshman in Williams College," said Garfield, "I looked out one night and saw in the window of my only competitor for first place in mathematics a light twinkling a few minutes longer than I was wont to keep mine burning. I then and there determined to invest a little more time in preparation for the next day's recitation. I did so, and passed above my rival. I smile to-day at the old rivalry, but I am thankful for the way my attention was called to the value of a little margin of time, well employed. I have since learned that it is just such a margin, whether of time, or attention, or earnestness, or power, that wins in every battle, great or small."—Exchange.

A DELIGHTED MOTHER.

A mother who was in the habit of asking her children, before they retired at night, what they had done during the day to make others happy, found her young twin daughters silent. One spoke modestly of deeds and dispositions, founded on the golden rule: "Do unto others as you would that they should do unto you." Still those little bright faces were bowed down in silence. The question was repeated: "I can remember nothing good all this day, dear mother; only one of my schoolmates was happy because she had gained the head of the class, and I smiled on her and ran to kiss her; so she said I was good. This is all, dear mother." The other spoke still more timidly: "A little girl, who sat by me on the bench at school, had lost a little brother. I saw that while she studied her lesson she hid her face in her book and wept. I felt sorry, and laid my face on the same book and wept with her. Then she looked up and was comforted, and put her arms around my neck, but I do not know why she said I had done her good." "Come to my arms, my darlings!" said the mother; "to rejoice with those that rejoice, and weep with those that weep, is to obey our blessed Redeemer."—The Lark.

A CLEAN RECORD.

The dying words of John B. Gough, the great apostle of temperance, "Young man, keep your record clean," should be urgently commended to the attention of the lads who are soon to be the active men of the new century. In the whole of his long and useful life Mr. Gough never uttered a more urgent or important message. To heed it or to disregard it means success or failure.

A clean record means a pure life. A pure life commands the favor of God and the admiration of men. And when both God and his neighbors unite in approving a young fellow's course we may be sure that he is going to win his way in this world and lay up for himself imperishable treasures in the better country.

The young man who really means to succeed will plan wisely from the start. He will be no milksop, no effeminate creature, but a lover of all the good things that God has put into this beautiful world for the comfort and happiness of his creatures. He will love the open air and enjoy physical exercise, but he will abhor vice and keep passion and appetite in subjection. He knows there can be no clean record without a clean body, and he acts accordingly.

Such a young man is never rash enough to disregard the wise counsels of his mother or to disobey the rational commands of his father. He is willing to accept the warnings of those wiser than himself, and to avoid follies that have wrecked other lives. Above all, at the very start he accepts Jesus Christ as his Savior, shapes his life by the commandments of God and seeks the constant guidance of the Holy Spirit. —Central Advocate.

DISCONTENTED PEOPLE.

As long as there are thoughtless women there will be discontented wives. As long as there are careless men there will be discontented husbands. Because the rich man wears patent-leather shoes and fine clothes, and indulges in expensive habits and luxurious living, the well-to-do laborer of limited means thinks he must do so too. Because the wives of the rich rustle in silk and diamonds, and pay fifteen dollars to have a dress made, the poor man's wife, unless she is possessed of that very uncommon and most desirable thing, common sense, sighs because she can not do likewise. How great the truth expressed by the apostle when he wrote, "Godliness with contentment is great gain." The most perfect image of a saint to be seen in this world is the happy, contented woman of limited means, cheerfully presiding over her home, diligently working with her own hands, ministering comfort and joy to the members of her own household, and turning her eyes and ears away from the extravagant demands of the senseless, wicked fashions of the times. God has a high seat hard by his throne in heaven for all such.—Christian Herald.

Finish every day, and be done with it. You have done what you could. Some blunders and absurdities no doubt crept in; forget them as soon as you can. To-morrow will be a new day; begin it well and serenely, and with too high a spirit to be cumbered with your old nonsense. This day is all that is good and fair. It is too dear, with its hopes and invitations, to waste a moment on the yesterdays.—Emerson.

Wherever the family altar is allowed to fall into decay there is seen a corresponding decay in true Christian hospitality and consecrated Christian conversation about the dinner table. There is a peculiar blessing which rests upon the household where Christ is a familiar guest.—Rev. F. P. Parkin, Germantown, Pa.

Why will you mention obligations? Love never confers. It doth everything for its own sake.

Hygiene.

HYGIENIC HOURS FOR MINISTERS.

Every minister should retire as soon as possible after nine o'clock at night. In cities it will seldom be possible to do so until a much later hour. In that case those nights when it is possible should be utilized religiously. He should arise between six and seven, take light exercise, slow bathing, and a leisurely breakfast; enter the study at eight, and remain there till half-past twelve or one; dine leisurely, and devote two of the afternoon hours to exercise, half to some form of manual labor with ax, saw, hoe, chest of tools, or gymnastic apparatus, and half to vigorous walking, and three hours to the pastoral work. The evenings should be given to devotional, social and business meetings, to receiving or paying calls, domestic conversation, or reading. This is an ideal scheme most favorable to health, cheerfulness, success and longevity. Funerals in the morning and necessary absences will make inroads upon it, but it should be promptly resumed. In cases of undue exhaustion, it is well once a week to go to bed at six o'clock, and stay there until six the next morning; and if not quite refreshed and hungry by that time, one would do well once a month to remain in bed all the next day, taking a walk and a bath in the evening, and going to bed at the usual hour. The wise will hear and understand this. The rest will fritter away the day, burn the midnight oil, and either disappear from the scene or gravitate toward imbecility prematurely, besides annoying physicians with accounts of hypochondriacal symptoms or more serious attacks.—Christian Advocate.

OME REFLECTIONS ON PASSING TIME.

n article in the New Orleans Christian VOCATE, also one in the Nashville of Jan. 1898, gave rise to a train of thoughts in my nd, which, while I did not follow the line thought pursued by either of the articles, I s led out on the following reflections: hile we enter upon Christmas days, birth- ys, and other anniversaries, marking our ogress in time, with real pleasure, making em a season of joy, as a rule, yet we some- mes pass these memorial way-marks with emn reflections. Perhaps an infant just rn into the world, if it could from this rting-point look forward to what it would ve to bear in life with the distinctness ese things are seen and suffered in after ars, many such a child would rather shrink ck into unconsciousness and so remain for- er.

In starting out upon a new year we know t little of what is to transpire with us. ost of us who have lived through several ecades know things may occur with us arder to be borne than death itself. The ars in which we have buried wives and buried husbands, buried children and other ved ones, know that if it could have saved em to life, we would readily have taken eir place in the grave. Such experiences e so painful we would rather not have lived at year could we thus evade such an ordeal. e who have run the gauntlet lined along ch years know that no earthly hand or wer can deliver us at times from these fast lling strokes. When we have passed into a calm that is wont to lie upon the face of ings beyond we know that we are better for ving borne the infliction in the right way. is clear to us now, as we review the past bore, we had need of grace to sustain us rough; we know that grace did sustain us. e know again, as the mysteries of to-mor- ow unfold, possibly harder trials than any at have yet visited us may burst upon us ith sudden and unwarned force. The ques- on may come up to-day, Have we the grace ow to bear what may come up to-morrow? e may claim now that the vast treasuries of race are open to our access. While we may ink, "Sufficient unto the day is the evil ereof," the fullness of a supply is at our ommand through our Lord Jesus Christ.

Now, beyond my threescore years I have en the seasons of more than half a century ome and go. I know in the course of nature ere will come up but few more new years for me to enter into. Could I go back with my present knowledge and experience, and live my time over again, I would be glad to do so, that I might show to God and to the world a far better life than I am just now about to close. But if I had to begin life and live it over again, repeating the record just as it now stands, with every thought, with every word, and every temper just as they came and went, repeating every action in the same detail as in the original scene, I would not hasten the casket and earth instead.

As I write this one thing comes up in my recollection I would not repeat for any earthly consideration. At the time I felt persuaded I was doing right. As I now recall the incident with my after experience, no power on earth could force me to repeat it; no sort of truth could deter me into an assumed justification of that folly.

We pass these long-fixed finger-boards of life which ever point us onward. There is no return sign-board; we go onward, down hill, whether we will or not. What may transpire before we reach the next great crossing, similar to the one we passed in entering into January, 1898, we have no conception. All that is to make up its history to us is veiled by our want of discernment. As we pass on into these mystic realms the unfolding or uncovering of events brings us to con- tact with new scenes and new experiences. Nothing more fixed than birth now lies be- fore all the living. I know not what I am to enter into, but could I, in some way, read a yet unwritten page of the future that I am to die before the close of 1898, I am sure I should feel none the less cheerful than I do now. I change none of my plans for the future, unless it be some that run into the next year. Rather think I should move on carrying them out just as I am doing at present. J. D. N.

OBITUARIES.

Obituaries of 200 words published free. For all words in excess of that number send one cent per word.

JONES—Miss S. Lula Jonas, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John A. Jonas, died at the home of her father, Utica, Miss., Dec. 29, and was buried in the city cemetery by her pastor, assisted by the ministers of the other churches. The funeral was largely attended.

Miss Lula was a woman of marked character. She was classically educated, having graduated at Whitworth Female College, afterwards taking an A. M. degree at the same institution. Besides a thorough English course, she was proficient in several ancient languages and in music. While a student at Whitworth she was converted and joined the Methodist Church, and, perhaps, from the day of her conversion she never ceased to grow in grace and in the "love and knowledge of God." Her devotion to her God, her church, and her Sunday-school, was perfectly beautiful. This devotion was made real by toil and self-denial. Her faith never wavered. She "knew in whom she had believed, and was persuaded that he was able to keep that which she had committed unto him against that day." Always an inspiration to her pastor, she toiled with him, even beyond her physical strength, to advance the Master's kingdom on earth. In the Sunday-school she was a power. For many years she taught the Bible class, and its members were devoted to her. As a teacher, she had no superior and but few equals. Thoroughly versed in the Bible, intellectual, industrious, willing, painstaking, and, above all, a life of spotless purity, she had power with God and with man. She led souls to Christ. So much was she loved by both the church and the Sunday-school that loving hands beautifully decorated and put into mourning the church on the day of her funeral, while the Sunday-school children covered her bier with flowers. For many years she had been a patient sufferer. Not once during those years of pain and suffering did she murmur.

When she went to the grave a great light went out in earth. Not only can her place never be filled in the church and Sunday-school and her father's home, but in the entire community. She has gone home to God; gone home to rest. Her life so full of trust—one of such pure and perfect confidence—is now in heaven. While the lovely soul is calling us to meet her in the "mansions on high," her good deeds in earth are pointing to them.

JOHN W. CRISLER.

GIEGER—Mrs. Martha L. Gieger, eldest daughter of Richard and Mary Welch, was born in Covington county, Miss., Aug. 9, 1855; was converted and joined the M. E. Church, South, at Bethel, Covington county, Miss., in 1871, and lived near by until death; claimed sanctification in July, 1893, and died Jan. 10, 1898. She was married to M. L. Geiger, Jan 16, 1878. She was the mother of five children—three girls and two boys. One of the boys died in infancy; the other four children are living. She has one grandchild, whom she loved very much. She leaves a father, mother, three brothers and two sisters, a husband and four children, to mourn her loss.

When she was not able to go with the family to prayer meeting, she would go to the selected place of secret prayer and hold sweet communion with the Lord, and would often remark that she had the best prayer meeting at home. She would get so happy she could almost fly away.

On last Christmas, just sixteen days before her death, all of the family but her went to the Christmas tree. She went into a side-room, knelt down, and began thanking God for his goodness and mercies to her, and she got so happy she said she had a perfect camp meeting to herself.

When New Year's Day came round she said to her husband and children, "Let us live nearer to God this year than we ever have before."

She was sick about three months, but not confined to her bed all the time. When she was taken for the last time she only lived six days. She had congestion of the liver. She said she was ready and willing to go.

This writer was acquainted with Sister Geiger for eight years, and was her pastor for four years, and can testify to her godly life. Her house was always a home for the preacher when he was disposed to go there. The church has lost a good member, the husband a good wife, and the children a loving mother. May the relatives of Sister Geiger so live in this life that they may meet her in heaven!

J. H. EVANS.

Williamsburg, Miss.

PARKER—J. A. Parker was born Nov. 18, 1841, and died at his home in Tula, Miss., Nov. 27, 1897. He was married to Miss M. A. Harmon, and he and his young wife joined the M. E. Church, South, the same year that they were married, in which they lived happily together until Bro. Parker was transferred to the church triumphant. He was a good citizen, an honored member of the Board of Supervisors when he died. He was a true Christian and faithful member of the church. He was a steward on the Paris circuit for many years, and was always at his post of duty. At every Quarterly Conference or stewards' meeting during the two years of my stay on this circuit Bro. Parker's face was seen, until the last stewards' meeting, when he was sick. Little did I think then that we were to have Bro. Parker in our councils no more; but so it was to be.

During his illness he was patient and resigned. The end was peaceful. He was a devoted husband, a kind father. May God bless and keep his loved ones, and reunite them in heaven!

E. H. HOOK.

PERRY—Died near Sparta, Miss., little son of J. E. and E. M. Perry, aged one year and five months.

On the morning of Jan. 11, 1898, God called for the sweet little bud to bloom in heaven. The disease, congestion, was laid upon him. His sufferings were so great for a short while. We extend to the bereaved parents our heartfelt sympathy, as I will devotedly pray that God may sustain them by his grace in life and grant them a union in heaven. His AUNT.

LIGHTSEY—Gertrude Lightsey, infant daughter of Bro. and Sister D. M. Lightsey, was born Sept. 10, 1896, and died Nov. 7, 1897. She was buried at Holder Church, in Jasper county, Nov. 8, with appropriate services.

We know not why our Father dealt so with our friends, but we know that Grudy is better off. We would be submissive, and say, Thy will be done, not ours.

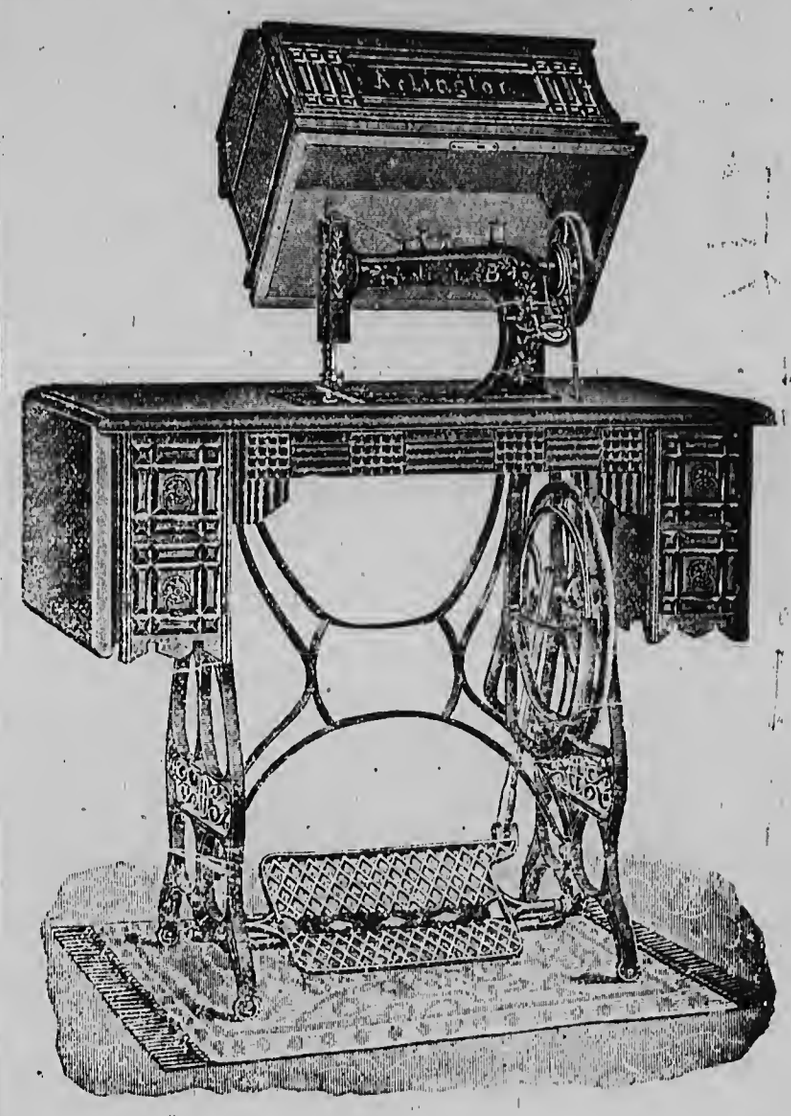
Our Machine Offer.

New Improved High-Arm "Arlington B" Self-Threading Sewing Machine.

A recorded certificate of warranty for 10 years accompanies each machine. The "Arlington B" is complete in every detail, combining all modern and late improvements, such as automatic bobbin winder, self-threading shuttle, self-setting needle, upper spring tension, etc.



The "Arlington B" self-threading sewing machine has a large high arm, its mechanical appearance is perfect, its adjustment is absolute, positive take-up, convenient foot rest, with the best style furniture, either oak or walnut; in addition to which each machine is furnished with the best steel combination attachments free, as follows: One tucker, one foot ruffler, one set of plain hemmers (five different widths up to seven-eighths of an inch), one binder, one shirring plate and one under-braider, packed in a handsome velvet lined case. It is also furnished with one foot hemmer, one screw driver, one wrench, one oil can with oil, one gauge, one package of needles, six bobbins and one instruction book.

THE HEAD is strong and substantial; has large space under the arm for handling bulky goods, is finely japanned and protected by a hard finish. Has so few bearings and friction points that it is easily oiled and kept clean.

NEEDLE BAR is round, with adjustable bearing polished and fitted, insuring great wear, and can run a long time without oiling. It has a slack dip motion, relieving the strain upon the thread when the shuttle is passing through the loop. Using the adjustable take-up, controlling the threads perfectly on all grades of work.

IMPROVED AUTOMATIC BOBBIN WINDER which is so positive and reliable in its action that an imperfectly-wound bobbin is an impossibility. So simple that a child can easily operate it. This valuable attachment renders possible a perfect control of shuttle tension.

SELF-THREADING—The "Arlington B" is self-threading, requiring no change from light to heavy work. Uses double thread, and makes the lock stitch.

THE NEEDLE is the same as used on the New Home machine, and is self-setting both as to height and position with reference to shuttle, with short blade and long shank, insuring great strength; finely polished.

SELF-THREADING SHUTTLE—A perfect steel cylinder shuttle with delicate and perfect tension, open at one end to allow the bobbin to be inserted without displacing any of the parts; runs loose in the shell, without spring centre or point bearings, thus insuring an even tension; can be threaded in the dark, and easily understood.

LOOSE PULLEY for winding the bobbin without running the machine requires no change or adjustment, nor is it necessary to remove the work from the machine.

PARTS SUBJECT TO WEAR are made of the finest steel, case hardened, light and noiseless and are very durable.

The third annual session of the Catholic Winter School, in this city, was inaugurated on Feb. 20.

One-half of the fortune of $80,000 of the late William S. Allgaier, of Reading, Pa., is bequeathed to charitable institutions in that city and Philadelphia.

It has been decided that liquors of all kinds are included in the provisions of the Wisconsin statute forbidding adulterations in food and drink products.

The Virginia House has passed a bill to prohibit the adulteration of flour, and the Senate has voted, in concurrence with the House, in favor of permitting women to be notaries public.

It is stated that there are now in the United States 1187 religious newspapers and periodicals with an average circulation of 12,566 copies—the total aggregate amounting to 14,915,921.

There is on foot in Chicago a movement to establish a hospital for the free treatment of women too poor for medical attendance, and a building of fifty-six rooms has been leased for the purpose.

The craze for royal ancestry has become so violent in Baltimore, owing to the establishment of the new Order of the Crown, that the Peabody Library is overrun with persons wishing to consult its fine collection of the histories of English counties, which contain long genealogical lists.

Rev. Mr. Patten, the paster of the Methodist Church at Atkinson, Me., preaches twice on Sunday, attends two evening meetings every week and teaches the high school at Sebec five days out of seven. To reach his school he has to drive eight miles each way, crossing some of the bleakest hills in New England.

At a committee hearing on a bill now pending in the Ohio Legislature to repeal the law granting limited suffrage to women, it was shown that in Cleveland in 1895, the first year that the law became operative, 5700 women registered and 4900 voted. In 1896, 2200 registered and 1600 voted, and in 1897, 480 registered, but 228 voted.

The Baldwin Company, of Philadelphia, has secured an additional order from the Russian government for fourteen locomotives. These are for use on the regular lines in Europe and Russia, and the locomotives formerly used there will be transferred to the trans-Siberian lines. This makes in all thirty-four locomotives now in course of construction at the works for the Russian government.

After many unsuccessful attempts, Congress has at last passed a bankruptcy bill. That is to say, such a bill has passed both Houses of the National Legislature, with certain differences in form which will have to be settled in conference. The bill provides both for voluntary and involuntary bankruptcy. In the first instance, honest insolvents can secure protection from their creditors, and in the other creditors are guaranteed protection from dishonest debtors.

The government has settled back into a waiting attitude in respect to the terrible marine disaster in Havana harbor. The great shock caused by the news has given way to a calmer and more judicial state of mind, realizing from the events of the day that the court of inquiry is the sole dependence in the search of the cause for the "Maine's" loss. The naval officials are now resigned to await the results of that inquiry by a court named by the Navy Department.

The United States cruiser "Maine" was blown up in the harbor of Havana last week, and is a total wreck. The cause of the explosion is unknown. Divers have been employed to examine the wreck. A committee has been appointed by U. S. Navy Department to inquire into the causes of the explosion. The Navy Department has compiled the following summary showing the total results of the disaster: Total officers and men on board the "Maine," 355; total officers, 26; total men, 329; total officers saved, 24; total men saved, 76; total officers lost, 2; total men lost, 246; total officers injured, none; total men injured, 57; doubtful (men), 7.

FOREIGN.

In July next an exhibition of women's work is to be opened in The Hague. There are 400,000 working women in the Netherlands, and the task of collecting exhibits from their several industries is now in progress.

Six thousand bales of cotton, stored in a warehouse in Genoa, Italy, took fire on Sunday by spontaneous combustion. The loss will amount to about £36,000. The burned cotton comprised 4500 bales from New Orleans, and 1500 bales from Savannah.

Ever since the accession of the present Emperor, Germany has constantly sought to extend her domain. Large districts have been annexed in Africa and other parts of the world, and the latest venture has been in the seizure of a portion of the Chinese province of Shantung.

SOUTH SIDE AND POPLAR SPRING.

The different Leagues of Meridian met in a union at the South Side Church last night. The reports showed an increasing interest in this arm of the work in this city. Some announcements were made concerning the State League Conference, which convenes at Central Church, April 14. Our South Side and Poplar Spring people are blessed with health and otherwise, and propose to do better towards the support of the gospel in the future. I preach at Poplar Spring only once per month. The stewards have adopted there the envelope system, and at the first service the envelopes enclosed almost one-twelfth of their assessment for all purposes.

A great hindrance to the South Side work is that many of the male members have to work almost every Sunday, some as switchmen in the railroad yards, some as car repairers, others on the train crews, so that at every service a good portion of those who ought to hear the gospel are absent. Some could, by special efforts, attend services oftener than they do.

Since my last letter the following amounts have been paid upon the South Side Church debt: Mrs. R. J. Wright, $1; Cash, $1; W. B. Hawkins, $2; W. D. Hawkins, $1; T. P. Coker, $5; Mrs. Jeremiah Smith, $1.

NOTICE.

Preachers' and Laymen's Meeting, Arcadia district, will meet in the Methodist Church in Arcadia, Tuesday morning, March 15, 1898, at 8:30 A. M. All the itinerant and local preachers of the district are earnestly entreated to attend this meeting, and as many stewards as can possibly do so. At least, let one steward from every charge attend.

Dear brethren, I have the interest of the church in the district at heart, and want the brethren to come in the spirit of the gospel of Christ, that we may wait and talk together of the things that are so dear to our Lord. Let us come, praying and expecting the presence and power of the Holy Ghost to lead in thoughtful planning for our year's work.

I trust that the pastors will urge the local preachers, and as many stewards as can do so, to attend, as the meeting will be a great blessing to all that come to it for the purpose of being benefited. I appoint Arcadia as the place for the convenience of the brethren, it being in the center of the district, and because Arcadia wants all the good things she can get, and her hospitality can't be surpassed.

THE MOST ATTRACTIVE ROUTE TO BALTIMORE VIA WASHINGTON CITY.

The Chesapeake and Ohio railway with its connections offers by far the most interesting route to the Conference in Baltimore in May. The route from Louisville is through the Blue Grass region of Kentucky, passing Frankfort, the State Capital, Lexington, and the home of Henry Clay. At Ashland the line from Cincinnati is joined; the route from Cincinnati being along the banks of the beautiful Ohio river for 165 miles. Shortly after entering West Virginia the banks of the Kanawha river are followed, Kanawha Falls is passed and the canons of New River are penetrated. After skirting the picturesque Greenbrier for 50 miles, the heights of the Alleghenies are reached, and next comes the Shenandoah Valley, the Blue Ridge Mountains and Piedmont section, the most beautiful of the Appalachain Valley. After passing through Charlottesville and Gordonsville, the route is through the most memorable battle-fields of the Civil War, among them Cedar Mountain, Culpepper, Rappahannock, Warrenton Junction, Manasses and Bull Run.

For complete description of the C. & O. Route address C. B. Ryan, A. G. P. A., Cincinnati, Ohio.

THE WONDROUS PLAN.

Perhaps you have heard of the method strange,
Of violin makers in distant lands,
Who, by breaking and mending with skillful hands,
Make instruments having a wider range
Than ever was possible for them, so long
As they were now, unshattered, and strong.

Have you ever thought when the heart was sad,
When the days seem dark and the nights unending,
That the broken heart, by the Father's mending,
Was made through sorrow a helper glad,
Whose service should lighten more and more
The weary one's burdens as never before?

Then take this simple lesson to heart
When sorrows crowd, and you can not sing:
To the truth of the Father's goodness cling;
Believe that the sorrow is only a part
Of the wondrous plan that gives through pain
The power to sing more glad refrain.

MISS FRANCES E. WILLARD.

Early Friday, Feb. 19, in Washington, a friend said to me: 'Did you know that Miss Willard is dead? She passed away after midnight this morning." Saturday found me in New York City, where the funeral services were first to be held. I was accompanied by Mrs. S. D. La Tetra, former president of the W. C. T. U. of the District of Columbia. My desire was to see Anna Gordon at once. Our great leader had entered into everlasting life from the Empire Hotel. As soon as possible her remains had been carried to the home of her niece, Mrs. Katherine Willard Baldwin, at 85 Clinton Place.

About dusk, in the face of a driving wind and rain-storm, we found our way to this place. We were invited into a little sitting-room. The door opened gently, and this beautiful woman entered. After a quiet, but cordial greeting, she began to tell us about the going of Miss Willard.

"Her death was very beautiful," she said; "much more beautiful than grandmother's, because she was younger. She looked like a little child—soft and sweet. At the last she was totally unconscious. The departure of her spirit was exceedingly peaceful. Her breath went out in three restful sobs, the last like a strain of music, the most exquisite I ever heard. No one is allowed to see Aunt Frank yet," she continued, "for she is still in the hands of the embalmer. She lies in there," pointing to an adjoining apartment. "Anna Gordon is to sleep in the room with her every night until she is taken away. She goes to the Hotel Empire every day to plan with the general officers of the W. C. T. U."

As we arose to leave her eyes filled with tears, and she exclaimed: "I can't realize that Aunt Frank is dead! It seems so strange!" In the darkness we went to the Empire Hotel to see the W. C. T. U. women who were congregated there. It was a pathetic company of forlorn workers. As they sat or moved about, mournful and helpless, talking in low, awe-stricken tones of the one dearest in all the world to them, who had gone up higher, I thought of that little band of disciples in the long ago who stood desolate, gazing "steadfastly toward heaven" after their departing Lord, and the appearance of the angels in their midst. The Comforter was with us, too, that heart-breaking night, and the same sweet words came sifting into our souls: "Why stand ye gazing up into heaven? This same Jesus which is taken up from you into heaven shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven;" and the blessed promise came with the thought: "Ye shall receive power after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you: and ye shall be witnesses unto me . . . to the uttermost part of the earth."

As the women talked the leading sentiment to which they gave expression was: "We have a common sorrow and a common joy. It is sweet for her to 'enter into rest,' but pitiful for us who stand in the shadow—waiting." Cassie Smith, a National W. C. T. U. evangelist, who was with the "chieftain" unto the end, said: "Miss Willard's last words were, 'How beautiful it is to be with God!' A day or two before she died she recognized Mrs. Hoffman, who stood near, and, looking up at her, she whispered, 'Clara, dear Clara, I have crept in with mother.'"

Sunday afternoon, at half past two, on one of the dreariest days that ever dawned, a great crowd gathered in Broadway Tabernacle to be present at the funeral services of Miss Willard. The pulpit and chancel were profusely decorated with floral offerings. Numerous palms, tall and stately, formed the background. Grouped in and around these, and bordering the platform, were wreaths of white roses and lilies of the valley, green leaves and bunches of violets, in the hearts of which we found such words as, "Crowned," and "Victory." There were pink carnations and pink roses, bright hyacinths, and everywhere white lilies. A funeral march began, and the audience rose involuntarily to their feet. The clear voice of the officiating minister, Rev. Mr. Tipple, was heard saying, "I am the resurrection and the life," as he walked up the aisle accompanied by a number of other ministers. Then came six men bearing on their shoulders a dainty little casket covered with lavender-colored cloth, and bound around the centre with a wide band of white ribbon tied in a bow. Over one corner was thrown a white silk flag dotted with golden stars—a white ribbon banner. The casket was held high, as in triumph.

Walking behind it—almost under it; so near that her bowed head nearly touched it—was Anna Gordon, the loyal companion of Miss Willard for over twenty years. Behind Miss Gordon came Mr. and Mrs. Baldwin; then followed the general officers of the National W. C. T. U. and other leading representatives. The coffin was placed in the chancel in the midst of the flowers, and Mr. Tipple, going into the pulpit, with other ministers and leaders of the W. C. T. U., opened the services by announcing that the first hymn Miss Willard ever heard would be sung. It was, "A charge to keep I have"—that blessed old song by which her father had often lulled her to sleep in her babyhood. Then came Scripture readings and prayers by Bishop Newman and divines representing different denominations, Cassie Smith and Mrs. L. M. N. Stevens, of Maine, formerly vice-president of the National W. C. T. U., now president. Mrs. Mary T. Burt, president of the New York State W. C. T. U., read the hymn, "Blest be the tie that binds;" afterward, "Lead, kindly light," was sung, and finally the last hymn that Miss Willard ever heard on earth, the hymn sung by Anna Gordon in those dying days, "Gently, Lord, O gently lead us," and the services ended.

Not a speech, not a sermon, not a word of laudation, only the blessed messages from God, and simple little prayers and hymns, forming a frame from which the great white life of the beloved one shone forth. It was announced that the congregation would be allowed to look upon the face of the dead. Over 2,000 people filed by that little coffin and gazed for the last time upon the most wonderful woman that this century has given to the world. She looked like a waxen figure, with the color of life in her hands and face. She was robed in a white silken shroud, folding in tiny plaits from neck to feet, and from throat to waist soft white lace was lying. One hand was at her side, the other lay across her breast, clasping a spray of white roses that Lady Henry Somerset had cabled to be placed over her heart. About her feet were scattered white carnations. That was all—pure and sweet and holy as the days of her life had been.

What pen of men or tongue of angels could summon words sufficiently strong or wise or tender in which to describe the work and the personality of this divinely inspired apostle of our Lord! Miss Willard's leadership was incomparable. She had the faculty of drawing more people toward her, and of keeping them bound by the closest bonds of devotion, than any being that ever lived. The secret of it was that she was thoroughly true; true to herself, true to humanity, to which she gave her best; true to her heavenly calling and purpose, true to God. She was an ardent Methodist, always declaring her church affiliations whenever occasion permitted. Miss Willard was a marvelous orator, organizer, author, statesman, Christian.

O radiant spirit, O sinless soul, thou hast won thy greatest victory! Thou hast conquered death and entered upon the eternal verities! Thou hast stood in the presence of the angels, and seen Christ face to face! "How beautiful it is to be with God!"

To-day, Feb. 23, the body will lie in state at the Temple in Chicago, and to-morrow it will be laid away in Rose Hill Cemetery at Evanston, where the great heart lies that gave to humanity the priceless gift of a woman who has achieved immortality, both in this life and in the life to come. "Clara, dear Clara, I have crept in with mother."

BELLE KEARNEY.

PARABLE OF THE SOWER.

BY W. S. HARRISON.

Capernaum was full of strangers. Men looked from their homes and shops wondering why so many noisy people thronged the streets. What was the cause of the excitement? Jesus had returned. The laborious missionary journey was ended. He had gone on foot with his disciples through the towns and villages of Galilee preaching the gospel of the kingdom. Only one of his discourses has been reported with tolerable fullness—the Sermon on the Mount.

It was in the early days of his ministry. Thoughts and miracles bounded forth with spontaneity like a flow of life from the fountain of being. Sermons of startling freshness, miracles of astounding power! The fountain of the great deep of human feeling had been touched. The longing heart-hunger of thousands leaped forth to feed upon his words!

No wonder they followed him out of every place where he had been. He had healed their sick, instructed their ignorance, borne with their manners. They felt the power of living truth, felt the majesty of his character, felt that he was their friend, and they were drawn to him as to a brother.

Peter's house was the center of excitement. The great Preacher, weary and tired, had returned to this, the only place where he had the semblance of a home. The multitudes swarmed about the place, filling the rooms and courts, and talking over the incidents of the last few weeks.

But the Teacher withdrew, and went down to the sea, and sat on a rock. No man loved more to commune with nature. The breezes cooled his anxious brow, the beautiful sheet of water was restful to the eye, the blue sky was benign with helpful ministry, the nerves grew calm, peace pervaded the soul, the mind was refreshed. Young and vigorous, with unbroken health, recuperation with him was rapid. The mind aglow with grand thoughts, and the soul inspired by genius, were quick to respond to the restful music of nature.

The first parable was taking shape. The truth which was to be the perennial source of all the noblest forms of enlightenment was receiving new form. With keen appreciation of the common scenes of nature and of life, he was now to begin the most natural and comprehensive method of teaching. It was the time and place for the sacred parable to be born.

The people were coming. As the news spread in the city that he was on the shore, the eager multitudes in a continuous stream, swelled at intervals into crowds, poured down to the sea. Hungry for his words, they filled all the space about him. When he saw them lining the shore on either side, and crowding on the cliff above, he went into a boat, as he was wont, to teach.

The scene was impressive, such as men everywhere would go far to see. The little fishing-boat was probably in a recess or inlet of the shore, so that the people were conveniently near on either side, and from the water's edge high on the receding bank in front. He was thus in the proper speaking-place of a natural amphitheater. We think it probable that he frequently addressed the people in this place from this unique pulpit.

As he looked up into the vast number of attentive faces he doubtless saw in all the great throng evidences of a strong under-current of religious fervor. Men in such a presence, at such a time, could not be unmoved.

Thousands of eyes looked down on the perfect Man sitting erect and strong. In his upturned face they saw the expression of love and power. The strong lines of purpose converged about the mouth; the clear, bright eyes revealed the lightning flash of genius; the arching brows and high, smooth forehead were charged with mental power. He raised his hand significantly as the signal for beginning a discourse. "Hearken!" "Akonete." Listen, hear! The startling word denoted the importance of what was to follow. It intensified the desire to hear.

"The sower went forth to sow." The natural scenery which is the basis of this parable is that of a field for the cultivation of grain. Such fields in a high state of improvement lay just back of the audience on the plain of Gennesareth, and must have been familiar to everyone present. No doubt many had that day passed just such lands.

The field is illustrative of the mental and moral ground of the world's humanity into which the seed truths of the gospel are sown. The sower is the minister or teacher, including first and foremost the great Teacher then speaking. The fruit produced is that of good character crowned by good works.

"Some seed fell by the wayside"—on the path which, for convenience, lay along the tilled ground. Many who hear "the word of the kingdom" have minds as little prepared to receive it as this path was to receive the seed sown. As the birds naturally pick up the seeds which lie neglected on the wayside, so Satan, working with man's ever-present evil thoughts and evil propensities, so effectually takes away the truth and good impressions that they are not even remembered. Listless, preoccupied minds can not receive the truth to profit.

"And other fell upon stony ground, where it had not much earth." In that country rocks just beneath the soil were not uncommon. When of no great dimension, the man would sow his seeds regardless of their presence.

"Immediately it sprang up because it had no deepness of earth." The shallow soil, being first warmed by the return of Spring, would first become green with the growing crop.

"But when the sun was up it was scorched, and because it had no root it withered away." As the season advanced, and the sun rose higher each day, these spots which promised so much soon became dry, and the plants withered.

Many who hear the Word are analogous to these rocky places. They are shallow minded, volatile, excitable, ready for any new thing. Such people are easily captured by the gospel. They receive it with joy, and without a moment's calculation as to what it should involve of self-denial. The shallow profession utterly fails of fruition. Such souls feed on novelty and try to live on the froth of excitement. They are driven by every wind and drift with every current. The Savior indicated such characters by contrast when asserting the sterling qualities of John the Baptist. He was not "a reed shaken by the wind."

Christian character must be made of the best materials. It is constantly put to the severest tests. Difficulties internal and external must be overcome. Progress must be made, often against the strongest current. The drift of public opinion is by no means reliable for a follower of Christ. He needs all the furnishing of a noble purpose; a self-respecting determination, coupled with a genuine humility. His whole life needs the motive power of a real living faith. Any ship can float with the Gulf Stream, or drive before the trade winds; but for a safe passage across the Atlantic we want the approved "greyhound" of the ocean, with all the modern appliances for speed and safety. Preparation for the Christian life can not be too complete, nor constant watchfulness too vigilant. For a safe voyage across life's tempestuous sea of evil passions, with its hidden currents of sin, we need, most of all, the quickening energies of a new life in the constant presence of the life-giving Spirit. We need the consecrating purpose which, if need be, would rise to the altitude of the martyr's crown.

"Some fell among thorns." In places where the "akanthai" had not been sufficiently cleared away. The roots were still there, and when the seeds sprung up the thorns grew with the crop; grew faster and choked it, and it yielded no fruit. In each case the failure was for want of preparation in the soil. This denotes a lack of preparation in the hearer for which he is himself mainly responsible. If he hears the Word with a preoccupied and listless mind, it is largely to blame. Having received the Word, if he suffers the cares of the world and the deceitfulness of riches to choke the spiritual life, he is himself responsible for the ruin.

"And others fell into good ground." Soil well prepared and full of plant food. "And yielded fruit." This was the purpose of its existence, and constituted its value. So of spiritual life. All appearances, all professions, go for naught, unless there is fruit bearing.

What is the proper fruit of a Christian life? Character. Everything worth counting will be expressed in character. Character is the result of life, and stands for all faith, all benevolence, all experience. What is better than the production of good character? What is the design of faith, of love, of the service of good works, but the production of best character? What is the result of services both to God and man but the making of noblest character? Character is the only thing that will pass the scrutiny of the judgment day. The tuition of faith, the discipline of sorrow, the ennobling power of love, are all expressed at last in the one resultant quality—character. Such character is described in I. Cor. xiii. It is indicated in the beatitudes. It results from obedience to the supreme law of the gospel: "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy strength, and with all thy mind; and thy neighbor as thyself."

"Growing up and increasing." This is the normal condition of plant life, and also of Christian life. Good fruit can be produced only by "growing and increasing." No attainment in grace, no ecstatic experience, no flight of time, can put us beyond the necessity of "growing and increasing." Even in age or wasting disease, "though our outward man is decaying, yet our inward man is renewed day by day."

"And brought forth, some thirtyfold, some sixtyfold, and some a hundredfold." It is interesting to note this indication of productiveness of the soil in the home-land of the Jews. It also affords a lesson of encouragement. The earnest preacher does not labor in vain. Though three classes of hearers are fruitless, and only one comes to perfection, yet that one occupies nearly all the ground. The wastes are incidental and small.

Finally, the manifest duty of the sower, the husbandman, to reduce these wastes to the minimum illustrates the responsibility of every worker in God's heritage. Woe to the trifling servant who abandons his field to stones and briars!

PRESUMPTION.

The very essence of presumption is the supposition that God will make an exception in our individual case, and interrupt the measured and unchangeable march of things in our behalf. In our self-conceit we deem God justifiable in wrenching asunder the economy of the universe to please our whims or to avert the consequences of our rashness. We must co-operate with nature and not break with her. We must walk the beaten paths and not try to fly through the air. To fast through an unnecessarily long period for the sake of some supposed religious good is a presumptuous violation of the laws of health. To travel a score of miles against a freezing norther to fill an appointment when nobody will be there, and just to keep up one's reputation for punctuality, is a foolhardy enterprise. To break the ice and immerse a candidate in the very depth of Winter is to tempt God and take a tremendous risk. To pray for a child sick with typhoid fever, and refuse to utilize the knowledge and the skill of experts, is to play the fool under the guise of religion. To do two men's work instead of one's, to study or toil far into the morning hours instead of sleeping, to make constantly an unnatural draught upon one's vital resources under the plea of a noble enthusiasm, is to wreck the body and plunge prematurely into the grave. To expect knowledge without study is the same offense in the sphere of the intellectual. To parley with the devil and to dally with sin is wicked presumption along another line. Christ refused to leap from the pinnacle of the temple, and defy God and the laws of God; but we, hearkening to the voice of the subtle charmer, unwarrantably intrude into imminent peril and the gaping jaws of the grave. We must swim with and not against the tide of natural law.—Texas Advocate.

The curfew tolls the knell of passing hoodlumism. Over three hundred towns and cities, chiefly in the Middle West, have passed the curfew ordinance, requiring children under fifteen, without leave of absence, to be at home by eight o'clock in Winter and nine o'clock in Summer. This restoration of an old time custom has diminished youthful arrests seventy-five per cent. in some cities, and fully fifty per cent. in others.—Christian Register.

GOD'S WAYS.

BY T. T. LYNCH.

Oft when of God we ask
For fuller, happier life,
He sets us some new task
Involving care and strife;
Is this the boon for which we sought?
Has prayer new trouble on us brought?

This is indeed the boon,
Tho strange to us it seems;
We pierce the rock, and soon
The blessing on us streams;
For when we are the most athirst
From the clear waters on us burst.

We toil as in a field,
Wherein, to us unknown
A treasure lies concealed,
Which may be all our own:
And shall we of the toil complain
That speedily will bring such gain?

We dig the wells of life,
And God the water gives;
We win our way by strife,
Then he within us lives;
And only war could make us meet
For peace so sacred and so sweet.

LETTER FROM "GILDEROY."

The Minutes of the last session of the North Mississippi Conference at hand. My eye fell first on the Conference roll, and I fell to musing. The ante-bellum preachers are getting to be few and far between. The war will soon be a long ways behind us. In the course of time it will be a memory, thought of only as a matter of history. The men and women who lived before and during the war will all soon be gone.

Rev. S. B. Carson entered the itinerancy in 1840. I was then only about eighteen months old. He was my pastor when I was twelve or fourteen years of age. He walked with me all over the field once a month, and advised me what work to do and how to do it. I was then head man on mother's little farm.

Rev. J. W. Bates—"Uncle Jim"—entered in 1842. He is a rare man. God never made but one by that pattern. He has been pastor, missionary, railroad conductor, farmer, and stock claim adjuster for the railroad.

Rev. Joseph Johnson, faithful, true man of God, entered in 1846; Rev. J. M. Hampton in 1847. He is well known in all the central portion of this Conference.

Rev. J. D. Newsom came in in 1848. He has been as faithful as men ever get to be in this life. By request of the Conference he is to preach a semi-centennial sermon at our next session.

Rev. A. P. Sago began in 1853. He has done good work, and has been a builder of churches. He is yet vigorous and efficient.

Rev. T. C. Wier, A. M. and M. D., started to make a doctor of himself, but God called him to preach, and he began in 1854. His father, Rev. Wm. Wier, baptized my wife when she was an infant. If Dr. Wier had been a physician, he would have been loved like St. Luke.

Revs. W. S. Harrison, K A Jones, A. Kendall and J. B. Harris began in 1855. Bro. Kendall, perhaps, had been a preacher in England seven years before this. This was the year he entered the itinerancy in our church.

Revs. W. T. J. Sullivan, D. D.; J. D. Cameron, D. D., and J. B. Stone began in 1856. In 1860 W. T. J. Sullivan offered himself for missionary work in Japan, and was getting ready to go, but the war came on and stopped everything.

Rev. T. L. Foster came in in 1857. After the war he went to Illinois and spent some years there. This scribe began in November, 1858—forty years ago next November.

Revs. S. M. Thames and J. W. Boswell, D. D., entered on trial in 1859. My, my, how time flies!

Revs. G. W. Bachman and J. W. Poston began in 1860.

This is the list of the before-the-war preachers now in our Conference—nineteen in all. This list will grow shorter and shorter as the years go by, and pretty soon the last one will be gone. I don't know exactly why, but I lingered on this roll till bed-time, and made me out a list of those who began before the war, and lingered long on each name. I have known all these men since 1870, and some of them since along in the fifties. I have been on terms of the tenderest intimacy with some of them—Sage, Newsom, Foster, Sullivan, Wier, Harrison, Kendall, Stone, Thames, Boswell, and Bachman. I have never been thrown much in company with the others of this list. Kendall, Thames, Sullivan, Stone, have been my presiding elders. We are thinning out. Some day only two will be left, and then one of them will go. We will all come together in the city of our God. The last war will be over then. The victory will be won, and then we will have a palm and a crown.

I have not gotten beyond the Conference roll in our Minutes yet.

GILDEROY.

OUR DOMESTIC MISSIONS.

I am constrained to write upon this topic because of its growing importance. What I shall say shall refer to this work within the bounds of the North Mississippi Conference, and is not designed to reflect upon anyone—neither the Board of Missions, nor the men who are serving in these uninviting fields.

FIRST—THE FIELD.

There are vast stretches of territory in what is known as the interior of our Conference that are not as strong to-day, morally, as they were some years ago. The exodus to the West, and the constant moving from the country to the towns and villages, have taken away some of the best men and women, and in some localities schools and churches are suffering for lack of support. The United States revenue collector informs me that in a great many communities there are lawless men who run wild-cat stills and peddle out whisky to those who drink, and the good people seem to be powerless to stop the evil. He says that after an experience of nearly four years in this service, he is convinced that this particular form of lawlessness is largely on the increase. Many of our best people who live in these sin-cursed communities do not want to raise their children under such influences, and they sell their homes at a great sacrifice and move to town or to Texas, and thus the country is robbed of its moral strength. In a few communities there may be some religious progress, but I fear, from all the information I can gather, that the cause of an ascended Lord is weaker there than it was some years ago.

May it not also be true that in some communities there has been no exodus to town or to Texas, and yet the cause of education and the church has made no substantial improvement for years? The school-houses have no comforts, and the children barely make any progress from one short session to another. The churches, as a rule, have but little comfort in the Winter—an old stove, broken windows, no ceiling overhead, benches and floor dusty, and everything dreary and desolate as a deserted village. There are many noble people in those localities, but they are lacking in opportunity and breadth of view necessary to develop good citizens and intelligent Christians. But it should be remembered as an encouragement to every Methodist, that these sections have given us some of the best preachers and truest laymen and women we have. For this very reason, therefore, we must cultivate this territory, and save it to the church.

SECOND—THE POLICY.

I shall not discuss the policy of our present Board respecting its management of this home mission field further than to say two things: First, I sympathize with its desire to supplement the very meagre allowances which these brethren who serve these difficult fields receive; and, second, that I believe the time has come to adopt another policy. I do not pretend to say that my suggestions are more valuable than the combined wisdom of the members of our Conference Board of Missions, but I do believe that a different policy should be adopted. The present policy of sending certain brethren—in many instances brethren who can not be sent to stronger works—to these hard fields, and supplementing their meagre salaries with a donation of from $50 to $150, has not brought us satisfactory results; hence I urge, for the sake of securing that variety which is said to be the spice of life, if nothing more, that we pursue some other plan for a few years. Let us double our assessment for domestic missions, and send some of our strongest men to these fields, and maintain them for a period of years, and let the presiding elders give Saturday and Sunday to these weak places when he holds their quarterly meetings, and Sunday nights or week-day nights to the towns, and we will see a change in a few years. Doubtless the brethren who are now serving these hard missions are doing the best they can. If they had the means to purchase and circulate a cheap religious literature over their charges, and could equip a good school at some suitable point in each charge, the problem would begin to solve itself.

We have already been charged with caring for the towns and neglecting the country, and there is some truth in the charge. I know that we feel that the towns are the centers of influence and power, but we must never forget that our God has a watchful care over the country boy and girl who have not learned all the refined arts of modern society. There is something morally healthful in country air, and in the soil on a country farm, and we must help the parents of the country to train up and save their boys, and make men of them. When they become men and should want to move to town, they will become the salt to save it. The fact is, the salvation of our towns depends upon the stream of pure blood from the country. In North Mississippi we have no great cities whose crowded tenement houses and troughs of the "unemployed" present vexing questions to us, but we have a large country area whose people demand better service at our hands.

T. W. LEWIS.

A PLEA.

An idea has been suggested which will now be presented to the public. This idea is the establishment of a home for superannuated preachers and the widows and orphans of deceased ministers. The orphans of the State at large have an orphanage already well established under the control of the Methodist Conferences, and under the management of our brother, M. L. Burton. The grounds attached to the institution are spacious, and admit of enlargement of the present building to increased capacity; or there is ample room for the erection of a separate domicile, where there will be "rest for the weary."

It is suggested that a home be established in connection with and under the control of the managers of the Mississippi Orphans' Home, for those noble old veterans who bore the heat and burden of the pioneer days of Methodism, and who, now incapacitated through the hardships of the lives thus led for further active service in the rank and file, are like ancient war-worn steeds, turned out on the commons of public charity to eke out a miserable subsistence for the few remaining years that may be allotted to them.

If this asylum of rest is prepared for them, surrounded by childhood and youth, by refinement and culture, by ease and comfort, they may contemplate with serenity the approaching end of a long and profitable existence spent in the service of the Divine Master. Imagine then, these kindly, genial gentlemen of the old school, who were reared in the halcyon days of Southern chivalry, and under the "old regime" of love, many of them fathers and grandfathers. Their dormant affection will be aroused, and delight in expending itself on the lonely and loving little ones, providentially bereft of their parents. There is a kindred touch between youth and age, and in the society of these little ones, whom Jesus blessed, "their youth will be renewed like the eagle's."

There is but a meagre pittance allowed by the already overtasked Conference Board for the support of the widows and orphans of those preachers who have already been called to their reward. The proceeds of the Methodist Publishing House constitute the bulk of this fund, altogether insufficient for the needs of the recipients, leaving out of the question those luxuries which are so grateful to the declining years of all womanhood, particularly so, it may be imagined, to the bereft companion of an itinerant. Few have been her comforts. Ever in her pathway stood the huge phantom of unrest, whose unwelcome shibboleth, always sounding in her ears, precluded the possibility of a permanent abode. Many olive branches crowned her brow, infantile prattle, the chorus of weeping and laughter, resounding even through her slumbers, caused her ofttimes to start in her dreams. The "curse of the wandering foot," which fell upon her when she united her destiny to that of an itinerant preacher, constantly drove her "from pillar to post," until death released him and left her to maintain her numerous progeny and bear her sorrows alone. Too often destitution has followed on the heels of bereavement, and the wail of hunger, the cry for "bread" has been the iron that pierced her soul.

Too many times she would have gladly resigned "this pleasing, anxious being" had not the sustaining faith, the Christian fortitude, learned from him who followed in the footsteps of "the Man of Sorrows," sustained her under affliction, and through the darkest hours of her trial.

O Methodists of Mississippi, does not the sound of their weeping smite your ears? Does not the voice of Rachel, weeping for the sorrows of her children, penetrate to your hearts, through the comfort and luxury by which you are surrounded? Shall the descendants of these noble pioneers of Methodism, who blazed its pathway through the trackless forests of the South, fording her swollen streams and pillowing his head at night on the bosom of Mother Earth, with no covering other than the star-studded canopy of heaven: shall his children and grandchildren be allowed to grow up in penury and ignorance?

Vast sums are annually spent in self-indulgence by those who profess to follow in the "footsteps of Jesus," while a scant charity doles out a miserable pittance which serves to prolong the sufferings, but does not alleviate the condition of these widows and orphans.

Provide for these widows a home where, secure from the consideration of ways and means, their declining years may be spent in contemplation of that better land which is "across the river, under the shadow of the trees." Open wide the doors of a house of refuge for these children of worthy sires; give them advantages of Christian education and example; provide for all their temporal wants, so that they may realize the fruition of David's jubilant cry: "I have been young, but now am old; yet have I not seen the righteous forsaken, nor his seed begging bread."

To do this it is proposed to open up a subscription list in the columns of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE (with the kind editor's permission, of course), and it is hoped with his concurrence. When a sufficient sum has been subscribed to undertake the work, then call for the money.

Other greater works than this have been helped on in this way; notably the payment of the missionary debt of the Parent Board.

When the object is well presented to the people, when the enterprise is fairly launched, but needs further help, perhaps some of our noble philanthropic men, whose hearts and purses are ever open to every good cause (such men as Peter James and Major Millsaps, of whom Mississippi and all true Methodists may justly be proud), will come forward, and out of the abundance with which God has blessed their honest efforts give enough to establish it.

An appeal is like a nail; it is necessary to clinch it in order to make it more effective. To do this the writer's name and amount subscribed will be forthcoming whenever the list is opened, headed by some responsible name, recognized as a leader in good works.

A VALUABLE BOOK.

CONFERENCE RIGHTS; or, Governing Principles of the M. E. Church, South, as Found in the History, Legislation and Administration of the Church. With Suggestions as to Hurtful Tendencies, Inherent Defects, and Needed Changes. By T. A. Kerley. Edited by Jno. J. Tigert, LL.D., Book Editor, M. E. Church, South. Nashville, Tenn.: Publishing House M. E. Church, South. Barbee & Smith, agents. 1898. Price, $1.50.

This book is an invaluable contribution to Methodist literature, and fills a gap in our ecclesiastical-legal writings which has long needed filling. It is a timely production. The various questions are ably and fairly presented and discussed, and while everyone may not agree with Bro. Kerley either in his line of argument or in his conclusions, the book may be read with profit by every itinerant and by every intelligent layman. One may not agree with all the changes suggested by Bro. Kerley, yet there are some changes in our economy or polity which ought to be made as suggested by him and from time to time suggested by others. Our church has grown beyond the anticipations of "the fathers," and some bands need just a little loosening, and some things need to be lengthened, and others to be more broadly defined or clearly defined.

Many of us have begun to think that all rights are centered in the General Conference or in the Board of Bishops, and the Annual Conferences are possessed of only certain or uncertain privileges or favors, as they may from time to time be conferred by those in authority. Bro. Kerley clears away errors not a few, and exposes some abuses which ought to be abolished. His excerpts from the proceedings in the Kelley-Hargrove case confirms the opinion heretofore expressed that all the proceedings in that case before the Committee on Episcopacy of the General Conference of 1894 ought to be published in book form, and the church at large be put in possession of all the facts preceding and accompanying that noted Report No. 5 of said committee. The excerpts showed me why a certain connectional officer only "read at" Bro. Kerley's book, and also why the protest against Report No. 5 was never published in the daily or the weekly Nashville Christian Advocate. A full report would doubtless reveal how a certain member of that Committee on Episcopacy "worked the rabbit foot," as a prominent delegate (clerical) from one of the Arkansas Conferences described the tactics resorted to in order to bring forth that Report No. 5. A general understanding of the facts in that case might prevent the election of some very undesirable aspirants for episcopal honors.

Every delegate to the next General Conference ought to have a copy of Bro. Kerley's book, and every true friend of our church ought to possess and to read this helpful volume. Its tendency is wholesome, and, if widely circulated, it will check some growing evils in our Zion.

THE COST OF BEING A MEMBER OF THE W. F. M. S.: AND DOES IT PAY?

People naturally want to know results from their investments. Would that they were as careful to count the cost of worldly pleasures and needless luxuries as they are the gifts pertaining to the church and establishment of Christ's kingdom upon earth. Some say it costs too much to be a member of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society. Let's see. Ten cents per month constitutes a member; not one dollar as formerly, as only the better class could afford the dollar in advance, while the poor paid $1.20. Those who are only able to pay dues should not feel that this is not worth while. The dues are the "bone and sinew" of our work, and is most important. This money goes into the general treasury, and it is used for the expense of our schools and salaries of our missionaries. You have but to look over the statistics to see what has been accomplished up to this, the twentieth anniversary of our work; then decide if the investments pay. Then we ask (do not demand) twenty five cents per member for the contingent fund. This money goes into our Conference treasury. The greater part is used to pay our own Conference officers. Our district secretaries' expenses are from $2.50 to $6 and $8 per month. Not many of them, if any, could afford this expense. They gladly give their time. This is only for correspondence and traveling expenses. All officers are required to attend the annual meetings. No provision is made by auxiliaries, except for delegates; hence the need for the contingent fund, and we trust it will be more promptly paid, as it doesn't always meet demands. Then five cents per member is asked for publication. Last year it cost $50 to print 1,000 copies of our Minutes. This fund has been so neglected that generally a supplement is taken from the contingent fund and advertisements solicited to defray the expense. Fifty cents per year is asked for the Woman's Missionary Advocate. You are not a full member without taking it. We can not become interested in that which we know little or nothing about. The motto on the January number is indeed true, "Know and you will feel, you will pray, you will give."

For several years special pledges have been made by the auxiliaries, because so many members didn't pay full amount of dues. This fund didn't by any means meet the necessities of our work. Doubtless half of our missionaries would have been called home (though the number is far too small now) had not this idea originated in the heart of some earnest, anxious worker. Still these extra pledges did not enable our Board to equip our hospital, employ Bible women and extend the work, so the plan of "Specials" was adopted, and has wrought wonders. In '95-'96 our Conference paid $2,890.15; in '96-'97, $4,411.88, largely due to specials. So many perpetuate the memory of precious children God has taken to heaven by adopting a heathen child and have it educated, and the majority who remain one year or longer in our schools become Christians and go out as witnesses for Christ among their own people. Only $40 per year is required to keep them in school. Our hospital at Sonchow is now supplied with iron bedsteads, by special gifts of $16. North Mississippi has a number of scholarships, day schools, and Bible women. These women are only paid $60 per year, and give their entire time to house-to-house visiting, reading, and teaching God's Word. They are being wonderfully blessed in their work, both in China and Mexico.

Again, as to the cost. We would have you know that it does not take a dollar to send a dollar to China. A dollar is worth more than a dollar when it gets there. They use Mexican currency: the silver standard. Exchange varies. A gold dollar often brings $1.50; silver generally brings a premium, often eighteen cents on the dollar.

Selections.

I do not know of any single Christian to-day doing any work—any real work—who is not a diligent student of his Bible, who does not read the Bible as some of these business men read the fluctuations of the market. I do not know one of them who does not make the personal culture of the spirit as great a business in life as yonder athlete makes the training of the body in preparation for the race. I do not know one of them that does not cultivate an eager, earnest interest in the Christian fellowship, Christian testimony, and Christian service, bestowing upon them as much toil, and time, and thought as the world bestows upon its society engagements and its constant round of pleasures. The great difference between the Christian and the worldling is, not that one works and the other does not, but that the worldling toils and moils and dies, and the Christian toils and moils and lives for evermore.—Rev. R. F. Horton.

He lives longest who lives noblest. Life is not measured by heart-beats, but by good deeds. We do not doubt that many persons of less than threescore and ten have really had a richer and fuller existence than even Methuselah ever enjoyed. It is possible to crowd an age into a lifetime. Among the early dead there are multitudes who fulfilled their mission on the earth as truly as if they lingered on to wrinkles and gray hairs. Let us be mindful that the night cometh when no man can work, and diligently strive to do our duty while it is called to day.—Christian Advocate (Nashville).

It is said that John Wesley was once walking with a brother, who related to him his troubles, saying he did not know what he should do. They were at that moment passing a stone fence to a meadow, over which a cow was looking. "Do you know," asked Wesley, "why the cow looks over that wall?" "No," replied the one in trouble. "I will tell you," said Wesley; "because she can not look through it. And that is what you must do with your troubles—look over and above them."—Churchman.

To have the advantage of an enemy, and yet abstain from using it, is to display true Christian magnanimity.

The loads that crush men to earth are not the ones that God places on their backs.

YOUR MOTIVES.

Don't be too sure about your motives. They are very agile, cunning, deceptive. You hide, protect, defend, and shelter them. You seek alliances for them. You dress them up in pretty clothes. Your blood is interested for them. It is an old story how blind parents are to the fault of their own children. Sometimes when everybody else can see that your child is a mean little scamp, you are sure he is a lovely little angel. Just so it is with your motives. Don't be too sure about them.

Don't talk too much about your motives. It's a delicate business, this matter of your motives, and the fact is people are a great deal better satisfied with the judgment they form by watching your motives in action, than with anything you may say about them, or claim for them. It does no good at all for you to proclaim: "Now, my motive in this is perfectly noble and high. I am sticking this knife into my brother from pure love to him and the cause of Christ." Before God, I am actuated by pure love, and my wounds are the faithful wounds of a friend. My anger is indignation for the Lord of hosts. I call God to witness that I am upright, true, fair, loving, brotherly, acting in the spirit of Christ." You might as well save your breath. No wise man will pay the slightest attention to all these declarations. In fact, this kind of thing is disgusting to all right-minded men. It makes, and rightly makes, a bad impression. Intense zeal in a declaration of a good motive raises suspicion of a bad one. The fact that you feel a necessity of professing a high and good motive is indication that you perceive a bad or doubtful look about the act it produces. Do what you do in demonstration of the spirit of Christ. That will go a great deal farther than any loud professions.—Christian Guide.

HOW TO GET TEACHERS.
Write to J. M. Dewberry, Manager of "The School Agency," Birmingham, Ala., stating kind of teacher desired and the pay. He recommends efficient teachers to Schools, Colleges and Families free of charge throughout the South and Southwest. Sells and rents school property. Efficient teachers desiring information should write for circulars.

Christ, laid hold of faith in to-day, will sustain us in the overflowing of the waters to-morrow. Though now, in the full flush of youth and health and strength, every nerve instinct with intense vitality, we can not look at death without pain and shuddering, let us not fear. Dying grace will come with dying. God, who hath so loved us, will not leave us then. A father does not caress his child through the long Summer day to abandon him at nightfall. Darkness may veil him from the little one's sight, or slumber lull him to temporary forgetfulness, but his loving-kindness wraps his child about, in the still hours, and a fatherly presence is in the house for good.—Gail Hamilton.

On a certain occasion George Fox, the founder of the Society of Friends, said: "Wherefore, I let the thing rest, and went on with my work." There is the secret of usefulness and happiness. Many things in regard to which we are troubled are purely speculative. If we knew them, they would only gratify our curiosity. Let these problems rest. Life is work—service. Life is pre-eminently a practical affair. Devotion to God's duty and mission brings success. Work is the best cure for "the blues." Cheerful activity drains off melancholy as a pure stream flowing through a marsh floats off the ooze and scum. Let it rest, and go on with your work.—Texas Advocate.

Education is the knowledge of how to use the whole of one's self. Men are often like knives with many blades; they know how to open one and only one; all the rest are buried in the handle, and they are no better than they would have been if they had been made with but one blade. Many men use but one or two faculties out of the score with which they are endowed. A man is educated who knows how to make a tool out of every faculty—how to open it, how to keep it sharp, and how to apply it to all practical purposes.—Beecher.

Lord Jesus, who came from heaven to earth to call us, wean us from earth that we may ascend to Thee in heaven. Thou hast left heaven for love of us; forbid it that we should not leave anything or everything for love of Thee. Thou sinnest earnest into contact with sin for us; enable us for love of Thee to repent and sin no more. Amen.—Phillips Brooks.

PREAMBLE.

Realizing that in the opinion of many, we need a change in church polity, and fearing that changes radical and more far-reaching than would be mutually beneficial might be inaugurated, and perhaps even effected; therefore, considering the usefulness of the layman to our system in working out its success, and believing that since the layman has had equal rights and privileges in the law-making body of the church, he should also have part in the most vital of all its interests; the most vital to himself, as well as to the ministry; and believing that the layman has not proven himself unequal to the task that has been committed to him; neither that we fear that they will fail the church in years to come, nor that they—the men who have given to support the institutions and labored to further the cause of Methodism are either disqualified or incapacitated for the positions of honor and trust which the church has to bestow—and considering the fact that the episcopacy is always willing to receive all possible light on so delicate a subject as the arranging and stationing of his men; and that we have laymen in each presiding elder's district whose intercourse with the Bishop and council would be mutually helpful; and, whereas, the theory of admitting laymen into the cabinet meetings of an Annual Conference is in perfect harmony with our present itinerant system; therefore, be it

Resolved, That we, the Louisiana Annual Conference, memorialize the General Conference, at its next session, in May, 1898, to take measures for the introduction of one layman from each presiding elder's district, who, with each presiding elder, shall constitute an advisory board to meet with the episcopacy, in that capacity, in his deliberations, when arranging the works, and stationing the ministry of the Annual Conference.

Resolved, That the delegates from this Conference be requested to urge the matter before that body.

(Signed) WM. B. VAN VALKENBURGH,
J. S. SANDERS.

Crowley, La., Jan. 8, 1898.

"These delegates are supposed to be elected, one from each district, by the District Conference, to represent, each the needs of his own district, at the Annual Conference next preceding his election, he thus having the time to thoroughly acquaint himself with the needs of the district by the time the Annual Conference convenes, besides giving to the membership a more direct representation before the appointing power of the church, he—this delegate—in his official capacity being also expected to receive petitions, protests, or other such papers as the membership of the church may wish to present before the Bishop's cabinet."

Gather off your beech trees, in the budding Spring days, a little brown shell, in which lies tender green leafage, and if you will carefully strip it, you will find, packed in a compass that might almost go through the eye of a needle, the whole of that which afterwards in the sunshine is to spread and grow is the yellow-green foliage which delights and freshens the eye. So in Christ—to be unfolded through slow generations, in accordance with human experience and wants, is all that men can know or need know concerning God and themselves, and the relations of both—their duties, their hopes, their fears, and their love.—A. Maclaren.

FROM THE WORK.

SHAW, MISS.

From all I can learn more than usual prosperity is attending the labors of the preachers in the Delta. Our indefatigable presiding elder, J. W. Dorman, is winding up his first round quite satisfactorily. The district is more hopeful than it was four weeks ago. Another overflow seemed inevitable, but that has passed, and both preachers and people seem to have a new lease on life.

Cleveland is faring well under the administration of Dorsey. Pittman and Shelby are mutually pleased. Murrah at Clarksdale is getting material together for the new church. Cunningham is working like a Trojan to build a church at Leland. It is the only town of any size in the Greenville district where we have no church. Crowe is renewing his youth at Arcola and Hollandale. Bro. Thomas is keeping up the fine record made last year. As to the other brethren, this deponent knoweth not.

The [illegible] is in fairly good shape. In a few weeks we will put in new pews; some new lights have already been added, and the parsonage has been made a thing of beauty. A little paper and paint will bring about a great change in the appearance of a home. Our Sunday-school has recently purchased a library of fifty volumes. This is a small beginning, but it is a beginning.

We are well into our third year at this place. God has given us assurance of his favor, and we are looking forward to the day of harvesting with joyous hearts.

Before I close allow me to say a word in reference to the work of Bro. Bachman, who has recently made a visit to the southern part of our district. He is doing a fine work, and is now emphasizing the Sunday-school library. It will be to the interest of all Sunday-schools which have no libraries to correspond with Bro. Bachman on this matter. The Sunday-school Board offers to pay one-third of the cost of libraries up to the amount of $15, as an inducement to those schools which have no library. So by getting the library now, the books can be had for less than thirty per cent. of their retail price. So now a good library of fifty volumes, consisting of books selected by competent judges and suited to all classes, is within the reach of our smallest schools. If you have not the money on hand to pay for them, get several young people to advance a dollar each, which they will gladly do, and refund the money as it is raised by the school. A plan like this will work most anywhere. Let us go at this work in earnest, and God only knows how far-reaching it may be!

E. S. LEWIS.

Rev. C. F. Emery, Biloxi, Miss., Feb. 22, 1898: "The pastor, on his return to this charge, was most kindly received by his people. Recently a large number of friends visited the parsonage, bringing with them all sorts of good things, cash included, and from 3 to 10 P. M. the pastor and his wife held an informal levee. Everybody had a merry time, and the occasion was such an enjoyable one that the recipients sincerely wish for 'many happy returns.' Notwithstanding the fact that there are fewer visitors to Biloxi than last year at this season, our congregations have been usually large. Recently there were counted over fifty communicants at the Lord's Supper. The Sunday-school, under the zealous and efficient management of Rev. D. L. Mitchel, has taken on new life within the past few weeks, and the attendance has increased nearly fifty per cent. We have had four accessions on profession of faith, and six by certificate. On page 31 of the Conference Minutes, Biloxi Church is charged with a decrease of 47 members. This is misleading. The loss of 77 members, as reported by me at Conference, was accompanied by a note explaining that this was due to making Biloxi a station, the said 77 members belonging to the Ocean Springs Church. As a matter of fact, last year we reported 30 accessions, the same being a net increase in the membership of about thirty per cent. In spite of Sunday excursions, Sabbath desecration, and the general demoralization that characterizes everywhere communities that are under the domination of Roman Catholicism, Protestantism is gaining ground here, and the work of the Master is prospering. It is with profound regret that we chronicle the absence from our first Quarterly Conference, held on Feb. 20, of our beloved presiding elder, Rev. C. A. Powell, who is sick. He has been in bad health for some time, and the prayers of his brethren and of all good people everywhere are for his speedy restoration to health. I feel safe in saying that the preachers of the Seashore district will gladly do all in their power to relieve him, as far as possible, from the duties of his office, in order that he may have opportunity for complete rest and recovery."

Rev. Robt. L. Phillips, P. C., Waynesboro, Miss., Feb. 21, 1898: "On Saturday, Feb. 19, Dr. C. G. Andrews, our new presiding elder, held the first Quarterly Conference of Winchester circuit. It being a rainy day, some of the stewards were absent, but reports were encouraging. The spiritual life of many of our people was manifested by daily Bible reading, family altars, mid-Winter prayer meetings, Sunday-schools, etc. Epworth Leagues, Sunday-schools and missionary societies are being organized. We had an old-fashioned quarterly meeting, preceded by prayer and fasting, Friday. Results: Our presiding elder preached four moving sermons for us, the altar being crowded with penitents several times. It was a genuine revival. Saints were edified and made stronger for the Master's work. God grant us a continual revival that will move our hearts, hands, feet and pocket-books and reservedly to his service. Our people loved life. Carley; they are learning to love Bro. Andrews. Pray for us."

"ASLEEP!"

Nothing so appeals to a mother's heart as the sight of her baby asleep. This is doubly true when the white lips, the fevered brow, the blue lines and the thin little hands tell the pathetic story that baby is ill. To the child that comes into the world robust and healthy, the ordinary ills of childhood are not a serious menace; but to the weak, puny baby with the seeds of disease implanted in its little body even before birth, they are a serious matter and frequently mean baby's death.

The woman who wants a strong, healthy baby must see to it that she does not suffer from weakness and disease of the important and delicate organs concerned in motherhood. Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription acts directly on these organs, allaying inflammation, healing ulceration and soothing pain. It fits a woman for wifehood and motherhood. It banishes the discomforts of the period of anticipation and makes baby's entry to the world easy and almost painless. It insures the newcomer's health and an ample supply of nourishment. It rids maternity of its perils. It has caused many a childless home to ring with the happy laughter of healthy children. Over 90,000 women have testified to its marvelous merits. It is the discovery of an eminent and skillful specialist, Dr. R. V. Pierce, for thirty years chief consulting Physician to the great Invalids' Hotel and Surgical Institute, at Buffalo, N. Y. All medicine dealers sell it. Ailing women who write to Dr. Pierce will receive free his best advice.

Scores of women who have been cured of obstinate and dangerous diseases by Dr. Pierce's medicines have told their experiences in Dr. Pierce's Common Sense Medical Adviser. It contains 1008 pages, over 300 engravings and colored plates, and is free. Send 21 one-cent stamps, to cover cost of mailing only, for paper-covered copy; cloth binding 31 stamps. Address Dr. R. The seed of a single word
Fell among the furrows deep,
And the sower never an echo heard;
But the blessed Spirit's quickening rain
Made a golden sheaf of precious grain

However much charity you may bestow through the medium of an organization, you miss much of the blessedness of giving if you never come into sympathetic contact with the suffering and the sorrowing.

When Epictetus was told that some one had said certain evil things of him, his reply was, "He was ignorant of my other faults, else he would not have spoken of these alone." Some Christians would be vastly improved by cultivating the spirit of that heathen.

SOUL-WINNING.

Ministers are supposed to be, and ought all to be, successful "fishers of men," having gifts differing according to the grace of God; but he who would lay all the responsibility of soul saving upon the shoulders and consciences of preachers has grossly misinterpreted the Scriptures. Everyone who names the name of Christ ought in some measure to participate in this glorious, heaven-appointed work. Christ's design is that each and all his followers shall be witnesses for him. He declares plainly, "He that gathereth not with me scattereth abroad."

The fact is, every man or woman who enjoys the favor of God ought to manifest deep concern over the condition of sinners, and to feel moved to do something for their rescue from the paths of destruction. Almost a sure sign of spiritual deadness is indifference to the spiritual needs of our companions and neighbors, and disinclination to soul winning.

One of the surest ways to keep from backsliding is to work with might and main for the conversion and reclamation of our fellow men. "He that waters shall be watered also himself." It is doubtful whether a believer who rarely prays for or concerns himself about the salvation of others has enough religion to save him, for he who loves Christ must love his fellow-men.

The mission of the church is not merely to save those already in it, but also to convert the world. But how can this be accomplished, how can extensive conquest be made, unless each contributes some share of effort and influence towards the mighty end? Generals can not do all the fighting. It is their business to give wise direction to the energies of the armies under their command. Similarly a pastor in an ideal—that is to say, in a perfect—state of ecclesiastical life is a general in charge of an enthusiastic and well trained army bent upon conquest.

It is a lamentable fact that in many—might we not say, most?—churches, leaving out the preacher and his wife, the soul winners can be counted on the fingers of one hand, or at best of two hands. The rest of the membership (at least a part of them) help to support the church, and attend service with some regularity, but do absolutely nothing to win new converts. No wonder, then, that progress is in many instances exceedingly slow.

Some who might be enlisted in this blessed work remain idle because of the false notion that this is exclusively the preacher's business. Others desire to do something for the Lord in this way, but hold back through self distrust and self-depreciation. The Lord can use every man who is willing to be used. Christians ought to make it a rule to pray statedly and constantly, not only for their fellow-men in general, but for certain sinners and backsliders in whom they are interested, remembering that the fervent, effectual prayer of the righteous man availeth much. Such prayer ought to be followed up occasionally by an earnest talk on personal religion with each person we are concerned about. Mr. Moody has long made it a rule to speak to some one every day on the subject of personal salvation, and many have been turned to God thereby. Those who maintain a vital relation to Christ are sure to have some impulse to tell others of what great things God hath done for them.

Little is said in Scripture of the Apostle Andrew, but in almost every instance where he is mentioned he brings some one to Christ. As the paralytic was borne of the four to the Master, so ought Christians to unite in bringing the sin sick to the Lord on the wings of prayer and faith and personal effort.

If we be true disciples, we must say by our lives and in word to those who know not Christ, "Come thou with us, and we will do thee good, for the Lord has spoken good concerning Israel."

The grandest work any man can do is to rescue a soul from the power of Satan. It is work that angels might covet. Before we can win men to Christ, however, our lives must be pure, and our love an abounding stream. No man can teach until he has been taught. Here we can not use force, or guile, but love which conquers all things.

"The only way of gaining souls," says Dr. Joseph Parker, "is by winning them. He that is wise in everything but soul gaining in not wise. A man can not healthily affect the souls of others until his own soul is in the right mood and in the right relation to God."

Let us remember that "they that turn many to righteousness shall shine as the stars forever and ever."

FRANCES WILLARD MEMORIAL SERVICE.

Last Sunday afternoon, at Rayne Memorial Church, a memorial service was held for Miss Willard. Notwithstanding the inclement weather a very large congregation was present. The sombre drapery of the ordinary funeral was conspicuous by its absence. Evergreens and white flowers were abundant about the pulpit and inside the chancel, while a huge white ribbon extended clear across the chancel with the following words in gilt letters emblazoned upon it: "For God and Home and Every Land." The devotional exercises were conducted by Dr. J. T. Sawyer. Mrs. Mary Reed Goodale, president of the Louisiana W. C. T. U., presided, and made appropriate remarks. Addresses were made by Mrs. Caroline E. Merrick, Mrs. Alice M. Zable, Miss Frances Griffin, of Alabama; Mrs. Wheatley, of Chicago; Mrs. F. A. Lyons, Dr. J. T. Sawyer; Rev. R. E. Steele, of the Presbyterian Church; Rev. R. S. Hawkins, of the Christian Church; Rev. A. G. Bakewell, of the Episcopal Church, and by the editor of the NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE. An appropriate service of song was well rendered by a choir composed of representatives of different churches.

THE SUNDAY LAW IN DANGER.

We desire to call attention to the fact that the Sunday law is in danger at the hands of the Constitutional Convention, now in session in this city. The proposition is to embody in the new Constitution a clause prohibiting the Legislature from passing a Sunday law except for localities which by a majority vote petition for such legislation. If we do not mistake the signs of the times, there is strong probability that this measure will be adopted. We, therefore, call upon the friends of the Sunday law throughout the State to rally at once and marshall their forces. Let mass meetings be held; let petitions be gotten up; let letters and telegrams by thousands pour in upon members of the Convention. And there is no time for delay. Whatever is done must be done quickly. We do not deem it necessary to go into any process of argumentation on this subject. Methodist people do not need any argument on the subject, and no words of ours would have any weight with those who are bent upon the destruction of this bulwark of American civilization. Let no one wait for another. Let everyone consider himself a committee of one to do whatever in his power lies to avert the impending danger. If this measure is not defeated, this city and a large part of South Louisiana will be cursed with all the evils of a continental Sabbath for generations to come.

A NEW BOOK.

CONFERENCE RIGHTS; or, Governing Principles of the M. E. Church, South, as Found in the History, Legislation and Administration of the Church, with Suggestions as to Hurtful Tendencies, Inherent Defects, and Needed Changes. By Rev. T. A. Kerley. 12 mo. 398 pages. Price, $1.50. Nashville, Tenn.: Southern Methodist Publishing House.

The subject of this book, as the author remarks in the preface, "lies in the region of ecclesiastical controversy," and he assumes in the outset that "the most prolific source of disagreement and contention among us is the relative rights and powers of the episcopacy, on the one hand, and the General and Annual Conferences on the other."

The opening chapter discusses the origin of the episcopacy and church government, animadverts upon apostolic succession and papal pretensions, proof being adduced to show that at first bishops and presbyters were identical, a bishop being simply "primus inter pares;" and also mentions four elements of changes in the episcopal form of church government, high praise, however, being bestowed upon its efficiency and possibilities for usefulness. The author rejects the belief that there are three orders in the ministry, as well as the view that the episcopacy is a co-ordinate branch with the General Conference. He manifests, we think, undue alarm as to episcopal claims and tendencies in our church, and favors such limitations of episcopal authority and prerogative as would, in our humble judgment, greatly injure the usefulness and destroy the superiority of our form of church government. If bishops were unprincipled politicians, desirous merely of fame and fortune; if they made the extravagant claims of the Roman hierarchy, then there would be good cause for holding them to more rigid account.

In Chapter I. the author graphically traces the origin and development of the government of English Methodism, showing that, as the founder and father of Methodism, Mr. Wesley held a unique place, and that he exercised extraordinary powers in consequence.

The origin and adoption of Conference government in American Methodism is next discussed at considerable length, the position being taken that Episcopal Methodism in America was organized as a distinct and separate body from English Methodism in accordance with the plans and wishes of Mr. Wesley, Bishop Asbury being acquitted by the writer of the charge of hardheadedness and over reaching ambition in the part he took in establishing a church independent of Mr. Wesley. Here the author takes issue squarely with Dr. Tigert in his constitutional history, as he does also respecting the designation and authority of the Christmas Conference of 1784.

Among other subjects treated are the veto powers of the Bishops, the rights and powers of the ministry, the duties and rights of local preachers—the last two mentioned being burning questions just now—and the relation of laymen to the government of the church. The author favors permitting laymen to participate in the passage of ministerial character, and thinks they ought to be represented in the Bishops' cabinet.

Over sixty pages are devoted to a discussion of the legal questions involved in the famous Kelley-Hargrove case.

The volume in hand evinces much thought, painstaking investigation, and thorough acquaintance with ecclesiastical history. The author has decided convictions upon the matters treated of, and does not hesitate to express them, the positions of those who differ with him, however, being stated with decided fairness. Though we dissent emphatically from some of the author's conclusions, we commend the book for its candor, its clear statement of facts and issues, its suggestiveness, and for the admirable spirit it breathes. It contains much that is worthy of attention, and will not fail to interest wide-awake laymen as well as preachers.

Did you ever think of roses for the living? Many heap roses upon a coffin when the form within is lifeless and knows nothing about it. Do you do this? If so, you doubtless think of the opportunities to show love and appreciation before death took your friend away. Pray do not again keep roses for the dead, when it is best to give them to the living. Give roses to beautify homes, to beautify minds, to beautify hearts; roses of all colors, roses of knowledge, roses of sympathy, and roses of love. They gladden hearts. They lessen trials, increase happiness, and sweeten life in every way. They help those who receive them to grow purer, nobler, and more heavenly minded. They benefit you more than words can tell. Blessed is the cheerful giver—he who gives time, money, instruction, kind words of sympathy, or anything else for the good and ennobling of others. Yes, strew roses of knowledge, roses of peace, roses of happiness, and roses of love.—The Baptist Helper.

The Lutheran Observer tells of a pastor who was informed by one of his members that all she knew of infidelity she had learned from his sermons. This was a revelation to him, and started searching inquiry, and led him to preach with more positiveness and directness. The minister's business is to inculcate faith, not doubt. He is to set forth the positive, rather than the negative, side of truth.—Presbyterian.

POSSESSIONS.

In counting up our wealth we leave out the most important items. Bonds and stocks and notes and cash, lands and mines and fleets—these do not constitute riches. Far higher in rank are the riches of thought and feeling and imagination; and higher yet the riches of character, to which all these things may be made tributary, but to which they rarely are. When they are not, how little they really avail! They count for the moment, they sparkle on the surface. But depth and permanency are not with them. There is wealth in love that often makes a millionaire. There is wealth often in sorrow and failure rightly used. They may be forced to yield a revenue such as joy and success are wholly powerless to produce. Earth is crowded with the possessions of the good man, for he draws enjoyment from all the works of God, and heaven itself flings down into this life golden anticipations. There is no need, then, that anyone should count himself poor. Everyone has an estate the right administration of which will task his powers to the utmost, and only as he gets help divine can he discharge his heavy responsibility.—Zion's Herald.

A BITTER WORD.

A bitter word dropped from our lips against a brother is like a pistol flred among mountains. The sharp report is caught up and intensified, and echoed by rocks and caves till it is like thunder. So an unkind word, in passing from month to month, receives progressive exaggerations, and, snowball like, increases as it rolls. Scandal mongers are the persons who tear the bandages from social wounds and prevent their healing. A whisper word of slander is like that fox with a firebrand tied to its tail, that Samson sent among the standing corn of the Philistines; it brings destruction into wide areas of peace and love; evil speaking is like a freezing wind: it seals up the sparkling waters and tender juices of flowers and binds up the hearts of men in uncharitableness and bitterness of spirit, as the earth is bound up in the grip of Winter.—Catholic Review.

PECULIARITIES.

Some people pride themselves almost unconsciously upon various peculiarities or idiosyncrasies of disposition or temperament. They are theirs, therefore let the earth keep silence. If these same peculiarities or idiosyncrasies were manifested by others, however, they would probably be the first to frown upon them, so easy is it to measure oneself with one yardstick and others by quite another. We should ever remember that there can be no right, natural or acquired, which gives us the prerogative to indulge in that which we would not tolerate in our neighbor.—Our Young People.

The religious press is becoming more than ever a power for good. It has made rapid progress during the past twenty-five years. It has improved in every department, and for the most part discusses problems, social and religious, with ability, tact and judgment. It deserves greater support than it is receiving. No church can afford to dispense with its journals at this time. They may not be perfect, but they are an agency necessary for the maintenance, development and extension of denominational life, polity and doctrine, as well as for the building of Christian character in the individual membership and in the home.—Presbyterian.

George Muller, the founder of the Ashley Down Orphan Homes, now in his ninety-third year, bears remarkable testimony to the power of prayer. He has never, he declares, asked a human being for a penny, but he laid the necessities of the work before God, and the answer came. He has received in all, for his orphanages and for schools and missions, more than £1,400,000 during the sixty-two years in which he has been engaged in this work.—Central Methodist.

Keep your conscience clean toward yourself, your neighbor, your God, and no weapon that is formed against you shall prosper. Clouds, darkness, persecution, death, may come, but God will bring forth your righteousness as the light and your judgment as the noonday.—Exchange.

We have repeatedly stated in these columns that the consumption of alcoholic liquors in this country, bad as it is, is not increasing per capita. Our statement is confirmed in a recent able editorial upon the subject which appeared in the Boston Herald, of this city. We learn therefrom, according to Mr. Bateman, the head of the commercial department of the Board of Trade of the United Kingdom, that the United States is the most temperate of the civilized countries. The production and consumption of spirits with us have been for some years decreasing; in fact, it may be said generally of the three alcoholic beverages—wine, beer and spirits—that the consumption of wine and spirits is distinctly decreasing, while the consumption of beer, having regard to the increase in population, has not perceptibly increased.—Zion's Herald.

Whatever thou wouldst have ask God for it. Whatever thou hast already ascribe it to God. He is not worthy of new blessings who is not grateful for those already given. The streams of heavenly blessing cease to flow down to us when there are no returning streams of gratitude and praise to God. Lovingly lift up thy heart to God and cling to him.—Gerhard.

Bishop Charles B. Galloway preached a magnificent sermon last Sunday to a congregation that filled the pews and aisles, and overflowed into the vestibule; and at night delivered a masterly address on Methodism. The Bishop is truly a master of assemblies. His sermon was full of great thoughts simply and elegantly expressed. The lecture was as fine and finished an oration as one could wish to hear. Great as a Bishop and preacher, he is greater as a man. Too broad for a bigot, and too great to be a partisan, he is to day one of the foremost citizens of Mississippi and of the entire South. Charming in the pulpit and on the platform, he is no less so in social intercourse. Mrs. Galloway accompanied the Bishop on this visit and fascinated all who met her.—Carrollton (Miss.) GRENADA COLLEGIATE INSTITUTE.

I have never had so fine a student body in our college at Grenada as now. The most praiseworthy ambition for excellence prevails in every department throughout the college. Our teachers are experienced and in every way capable. We have no "Prof. Berlin," or "Madam Delsarte," or "sweet girl graduate" in our faculty, and will not have so long as I am the president. I have studiously and purposely avoided such teachers. Every member of the faculty is a Christian and a Methodist, and the directress of the Conservatory is the leader in the religious work of the college. The elocution and physical culture teacher was taught by Prof. Merrill, of Vanderbilt, and in New England Conservatories, and is sensible, and practical, and truly religious. Pupils who enter, if they continue in school at all, return again to us because they know what to expect. Nearly every member of my advanced classes are pupils of other years. If I could be accused of having a hobby, my hobby is English—our mother tongue—the greatest language ever spoken by man. To show what a Conservatory of Music can be made without "Prof. Berlin," it is only necessary to state that in this department alone we have 105 pupils, and employ five teachers.

What the college needs is enlargment and endowment. When I took charge, four years ago, I announced that it was my purpose to make the school for the girls of North Mississippi what Millsaps College was for the boys. I have steadily adhered to this purpose. Each year we have steadily advanced in grade, in attendance, and in improvements and appliances for teaching. It goes without saying that a Conference so large as ours needs at least one female college, and that we are well able to equip and endow it. The time was when the boarding department and the "extras" in female colleges paid well, and thus maintained the literary, but this time has now passed. Present methods, facilities and teachers are none too good, but they will be much worse in the next few years unless the strong arm of the church extends the too-long delayed help in a positive and substantial way. It is no little thing to establish and run a first-class college. When the State undertakes to establish and run a college, male or female, it must needs set aside annually an appropriation of from $20,000 to $40,000. Is the church to be guilty of proposing to furnish equal advantages without funds at all, or with only such a pittance as a low rate of tuition can furnish? Such a thing is worse than child's play, and yet this very thing is proposed all over the country. The matter resolves itself into this: we must either do something for our girls that is worthy of our great church, or turn their higher education over to the State, as we have their primary and intermediate education to the public schools.

No greater question than this confronts the church to day. Indeed, the question is a vital and far reaching one. All that has ever been said about woman's power and influence does not tell the whole truth. Shall we continue to do indifferently, or entirely turn over to the State this vital work of fitting our daughters to become the home-keepers and mothers of future generations? Endowment is imperative from another standpoint, namely, the permanency of our female colleges. Year by year competition is increasing from the State and from inferior and independent enterprises, of large pretensions, but of shoddy work, and in the near future will make fair and honest college work an impossibility outside of an endowed institution. Many of our people are now being deceived, and only wake up to the truth when it is too late to correct their mistakes.

Methodism and the church is here to stay, for the Christ himself said: "The gates of hell (death) shall not prevail against it." Our female colleges ought to be and are a part of the church, but as they are now they can but be ephemoral. Every college should be founded and built for the centuries, as enduring as the church itself. This can not be without endowment. We had just as well open our eyes to the situation and begin the work of meeting the emergency. We need not expect large gifts from the men of means till the need is made fully apparent, and the church gets this matter on its heart and conscience. The Grenada Collegiate Institute is the only school interest that the North Mississippi Conference has of its own. We have an excellent plant, well located, and with no indebtedness on the property. The Methodists of North Mississippi can endow this college if they will. Who will be the first to give $50,000, $25,000, $10,000, $5,000, $1,000, or even less, to start the ball to rolling? J. W. MALONE.

DEPARTED.

Rev. Frederic Alexander Ross, L. E., of Tuscumbia, Ala., died at the residence of his son, Mr. Frederic W. Ross, Canton, Miss., February 25, 1898, in the eightieth year of his age. Several strokes of an apoplectic nature had prepared the household for his sudden death. He walked from his room to the breakfast table, where he was stricken. His daughter helped him back to his room and bed. Before the physician came the good man was gone. For months he had been longing to go and be at rest. His end was peace and everlasting salvation.

GONE HOME.

Dr. W. D. White, brother of Revs. B. F., T. B. and H. O. White, of the Louisiana Conference, died in peace at his home here last Thursday, Feb. 24, at 2:45 p. m. By his death the M. E. Church, South, and Vermilion parish sustain a great loss, for he loved the church and was faithful to its interests, and no man living has done more good in this parish.

The funeral services were conducted at his late residence and the church by Rev. Jno. A. Miller and myself; Bro. Miller delivering the address. The body was laid to rest with Masonic honors in the Masonic Cemetery in the presence of a large company of friends and relatives who mourn his loss. He leaves a wife and eight children. Truly a good and much-loved man has gone to his reward. A. S. J. NEILL.

NOTICE TO PHYSICIANS.

We are very much in need of a good physician at Rocky Springs, Miss. We have had two here for a number of years; one of them has made his fortune and saw a good opening on the railroad and left us. Dr. Davis, who is still with us, can not do all the practice, and I have been requested by some of our best paying people to see if I could assist in getting a good, reliable man. We want a man of experience and one who don't drink, gamble, or use any bad language. We have a M. E. Church, South, in the place, a high school, postoffice, with mail every day. We are eight miles from the railroad, and in a good community. Physicians will do well to write me at once. J. N. WARE, P. C.

March 6.—PERSONAL WORK.

(Acts viii. 26-40.)

1. The Holy Spirit gives us true leading and directs us to personal work. If we are wholly given up to him as was Philip, he will direct us unerringly to some anxious, seeking soul. The Ethiopian eunuch was in the dusty desert reading and revolving the words of Isaiah the prophet. God's eye was on him. He was coming to his assistance with the true light. Presently a person makes his appearance on the scene. It is Philip, the evangelist. He had left a great revival in the city of Samaria, sixty miles away, in order to talk to this man about the King's business. Here we have faith and unquestioning obedience. Philip must leave a successful revival and go and talk to just one man. God knows best. When he saw him in the desert, he ran—ran and joined himself to him.

"Take my feet, and let them be Swift and beautiful for thee."

Then the Scripture was made clear to him, for "the entrance of thy words giveth light." The Ethiopian eunuch was converted, became a child of God, was baptized, and became the first Christian missionary to the Dark Continent, A. D. 34.

2. This is personal work. We can all do this. Will you do this? Then give your hands, your feet, your tongue, your all, to Jesus, as did Philip. Be wholly consecrated, and the Holy Spirit will wholly cleanse and fill and empower you. (Rom. xii, 1, 2.) Mr. Moody, we believe, speaks to some soul every day about eternal things. If the reader will pardon a personal allusion, the writer every day reminds from one to ten people about Jesus and his dying love.

3. We really do not quite understand the way some Leagues act toward the Lord Jesus. In a recent social gathering of one of the Leagues there were present one presiding elder, three preachers, two stewards, one Sunday-school superintendent, and many Methodists, and yet this assemblage of leaguers did not, as a League, invoke or acknowledge the presence of the Lord Jesus. There were nice refreshments, pleasant conversation, and amusing games, but not a song of praise to him, not a prayer, not a syllable from his Word in acknowledgement of his supervising presence. Who among these good brethren was to blame? As our lesson is on personal effort, we will ask some personal questions: Can our Leagues take Jesus into their social gatherings? Would it be out of place for us to remember him specifically in some simple way on these occasions? These questions may not be entirely pertinent, but they come within the domain of personal work. (I. Cor. x, 31.)

The Union Epworth League will meet at Carrollton Avenue M. E. Church, South, Tuesday, March 8, 1898, at 7:45 P. M. Epworth leaguers and all are cordially invited to be present.

Happy Homes

..AND THE..

Hearts that Make Them;

Or, Thrifty People and Why They Thrive

BY
SAMUEL SMILES;
AUTHOR OF SELF-HELP, CHARACTER, DUTY, THRIFT, ETC.

A beautifully illustrated book of 644 pages, cover stamped in gold, marble edges, size 8vo, red cloth. Probably no books of the same general type were ever written that have so much interested and inspired to worthy action the various classes to whom they were addressed, as have the productions of SAMUEL SMILES. The marked interest which attaches to MR. SMILES' productions is chiefly due to his happy use of biography. Readers who tire of extended biographical histories find here groups of the wise and distinguished of earth, each giving testimony to the various principles the author wishes to inculcate. The interest excited by the novel arises solely from our interest in the lives and struggles of men and women. They are interesting biographies; but much more interest should attach to lives actually lived and conquests actually made, provided they are produced with equal care. The home is the epitome of society and government. The application of these principles to every member of the home—the importance of their inculcation in the home, where character is chiefly molded—and the value of such lessons in making every home what it may be and should be, has dictated the title,

"Happy Homes and the Hearts that Make Them."

A GOLDEN WEDDING.

BY M. H. STOKES.

Dearest one, we both remember
Fifty years ago to-day,
How the sky was bright with splendor
As we wove our marriage lay.
Fifty years of holy union
Call for gratitude divine;
Fifty years of sweet communion
Now awaken joys sublime!

Thou didst help me kindly, dearest,
When earth's sorrows bowed me low;
Strengthened often, when severest
Trials had their darkest flow.
When my life seemed only losses,
When my heart bled at each pore,
Thou didst help me bear my crosses
And each day thou helped me more.

So our joys have been the brighter,
So our bitterer more sweet,
So our cares have been the lighter,
As our love grew more complete.
Lighter! There were two to bear them,
In their passing to and fro;
Sweeter! There were two to share them
Since the "Fifty years ago."

Praises then for years of gladness,
More than those our spirits bowed;
More of cheerfulness than sadness,
More of sunshine than of cloud.
Less of autumn, more of vernal,
More of health and less of pain;
Blessed hopes of Life Eternal,
Every loss a greater gain.

SMALL COURTESIES.

One evening last week I entered a room where several young people, with books and work, were sitting around the lamp. The young man with the lexicon and the grammar on the table before him was the busiest of the group, but he instantly arose and remained standing until I had taken my seat. The little action was automatic; the habit of this family is to practice small courtesies, and the boys have been trained from childhood to pay deference to women. They always rise whenever a lady, their mother, sister, friend, or the guest of the house, comes into the room where they are at work; they place chairs gallantly and gracefully for ladies at the dinner table, they take off their hats when they meet their mother on the street, and they never kiss her with a hat on; in saying good-morning or good-evening to her, it is with hat in hand. Her bundles are carried, her way is made easy; a beautiful politeness waits for her word in the domestic discussions, and refrains from interrupting her even in the most heated argument. Neither mother nor sister goes out after dark without an escort. One of the boys can always go out of his way, or find it in his way, to see her safely to a friend's door, or to the meeting which she wishes to attend. Most winning and sweet is the air of good breeding which these young men have acquired—which they wear with an unconscious grace.

Equally charming are the manners of the girls in the home I speak of; gentle, soft-spoken, appreciative, considerate, and reverential. To old people they are tender; to children, kind; to each other, lovely.

One can not too sedulously look after the small courtesies in one's conduct, and, if one be charged with the management of a household, in the accustomed ways of the family. Habits count for everything here, and example is better than precept.—Margaret E. Sangster, in Interior.

THE WIFE.

Only let a woman be sure she is precious to her husband, not useful, not valuable, not simply convenient, but lovely and beloved; let her be the recipient of his polite and hearty attentions; let her feel that her cares and love are noticed, appreciated and returned; let her opinion be asked her approval be sought, and her judgment respected in matters of which she is cognizant; in short, let her be beloved, honored and cherished, in fulfillment of her marriage covenant, and she will be to her husband, her children and society, a wellspring of happiness. She will bear pain and toil and anxiety, for her husband's love is a tower and a fortress. Shielded and sheltered therein, adversity will have lost its sting.

HAIR RENEWER
does for the hair just what its name says it does—it renews it. Fading, falling, thin locks are stimulated to look fresh and new by its use; nature does the rest.

She may suffer, but sympathy will dull the edge of sorrow. A house with love in it—and by love I mean love expressed in words and deeds, for I have not one spark of faith in love that never crops out—is to a house as a person to a machine; one is life, the other mechanism; the unloved woman may have bread just as light, a house just as tidy as the other, but the latter has a spring of beauty about her, a joyousness, a penetrating and pervading brightness to which the former is an entire stranger. The deep happiness of her heart shines out in her face. It gleams over. It is airy, graceful and warm, welcoming with her presence. She is full of devices, and plots, and sweet surprises for her husband and family. She is never done with the romance and poetry of life. She herself is a lyric poem setting herself to all pure and gracious melodies. Humble household ways and duties have for her a golden significance. The prize makes her calling high, and the end sanctifies the means.—Exchange.

EFFORT THE BEST SCHOOL.

Business becomes the best of schools to a young man with a well-formed purpose. The experience of each day disciplines his three-fold nature beyond the curriculum of academy or college. Abraham Lincoln was better educated for the service he rendered to his country than half the graduates of Yale or Harvard would have been. He cherished an exalted purpose, to the accomplishment of which every item of daily life contributed. Our highest university could not have done what business did for him. So of all self-made men, they were well made because what business does for a man is surprisingly practical. There is no theory about it. It is matter-of-fact education. Patrick Henry and Roger Sherman were self-made men, and none were ever better made. Moody and Edison are self-made men; and no two people in all the world are more thorough and successful in their respective departments than they. It is the outcome of a purpose that does not waver or flag.

Mark Twain, W. D. Howells and Charles Dudley Warner enjoyed but a common-school education. Academy and college were beyond their reach. But a mighty purpose commanded their souls, and has won for them world-wide fame. They blazed their own way through the tangled forest of obscurity, and emerged into the light of God's mid-day. "So numerous have been our self-made men that there is almost a prejudice against those who are made in any other way."—Success.

TOO HASTY IN SPEECH.

The danger of hasty speech is well illustrated in the following story. Let us be admonished by it to "think twice before we speak once," "for we know not one another."

"One night, in a crowded sleeping car, a baby cried most piteously. At length a harsh voice called out from a neighboring berth: 'Won't that child's mother stop its noise, so that the people in this car can get some sleep?'

"The baby ceased for a moment, and then a man's voice answered: 'The baby's mother is in her coffin in the baggage car, and I have been awake with the little one three nights. I will do my best to keep her quiet.'

"There was a sudden rush from the other berth, and a rough voice, broken and tender, said: 'I didn't understand, sir; I'm so sorry. I wouldn't have said it for the world if I had understood. Let me take the baby, and you get some rest.' And up and down the car paced the strong man, softly hushing the tired baby until it fell asleep, when he laid it down in his own berth and watched over it till morning. As he carried the little one to its father, he again apologized in the same words: 'I hope you'll excuse what I said; I didn't understand how it was.'"—Exchange.

A MESSAGE TO YOUNG MEN.

The nobility of life is work. We live in a working world. The idle and lazy man does not count in the plan of campaign. "My father worketh hitherto, and I work." Let that text be enough. Let your daily wisdom of life be in making a good use of the opportunities given you. We live in a real and solid and truthful world. In such a world only truth, in the long run, can hope to prosper. Therefore avoid lies, mere show and sham and hollow superficiality of all kinds, which is at best a painted lie. Let whatever you are, and whatever you do, grow out of a firm root of truth and strong soil of reality. Never forget Paul's sentence: "Love is the fulfilling of the law." That is the steam of the social machine. Do one thing well, "be a whole man," as Chancellor Thurlow said, "do one thing at a time." "Make clean work and leave no tags." Allow no delays while you are at a thing. Do it and be done with it. Avoid miscellaneous reading. Read nothing that you do not care to remember, and remember nothing that you do not mean to use. Never desire to appear clever and make a parade of your talents before men. Be honest, loving, kindly, and sympathetic in all you say and do. Cleverness will flow from you naturally if you have it; and applause will come to you unsought from those who know what to applaud, but the applause of fools is to be shunned. —John Stuart Blackie.

DUTY OF HAVING TACT.

Tact in speech and in action is a potent factor in personal influence. "Tact" means "touch;" it is commonly used as meaning skillful and delicate touch. He who would touch others without paining or repelling them must touch tenderly and wisely. An oculist must have a care, while removing a speck of dust from the eye, to reach the speck without harming the eye; that requires tact. A man who would correct another for a fault, needs to indicate the fault without disturbing the temper; that requires tact. Touch that does what is needful without doing what is not necessary, is tact. Tact is something that we may lack to begin with, but we have no right to live without it. Christina Rossetti says: "Tact is a gift: it is likewise a grace. As a gift, it may, or may not have fallen to our share: as a grace, we are bound either to possess or to acquire it." —Sunday-School Times.

MEMORIES OF CHILDHOOD.

Childhood reminiscence makes us young when we are old, and helps to keep us pure and fresh with the spring-time that was in us a score of a generation of years ago. A boy can never become utterly bad so long as there remains with him a memory of his father and mother in the act of prayer. The time may come with the hardening and chilling process of the years when he will himself cease to pray, but, from the canvas long ago painted, there will never fade the figures of those, now asleep, whose heads were seen day by day bent in worship, and who in inspired priestliness laid the morning sacrifice upon the family altar; and the memory helps, at any rate, to keep alive in us our own possibilities of prayer.

The most natural years of our lives we live while we are children, and there are always rest and purification in getting back into touch with them. When the burdens press a little heavily and the future is thick with uncertainties, the wish will sometimes shape itself that we might be back again among our free, fresh, childish days. We do not understand it very well, but there is something gone that we would dearly love to have back. Those may seem to have been rather unproductive afternoons that we used to spend up in the garret, listening in the pauses of our merrymaking to the rain pattering on the roof, and we so dry and sheltered underneath, but our life means more even to-day because of them and because of our memory of them.—Rev. Chas. L. Parkhurst.

DANGEROUS DRUGS.

At frequent intervals the warning is needed against various forms of the drug habit. Multitudes are led into the practice of tampering with morphine, cocaine, anti-pyrine and other new substances, without knowing the perils which await them in the use of these noxious and seductive narcotics. For the relief of insomnia, headache, neuralgia, and as a palliative for an overtaxed brain, too many deluded people rush to the drug stores and dose themselves with poisonous stuff, sometimes with, but often without the prescription of a physician. The manifold sorts of bitters—all of which have whisky as their chief ingredient—are sold and swallowed by unsuspecting victims in enormous quantities, as tonics, invigorators and appetizers. In a little while the regular dose becomes a necessity, and the habit of taking it at intervals throughout the day becomes inveterate. These dosers of themselves with poison need pity, instruction and warning. By their folly they incur frightful risks, culminating at last in many cases in death from narcotic poisoning.—Selected.

WALKING FOR HEALTH.

When there is no organic weakness which is aggravated by the exertion, it is the easiest and pleasantest thing to walk right into health. Of course there is no virtue in a dawdling walk. The slow and languid dragging of one foot after the other, which some people call walking, would tire an athlete; it utterly exhausts a weak person, and that is the reason why many delicate people think they can not walk. To derive any benefit from the exercise, it is necessary to walk with a light, elastic step, which swings the weight of the body so easily from one leg to the other that its weight is not felt, and which produces a healthy glow, showing that the sluggish blood is stirred to action in the most remote veins. This sort of walking exhilarates the whole body, gives tone to the nerves, and produces just that sort of healthful fatigue which encourages sound, restful sleep.—Demorest's Magazine.

ON'T GET OUT OF TOUCH WITH THE PEOPLE.

Sometimes it occurs that a pastor becomes enamored with a certain line of study, or with special problems in ecclesiastical discussions, that he overlooks the special needs of his people, prepares sermons on subjects that are more in accordance with his own literary tastes than with the temporal or spiritual necessities of those who have been particularly committed to him. We think it is possible for a pastor to give his people all needed instruction in the living issues of the day, whether secular, social, or ecclesiastical, without spending whole sermons in their discussions. A passing remark, or short paragraph, stating his own views clearly as grounded on the principles of God's Word, will often be more effective, and generally more satisfactory to his people, as a whole, than if he devoted hours in the services of many Sabbaths to the ventilation of his views on such topics. To keep in touch with his people the pastor must preach the gospel in its fullness, with a steadfastness to the wants of those who form his charge, in all their varied experiences of pains, sorrows, temptations, trials, tribulations, coming very near to them as their friend, and brother, and pastor, as the one set over them by the Shepherd and Bishop of souls.—Treasury.

BEWARE OF OINTMENTS FOR CATARRH THAT CONTAIN MERCURY,

as mercury will surely destroy the sense of smell and completely derange the whole system when entering it through the mucous surfaces. Such articles should never be used except on prescriptions from reputable physicians, as the damage they will do is tenfold to the good you can possibly derive from them. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, O., contains no mercury, and is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. In buying Hall's Catarrh Cure be sure you get the genuine. It is taken internally, and made in Toledo, Ohio, by F. J. Cheney & Co. Testimonials free.

Hall's Family Pills are the best.

We are overwhelmed, submerged, and almost drowned out by a great flood-tide of European riff-raff, the refuse of every nation of the continent; paupers, criminals, beggars, the muddy residuum of foreign civilization. We don't wonder that they want to come to this country, but the country is not being run as a philanthropic institution or asylum for the crippled and depraved of the earth. The question is a purely practical one, namely: Shall Europe keep her best for herself and dump her worst on our shores for us to take care of? We have endured that sort of business long enough, and the sooner we take a decided stand, and shut down the gates, the better. It is a great privilege for any man to avail himself of the opportunities which this republic affords, and he ought to be willing to pay for it. Charge every immigrant $100—a very cheap price—and two things will instantly follow: Those who do come will be worth something to us, and those who are worth nothing either to this or to any other government will stay away. There is no reason why immigration should not be conducted on business principles.—New York World.

CAPT. A. M. MOORE

Sunday, Nov. 7, 1897, at his home in Jackson, Miss., one of the purest, best men it has been my privilege to number among my friends, was translated to his heavenly home. On Friday preceding his death he said to the writer, "Not a cloud betwixt me and my God; all is bright." There was a peace and joy within that it illumined his face with an unearthly brightness. He continued in this happy frame of mind, as I learned from others, to the time of his death. The happy termination of the earthly existence had been preceded by a life of devotion to God and usefulness to his fellow-beings. A peaceful exit was expected by those who knew of his consistent Christian life. Our brother filled a place of so much importance in the church and community that his death will be almost like a public calamity. The church may supply his place, but as yet we do not know who will fill it.

For particulars of his life, furnished by one of his family and other friends, we go upon record. He was born in Marengo county, Ala., Aug. 19, 1830. His father, Thomas Moore, died when he was five years old. The family moved to Sumpter county, Ala., where our brother was converted at the age of thirteen and joined the church, but afterwards backslid and remained some years in this condition, but was reclaimed in 1852 and brought back into the church, proving ever after true and faithful. He had poor school facilities, but such as he had were used to advantage. At the age of sixteen, by his mother's consent, he began business for himself. In two years he saved some money and went to school again, but did not continue in school long enough to become thoroughly educated. He was first married in May, 1851, to Miss Martha A. Elliott. Four children were the fruit of this marriage, of whom two—Revs. M. H. and W. W. Moore—are members of the Mississippi Conference. His first wife died in 1862, and soon after he responded to the call of his country; was elected captain of his company, which formed part of the Fortieth Regiment, Alabama Volunteers, commanded by Col. Coleman, who says he was brave and true as a soldier, and faithful as a Christian, often conducting prayer meeting in his company. He was captured near Atlanta in 1864, and remained in prison at Johnson's Island till the close of the war. He was married the second time, in September, 1865, to Miss Mary McCaskill, of Kemper county, Miss., where he soon afterwards moved and continued to live till death. He was elected to the Mississippi Legislature in 1882. Rev. T. L. Mellen, who was a member of the Mississippi Legislature at the same time, says of him: "His influence was felt in the committee, and through the committee impressed the House. He was prompt in attendance and faithful in the discharge of his duties. He was conscientious and without the traits of the demagogue. In 1890 he greeted me as his presiding elder, and gave me a warm place in his heart and home. He was a thorough Methodist, and familiar with the history, doctrines and polity of his church. He was a man of prayer and an efficient helper in a protracted meeting. He was a prudent, safe, sound counselor of his pastor and presiding elder. He was a man of moral and physical courage that always dared to do right. He was sincere in his friendship, and without guile or malice."

Dr. C. G. Andrews says of him: "My visits to his home and my association with him proved always a benediction to me. When in his presence I realized: Here is a man true and tried, a citizen loyal and unimpeachable, a Christian partaking of the elements of his Divine Master."

It was devolved upon the writer, assisted by his pastor, Rev. C. M. Crossley, to conduct the burial service. The large congregation gathered on that sad occasion at Binnville Church attested more eloquently than words could do the high place our brother occupied in public esteem. D. G. W. ELLIS.

MOORE—Mrs. SUSAN MATILDA MOORE was born Dec. 8, 1850. She was married to Howell Parks Moore, Dec. 5, 1877, and died Sept. 16, 1897.

She was a consistent member of the M. E. Church, South, and her life testified to her perfect consecration. She was the mother of eight children, six of whom are left to mourn her death and to comfort the bereaved father, who must go his lonely way without the sunshine of "the sweet presence" he has known so long by his side.

This good woman was a bright and shining light, whose cheering influence reached outward to a large circle of relatives and friends. She was an exemplary wife and mother, the center of one of the happiest homes in the community; ever gentle, sweet spirited, hospitable and generous, with the beautiful refinement of true Christianity. Words fail to express how much she was beloved and how much she will be missed, for her heart and home were open to all with a warm welcome.

In mercy a kind Father spared the mother of this household until her impress had been stamped on the hearts of the children, and then he said, "It is enough; come up higher." With her all is well, and the lonely husband and motherless children can only find comfort in the promises of Him who is "too wise to err and too good to be unkind." He alone is able to bind up the broken hearts. Those who have laid down their travel-stained garments and crossed the river can never return, but the way to them is always open to us who follow on. The Savior, clothed with light brighter than the sun, reflected life and immortality into the dark tomb, and with clear vision looking upward from the body with folded hands, the eye of faith can view the "redeemed soul snatched from the gates of death." "She is not dead, but sleepeth."

Mrs. Moore was the sister of the late Mr. Littleton Walker, of precious memory, and niece of Hon. Benjamin Edwards, of Bienville parish, and Mr. Daniel Edwards, of Selma, Ala., and Mrs. Ella Whitman, of Auburn, Ala. Besides these she left nephews and nieces in Texas and Louisiana; among the latter Mrs. Wm. J. Fullilove, of Bossier parish, who mourns as for a mother.

Mrs. Moore was ready when the summons came, and was laid to rest in the family cemetery near Mrs. E. T. Ogilvie's residence in Caddo parish, in blessed hope of the glad resurrection when those that sleep in Christ shall be caught up in the clouds with glorified body, soul, and spirit.

Dear sister in Christ, you were a true, restful friend here. May your rest be sweet, and the reunion with your loved ones, still pressing forward, be joyful!

"Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord, for they rest from their labors, and their works do follow them." A RELATIVE

FORMAN—HATTIE PICOLA FORMAN, daughter of Bro. R. M. and Sister Ara Forman, was born Sept. 30, 1892, and died Aug. 22 1897.

DOLLIE GERTRUDE FORMAN, daughter of Bro. R. M. and Sister Ara Forman, was born Oct. 23, 1888, and died Sept. 10, 1897.

Thus the home of our dear brother and sister was robbed of two bright jewels in less than a month. God saw fit to take the little angels to himself to wait for papa and mama, and brothers and sisters.

Little Picola—or Colla, as she was called—being so young, did not talk much; but Trudie talked about little Colla, who had died a few days before. Said she wanted to go where Colla was. One time, after sleeping awhile, she said she had been where Colla was, and that it was the prettiest place she ever saw. Said she drank the pretty water where Colla was, and her father told me that she did not seem thirsty any more, although she had been very thirsty before that time.

May God bless the bereaved ones, and may they all meet the dear little girls in the bright beyond! M. J. MILLER.

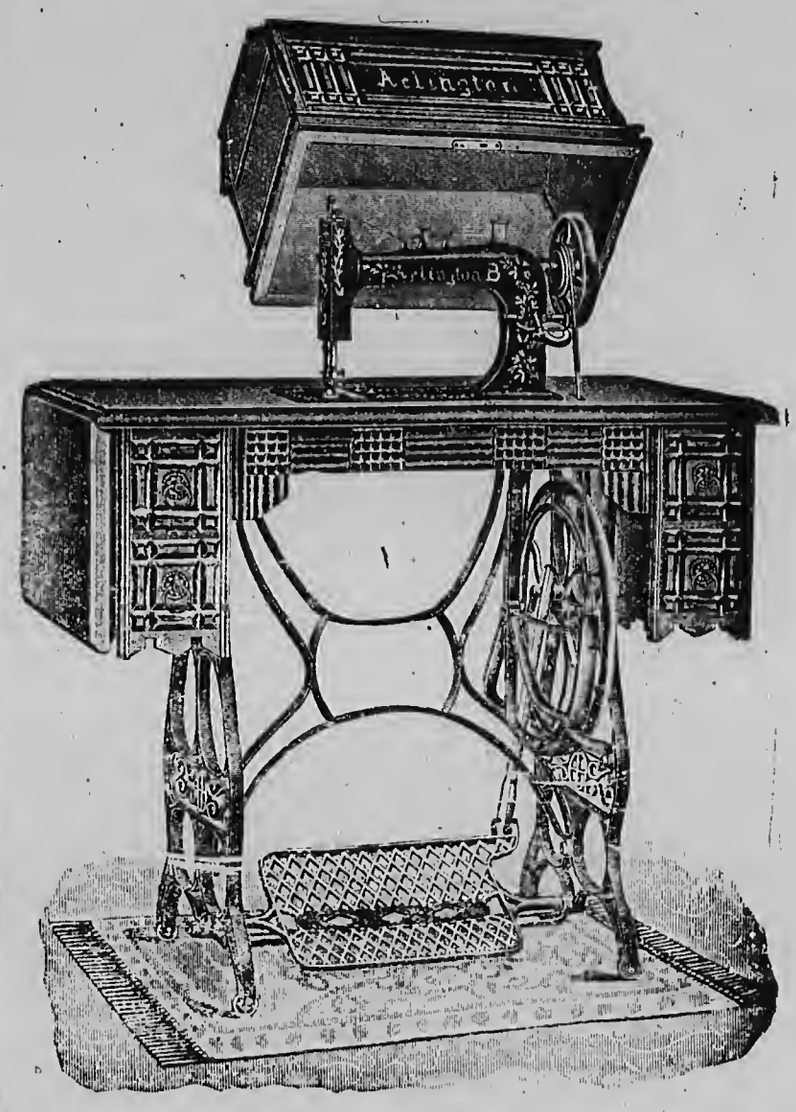
Our Machine Offer.

New Improved High-Arm "Arlington B" Self-Threading Sewing Machine.

A recorded certificate of warranty for 10 years accompanies each machine. The "Arlington B" is complete in every detail, combining all modern and late improvements, such as automatic bobbin winder, self-threading shuttle, self-setting needle, upper spring tension, etc.



The "Arlington B" self-threading sewing machine has a large high arm, its mechanical appearance is perfect, its adjustment is absolute, positive take-up, convenient foot rest, with the best style furniture, either oak or walnut; in addition to which each machine is furnished with the best steel combination attachments free, as follows: One tucker, one foot ruffler, one set of plain hemmers (five different widths up to seven-eighths of an inch), one binder, one shirring plate and one under-braider, packed in a handsome velvet lined case. It is also furnished with one foot hemmer, one screw driver, one wrench, one oil can with oil, one gauge, one package of needles, six bobbins and one instruction book.

THE HEAD is strong and substantial; has large space under the arm for handling bulky goods, is finely japanned and protected by a hard finish. Has so few bearings and friction points that it is easily oiled and kept clean.

NEEDLE BAR is round, with adjustable bearing polished and fitted, insuring great wear, and can run a long time without oiling. It has a slack dip motion, relieving the strain upon the thread when the shuttle is passing through the loop. Using the adjustable take-up, controlling the threads perfectly on all grades of work.

IMPROVED AUTOMATIC BOBBIN WINDER which is so positive and reliable in its action that an imperfectly wound bobbin is an impossibility. So simple that a child can easily operate it. This valuable attachment renders possible a perfect control of shuttle tension.

SELF THREADING—The "Arlington B" is self-threading, requiring no change from light to heavy work. Uses double thread, and makes the lock stitch.

THE NEEDLE is the same as used on the New Home machine, and is self-setting both as to height and position with reference to shuttle, with short blade and long shank, insuring great strength; finely polished.

SELF-THREADING SHUTTLE—A perfect steel cylinder shuttle with delicate and perfect tension, open at one end to allow the bobbin to be inserted without displacing any of the parts; runs loose in the shell, without spring centre or point bearings, thus insuring an even tension; can be threaded in the dark, and easily understood.

LOOSE PULLEY for winding the bobbin without running the machine requires no change or adjustment, nor is it necessary to remove the work from the machine.

PARTS SUBJECT TO WEAR are made of the finest steel, case hardened, light and noiseless and are very durable.

If the present war scare has done damage to business interests by unsettling confidence in Wall street, and giving speculators a chance to depress prices, it has at least afforded the advocates of improved national defenses an opportunity of successfully impressing their views upon Congress.

General Fitzhugh Lee has written a letter to the Christian Herald, of New York, pointing out the great need at this time of founding an orphan asylum in Cuba to care for the poor, homeless children that there abound. The Herald has offered to pay the rent of the building and the cost of maintaining it for a year.

A million-dollar law suit and one of great public importance as affecting land titles in the Yazoo Delta, was argued in chancery court, Bolivar county, on Feb. 24. The Levee Board brought suit against the Yazoo and Mississippi Valley Railroad Company to recover about 15,000 acres of fine land in this county worth over a million dollars.

For many weeks past the bank clearings at this point have shown a good gain over the same week the previous year, so that the total bank clearings to date since Sept. 1 are now well ahead of last season, and that, too, notwithstanding the almost complete stoppage of business during fully eight weeks last Fall, and the complete stagnation in cotton speculation which has prevailed during the present Winter.

The citizens of Philadelphia seem to be already reaping the advantages of the transferrence of the gas works from municipal control to a private company. In less than two months the candle power of the gas has been notably improved, and further improvement is promised just as soon as the new machinery gets into working order. There has been no increase in the price of the gas, neither has there been any decrease.

The conservatism and prudence of the President and his advisors are now being put to a severe test. The war fever in the capital is at its height. The city is flooded daily with sensational newspapers, filled with inflammatory articles and wild reports. In the face of all the pressure that is being brought to bear on the President he remains self-possessed and calm, and will await the results of the investigation into the cause of the Maine disaster. So far no facts officially ascertained relating to that cause have been given to the public.

IMPORTANT NOTICE.

To the Pastors and Sunday-school Workers of the North Mississippi Conference:

Your attention is respectfully called to the following item in the report of our Sunday-school Board, as found on page 22 in the Conference Minutes:

"The Board finds itself in possession of a small fund not needed for other purposes, which it has resolved to use in replenishing Sunday-school libraries. It offers to every Sunday-school in the Conference one dollar for every two dollars raised for such purpose, the maximum amount to be furnished any one school being $15, and the treasurer is authorized to appropriate the fund to this purpose when demanded by the superintendent and pastor, and when the demand shall be accompanied by a certificate that any sum of money is in hand for the purpose."

Now, there ought certainly to be a great number of responses to this very liberal proposition, and that right soon. What an opportunity to put into circulation thousands of the very best books for our children and youth! We have these books singly and in sets of various grades and prices adapted to all needs and pecuniary conditions. Let us avail ourselves of the opportunity to put them into use.

It has been demonstrated that with a little earnest effort made by the pastor and superintendent a library can be put into almost any Sunday-school. Think of it! Fifty volumes of select books for $12.50, that at retail would cost $18 or $20, and then one-third of that amount paid by the Sunday-school Board. Other size and price libraries in proportion. This getting choice books at less than half price.

In addition to libraries for general use, each school should provide a special teachers' library. There are a number of books that are of great value and helpfulness to those who would be successful Sunday-school workers. There is evident need in many places of more intelligence in this Christian service. In order to proper appreciation of the work and interest in it, there needs to be more knowledge of the Bible and of Sunday-school history and successful methods, a requisite amount of which may be obtained by a small outlay of money and a little time devoted regularly to reading. Let the schools procure some or all of the books for officers and teachers mentioned on pages 74 and 75 of our "Sunday-school Catalogue, 1897," and there will soon be apparent improvement in many respects. There is as great necessity for up-to-date teaching and teachers in the Sunday-schools as in the secular, and we must have it so or lose ground in this all-important field of our church work.

It is hoped that our pastors and superintendents will at an early day, if not already done, read this generous offer of our Sunday-school Board to their schools, and so present the matter that the children and parents can see what is in store for them. Let every school have a fair chance. Many have already accepted the proposition, and we are sending a number of the libraries.

For these books and libraries, either for teachers or general use, I will gladly send catalogues and any information desired and fill orders promptly. In ordering these libraries on these conditions, the order must be accompanied by a certificate addressed to the treasurer of the Sunday-school Board, stating the amount of money invested by the school, signed by the pastor and superintendent. Yours in the work,

G. W. BACHMAN,
Sunday-school Agent.

I am in my seventy-third year, and for fifty years I have been a great sufferer from indigestion, constipation and biliousness. I have tried all the remedies advertised for these diseases, and got no permanent relief. About one year ago, the disease assuming a more severe and dangerous form, I became very weak, and lost flesh rapidly. I commenced using Dr. Mozley's Lemon Elixir. I gained twelve pounds in three months. My strength and health, my appetite and my digestion were perfectly restored, and now I feel as young and vigorous as I ever did in my life.

THE MOST ATTRACTIVE ROUTE TO BALTIMORE VIA WASHINGTON CITY.

The Chesapeake and Ohio railway with its connections offers by far the most interesting route to the Conference in Baltimore in May. The route from Louisville is through the Blue Grass region of Kentucky, passing Frankfort, the State Capital, Lexington, and the home of Henry Clay. At Ashland the line from Cincinnati is joined; the route from Cincinnati being along the banks of the beautiful Ohio river for 165 miles. Shortly after entering West Virginia the banks of the Kanawha river are followed, Kanawha Falls is passed and the canons of New River are penetrated. After skirting the picturesque Greenbrier for 50 miles, the heights of the Alleghenies are reached, and next comes the Shenandoah Valley, the Blue Ridge Mountains and Piedmont section, the most beautiful of the Appalachain Valley. After passing through Charlottsville and Gordonsville, the route is through the most memorable battle-fields of the Civil War, among them Cedar Mountain, Culpepper, Rappahannock, Warrenton Junction, Manassas and Bull Run.

For complete description of the C. & O. Route address C. B. Ryan, A. G. P. A., Cincinnati, Ohio.

LAND OF THE UNSETTING SUN.

BY W. C. MARTIN.

O how precious the promise of God
That, when earth's gloomy shadows are done,
We shall carol with joy in the light of his face
In the land of the unsetting sun.

O how often I dream of the day
When the conquest at last shall be won;
And my soul shall rejoice in the presence of God
In the land of the unsetting sun.

Sweetest joys that we have here below
Are but gladness celestial begun;
Are the faintest of beams from the glory of God
In the land of the unsetting sun.

I can bear all the sorrows of earth
Since I know, when my course shall be run,
That the tears shall be wiped from my wondering eyes
In the land of the unsetting sun.

O, my Father, I care not how soon
The whole web of my life shall be spun.
I am eager to bask in thy heavenly glow,
In the land of the unsetting sun.

Ref.—O, a gladness supernal shall reign,
And my wearisome toil shall be done,
When I enter the gates of the city of light
In the land of the unsetting sun.

THE SIGNS OF THE TIMES.

The moving years, as they roll onward, bearing with them our hopes and dreams, ambitions and destinies, call to us ever and anon to halt for awhile, that we may take our bearings and see whither the tide is drifting us.

In this survey, first, of our social and political conditions, we have cause to gratify our highest pride and arouse our loftiest patriotism that we are citizens of the mightiest of the nations of the earth. The star-spangled banner, as it kisses with its silken folds the genial breezes of our favored clime, waves over a nation that has carried our common birthright, the Anglo-Saxon name, to the highest pinnacles that human excellence has yet attained, and has bestowed as a benediction on the nations of the earth the blessings of our civilization.

The three great departments of government, like the three principles in mechanics, are so co-ordinated and adjusted in our Federal Constitution as to secure to our people the blessings of civil liberty. We have therein natural liberty regulated by law, thus producing constitutional liberty. The common law, declared to be the perfection of human reason, regulates our dealings, man with man, and our social institutions, and the common law has its foundation and original in the Holy Bible. The early sages of the law accepted the teachings of the Holy Bible as the sure and steadfast groundwork of social polity. And nowhere is this more clearly exemplified than in the establishment of the legal status of the sexes. The common law, following the Bible, declared the unity of husband and wife, and the Christian home, as the law of the family relation. And who can declare, who can know the stupendous good, the immeasurable benefit these provisions have wielded in our racial development? And we must here pause to declare our disapproval—nay, verily, our severest condemnation—of the efforts of those advanced thinkers who would revolutionize the relations of the sexes, and who would take from the Word of God what they, in the height of their wicked presumption, have been pleased to call the Pauline doctrine in reference to women. St. Paul, speaking by inspiration, laid down duties of woman as wife and mother, and particularly and pointedly declared her relation to the public dispensation of the Word of God. And these declarations of the inspired apostle are binding on all Christians. Woman's great function and office in life is that of wife and mother, and the divine law, human institutions, and her physical nature, are all regulated and directed towards her fulfilling this office and duty; and her equalizing with and assuming the duties of man are hostile to and interfere with her accomplishing her great mission.

The Christian religion is woman's best and dearest friend. It is the religion of Christ, and that alone, that has made her the wife of one husband; that has freed her, in Christian lands, from the degradation of polygamy, concubinage, and the horrors of the harem. Here she sits, queen regnant of the hearts and homes of true and loyal husbands. Her own, her loving children, cluster around her hearthstone, and when kneeling at her side she directs their infant prayers to that God who, in the majesty and ineffable glory of his transcendent goodness, mercy, and beneficence, has given them being and blessed them with a Christian home. The Bible has ordained the social and religious status of woman, and it is the bounden duty of all true Christians to support these institutions established by divine authority, and to stamp with the mark of their severest condemnation any interference with that which God has ordained.

We may lay it down as a true principle that whatever is opposed to good government and rightful authority is likewise opposed to the Bible, since the Bible teaches obedience to lawful authority. Some people are disposed to confound license with liberty, and to cry out that they are restrained of their liberty when they are restrained by lawful authority. There is much true wisdom in the proverb, that where ignorance is bliss, it is folly to be wise. And I very much fear that the education of the masses tends to make them dissatisfied. When the masses are educated they are made alive to things of which they were ignorant in their natural state, and they are ready to say that it is unjust that some men should roll in wealth and luxury, and enjoy many things of which they are denied. He says: "Why educate me, when I have no time to read? Here is my wealthy employer, who has time to enjoy his education, whilst I must toil from early morn until nightfall, and seek my humble cot to rest my weary limbs." He feels that he is the equal of his wealthy employer, is educated as well as he, and rebels against what he considers an injustice; hence we have one class arrayed against the other, and from one extreme the discontented man goes to another, until finally we have anarchists. It is useless to tell such men that the Bible enjoins submission to lawful authority. They refuse such teachings. They declare that the church favors the rich; that they are banded together; and hence we find that the anarchist and the infidel go together, or, rather, that the anarchist passes quickly into infidelity.

Again: We find men rebelling against lawful authority through ambition. A good many years ago, in the northern section of our country, some able and talented men went outside of orthodox preaching to discuss politics. Those were times of great excitement, and these men, being men of recognized ability, and doubtless feeling within themselves that they were prepared to enlighten the people on the questions then at issue, and being ambitious, they yielded to the temptation, and launched forth into the discussion of politics from the pulpit. This was a profanation of the sanctuary, and that, too, for the gratification of their personal ambition. The evil example set by these men has yielded its fruit, and to-day, in some sections of this country, in large cities, aldermen and other ambitious men are addressing the people from the pulpit, and almost anything is heard from the pulpit other than the pure gospel.

Again: There is a mighty change going on in the relation of the sexes. We see things done openly every day that, if they had been done, as they are now done, forty years ago, the same would have brought public odium on the doer thereof. In many places the weaker sex has come out from that backward and retired position they once occupied. They have thrown off that shield and covering of timidity (to use no stronger word), and walk boldly into the ranks of men, to be men, so far as the physical limitations of their natures will admit. We don't say this of all. There are some noble exceptions. There are those who will have none of this; who, drawing around them their spotless robes of purity, modesty and reserve, and arising in all the glory of their womanliness, assert their royal right to be ladies. Thank God our Southern women are of this latter kind, and God forbid that the day should ever come when our Southern ladies shall adopt these odious foreign ideas!

The stream of public justice does not flow on with that clear purity it once had. In some places there is too much respecting the persons of men in judgment; too much seeking to shape the judgments and decrees of the courts, so as to make them agree with popular opinion. What has any upright judge to do with popular opinion? How dare any man go on the bench and do anything else other than to declare the law as it is written? How dare he barter the people's sacred right for popular applause? Will he, for fear of any man's frown, or to court the favor of any class, trail his judicial robes in the filth and slums? Has he not solemnly sworn before High Heaven to declare the law as it is written? How can he grasp the hand of his honest fellow-citizen, whose confiding suffrage has elevated him to that high position, when the hand he offers is tainted with the guilty bribe? There is very little direct bribery of judges in this country at this day, but there is that which is as great, and, perhaps, a greater obstacle to the administration of the law than is bribery, and that is favoritism, partiality, and the respecting of the persons of men in judgment. You find judges who seem to so shape their judgments as to keep in touch with the rich and powerful. And a judge of this character can run a long time, and even be well spoken of, before he is finally brought down, since, as the poor and helpless and timid suitor goes his way from the place of judgment, there goes along with him the rich, powerful and successful adversary; and whilst the timid, injured man may whisper to his confidential friend that he was not treated fairly, his powerful adversary will be exclaiming on the street corner and other public places: "Oh, righteous judge! Oh, most excellent man! A second Daniel come to judgment!" And thus the unrighteous judge has his praises sounded by those who are calculated, from their position and influence, to make the people believe that this unjust man is a most excellent judge. But while the mills of the gods grind slow, they grind exceeding fine, and sooner or later the cause of the poor and injured will be declared in trumpet tones, and he who has passed before the people as a faithful officer will stand before them revealed in all his sin, fraud, and iniquity.

Another sign of the times, which portends no good, is the assaults made on the marriage relation. This comes from several directions and in several different shapes. Thus, in many of the States there are statutes allowing the wife to sue her husband. Oh, spirits of the departed ages of the law! Ye men who reverenced the common law of Baron and Feme, and were wont to say that only the transcendent power of Parliament could dissolve the bonds of matrimony, what would you say could you come to life again, could you once more walk among men, and behold a wife suing her husband in a justice of the peace court, and half of the children testifying for the father, and the other half testifying for the mother? Would you, wise men, have ever instituted this seminary of perjury? Would you have ever so lightly esteemed the marriage relation? In fine, would you have done this? The wife, should she be unsuccessful, would naturally desire a divorce, and accordingly we find that incompatibility of temperament shall be a ground of divorce; so the wife, by suing her husband for ten cents, may do two things: she may get a judgment for her ten cents, and also get a divorce from her husband, for certainly her suing her husband would be evidence of incompatibility of temperament, and thus furnish ground for her divorce. The freedom with which divorces are granted is an assault on the marriage relation.

And again: You hear, now and then, and much too frequently, a loose way of talking, and, above all, you see a freedom of acting which signifies evil, and only evil. Good old ideas of the sanctity of the marriage relation are certainly not at a premium just now.

The Christian home is the bulwark of our civilization. Above all things, let us preserve the purity of our homes. Let the father be in this home the head of the family, the mother, the true and holy mother, the idol of our affections, and the children tender plants around the table, looking up to and gathering inspiration from father and mother. Such homes in the past have nurtured and reared children who have reflected luster on the name of parent; sons on whose broad shoulders have safely rested the cares of the State, and daughters whose graces of person and character have made them the pride and ornament of loving hearts. Such families are the hope of the country. To them can we look for the men and women who are to take our places when we have lain down the burden of life. The blessings of God are in such a house.

As the eye scans the dim vista of coming years, we can see a noble edifice, rising higher and still higher, until its spires and minarets greet the god of day as he comes rejoicing in the east, and the majesty of its noble proportions stand in exalted grandeur where its pilasters round are set, and Doric pillars overlaid with golden architrave; nor do they want cornice or frieze with bossy sculptures graven; the eternal sunlight of peace and prosperity rests upon it; fair science, enriched with the learning of the present, mellowed with the wisdom of the past, wrests from the reluctant grasp of nature the wonderful creations of the unfettered genius of man; art, with her sculptured adornments, wherein the chisel of future Angelos shall cause to live in sentient beauty the graces of the human form divine, and the plastic brush of unborn Raphaels shall paint their own immortality, strews in rich profusion the generous products of her wealth. The nations of the earth throng together as they press forward to pay their tribute at the shrine of this, the mightiest of them all, the perfection of their common humanity. In rapt gaze we linger, when, lo! a mighty angel, with a trumpet blast resounding to the four corners of the earth, proclaims, "The foundation of this edifice rests on Christian homes."

LAYMAN OR SEXTUS.

A COLLEGIATE EDUCATION FOR GIRLS UNDER CHRISTIAN INFLUENCES.

BY REV. J. W. CHAMBERS,
President of Whitworth College.

Since it was the influence of Christianity which created the demand for the collegiate education of women, and since it has been the combined efforts of Christian men and women which has made such an education possible, it seems a matter of grave presumption for anyone to suppose that the human race could be improved by removing this influence from the education of our girls.

It might not be conceded to be a universal truth, but certainly it is a general truth that the home influence is the paramount influence in our present civilization; and no one is brave enough to assert otherwise than that the wife and mother creates, sustains and impresses this home influence. It is no great stretch of the imagination, and certainly close to the entire truth, when it is asserted that the entire moral uplift of the nation depends upon the intellectual strength of the moral character of our women.

After the last critic has been heard and the most stubborn facts laid bare, it remains true that the best characters the world has ever known have been those which have most nearly approached the moral perfection of the New Testament; and Christ, no matter how viewed, stands forth as the perfect model of a perfect life. Hence, no matter how little or how much of the divine likeness there may be in the individual, the universal testimony of the nations is that Christianity is the purest form of morality known to the world. Hence to attempt to educate either a man or a woman without this great moral incentive daily stimulating to seek for the best soul as well as the best mental development, is a mistake of judgment which could only result in a cultivated barbarism, which would be forever seeking a resting-point for that inherited faith which reaches after eternity and longs for perfection. This kind of an educated woman could only make a restless factor in the world's development. Her own acquisitions would be as goads forever driving her on to fresh fields as unsatisfying and as disappointing as those just left, and would send her out at the end of her earth's pilgrimage into a realm of outer darkness and bitter despair.

So strongly has the Christ of the New Testament laid hold of the hearts and minds of Mississippi that a man or woman who does not believe in Christ, and attempts to practice his teachings, could not be elected to a professorship in any of our State schools, and would be tolerated in very few of our country districts. Mississippi, as a State, is for "God and home and native land," and everywhere the people call for consecrated men and women to teach their sons and daughters.

It remains, however, a debatable question as to whether this "Christian influence" exerts its greatest power in State, in private, or in denominational institutions. Without making any invidious distinctions and avoiding all odious comparisons, it appears that for these several reasons Christianity is most powerful in a denominational institution:

1. The institution is built to glorify Christ. This is its chief end, not simply to produce educated women, but educated Christian women.

2. Its president and officials are held to a strict moral account, not only as to their actions, but also as to their doctrines, and a positive demand is made that Christ shall be presented to the girls as a present Savior and an eternal friend.

3. Such an institution stands for a positive, definite conception of Christ and a full creed harmonizing the teachings of the Bible, and present always a steady and consistent view of its doctrine.

4. Gathered around such an institution are all those denominational ties which sends a girl home ready for every good word and work, familiar with the objects and aims of her own church, and ready to push its claims.

5. Around such an institution is gathered all that weight of influence, all that spiritual power which comes from heroic sacrifice on its behalf, and from the prayers and tears of the saints. For these and other reasons it is my profound conviction that in denominational institutions the Christ power is the controlling power, and here, better than anywhere else, can a girl grow up into the "beauty of holiness."

A TRUE STATEMENT.

"The higher life is not a life on wings. It is not so much concerned with soaring as with sowing. Neither is it life on a dizzy pinnacle, above the reach of the tempter. Neither the 'second blessing' nor the fortieth comes in the form of a paid-up insurance policy. We never get to a point of safety above that of the householder who can not completely shut up his house, and who must, therefore, be always on the watch. We can keep the doors of our mouths locked most of the time, but it is needful that the ear-gates and eye-windows stand open a large part of the day. We can not keep the tempter from approaching us, wherever we may be; and in these days of unspeakable pictures, which meet the eye at every turn, it is hardly possible to keep him from slipping in at the windows now and then, and sometimes he runs in at one of the gates before we can shut them. There is no time in life when the soul of man can turn the key and safely lie down to slumber. We are on watch till the Master comes. If the tempter slips in at the window, we will show whether we were to blame by the reception we give him. If we invite him to stay for one short, sweet moment, we are culprits; but if we immediately give chase with 'the sword of the Spirit,' crying to heaven as we go, we will not blush for shame when the Master of the house comes."

The above, taken from the Richmond Christian Advocate, contains much truth that many would do well seriously to ponder. There is no greater delusion than that there are places in grace, or attainments in the divine life, where we are free from the temptor. We believe with the good editor that the higher life is more "concerned with sowing than with soaring." The enemy is ever on the alert, and there is never a time in life when the soul of man can turn the key and safely lie down to slumber." Many, we fear, are deceived by false teaching and false theories to believe that they are kept from the power of the temptor by the good hand of God, when, in point of fact, they are "at ease in Zion."—Pittsburg Advocate.

The human will must be harmonized with the divine will, the human spirit must be reunited to the divine Spirit, or hopeless disaster overtakes the soul. To accomplish this restoration is the work of the invisible Christ within us. His Spirit broods always over the chaotic waste of our restless lives—restless and shapeless until re created into the image of his Father, and reinspired with the breath of his own eternal being. We find ourselves, we know ourselves, we are ourselves, only in him.—Lucy Larcom.

A NEW INDUSTRY.

The destruction of American forests has now reached such a point that far-sighted authorities who are familiar with all the facts regarding the timber production of the United States do not hesitate to say that the planting of new forests is certain to be an important American industry in the coming century. It is likely that this industry will be unique, in the fact that so many years will be required to bring the fruition of the labor and capital expended; but, at the same time, the profits in the new industry will be so large that the money and time will be well expended.—Boston Daily Advertiser.

THE SWEETEST SONGS.

BY CORA C. BASS.

The sweetest songs are left unsung,
The sweetest themes unread,
The sweetest chords are left unstrung,
The sweetest words unsaid.
How strange it is, and yet how true,
Surpassing mortal ken,
We still can catch a blessed view
Of thought and times and men.

Though brightest paths remain unknown
And few the heights we tread,
Though we must struggle on alone
With deepest tears unshed;
Although our hearts are anguish-wrung
And ev'ry effort pain,
If we can keep another young,
We have not lived in vain.

'Tis said the fairest buds decay;
Perhaps they do, and yet,
Upon the darkest, dullest way,
How many flowers are met!
The happy hours so quickly flee
We sigh to see them go,
When out upon life's troubled sea
The moments move so slow.

Shall sweetest songs be left unsung?
The sweetest themes unread?
The sweetest words unsaid?
When we have but to do our best,
The very best we can,
To have the future richly blest,
Of God and truth and man.

A SHIPWRECK, AND WHAT CAME OF IT.

A STORY THAT IS NOT ALL FICTION.

BY REV. W. P. ANDREWS,

Author of "Two Epistles: I. To Professors of Perfect Love. II. To Opposers of the 'Second Blessing.'"

CHAPTER I.

THE SHIPWRECK.

It was a precious cargo that the little ship "Evangelista" bore when she sailed out of San Francisco harbor one bright June morning in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and ninety-seven. The vessel had been built for Capt. James Allbright, a Christian sailor, whose heart had been stirred by the spiritual needs of the Asiatics, as they had been manifested to him during his several voyages to their shores. He felt moved by the Holy Spirit to do all in his power to ameliorate their condition. With him "all" did not mean merely "something," a "part." His means were laid upon the altar, and his life also.

He took into his counsels Rev. John Fullilove, a consecrated young minister, who also had heard the cry of his copper-colored brothers saying, "Come over and help us." Japan was agreed upon as the field of their labors. It was determined to establish several mission stations, which should, at least in part, be self-supporting. The "Evangelista" was built as a missionary ship, to be used in transporting the missionaries and their belongings across the Pacific, and for their constant service between the various mission stations. While the vessel was being prepared volunteers were called for. Twenty-four men and women, of various ages, among whom were five married couples, responded to the call, and were accepted to be co-laborers of Capt. Allbright and his associate.

In an impressive service, in which several friends, besides the missionaries, participated, the "Evangelista" was solemnly dedicated to Almighty God. The service over, the missionary company bade their friends adieu, and the ship was launched, and soon passed, before a favorable breeze, through the Golden Gate.

Bating the usual amount of seasickness, the first five days out were uneventful. Of course, there was much joyful singing of hymns, prayer, reading the Scriptures, and religious conversation. The one all absorbing topic was the heathen and his needs. If it was known that there were any differences of religious opinions and experience among them, this caused them to be forgotten. To all appearances they were of one heart and of one mind.

About midnight of the sixth night out a fearful storm arose. The vessel was driven before the wind as if it had been a top. The crew was powerless. Of course, the storm had not continued long before all on board were aroused and dressed. Such of our missionaries as could wrought with the sailors, while none of them failed to pray. There was earnest pleading, but no frantic cries. After this manner they prayed:

"O blessed Father! the sea is of thy creation, and the winds are subject unto thee. Also we are thy servants; aye, more, thy children. We long to serve thee. If it be consistent with thy will, rebuke the wind, still the storm, and save us from a watery grave. But thou knowest what is best. If by having our work cut short, we can best glorify thee, thy will be done. But O, Father, send by whom thou wilt, yet save the people who sit in darkness, unto whom we have been persuaded thou wouldst have us go."

At length the vessel was driven upon a rock. A rent was made in her hull, and her doom sealed. This occurred just as the storm had spent its force. Day had also dawned, by the light of which it was seen that they were near some land. The boats were lowered, and life-savers called into requisition. These were enough for all. Scarcely had the last of them committed himself to the sea when the vessel went to pieces.

Without the loss of a life, missionaries and crew escaped to the land, which proved to be a small island, fertile, but uninhabited. They kneeled upon the ground and thanked the Lord for having wrought for them this deliverance, and committed themselves afresh to his care.

OUR HABITS.

It has been said that we are creatures of habit, and we certainly are, to some extent at least; and Prof. W. F. Tillett, of Vanderbilt University, says in "Theological Discussions" that "volitions put forth result in acts, acts often repeated fix habits, habits long continued in make character, and character, when fixed, determines destiny." We accept this as axiomatic, and hence the great importance of good habits. Habits once formed are difficult to break, especially bad habits. Good habits, alas! are too easily broken, and they are sometimes broken—at least the enjoyment in them is in a measure lost—by merely local circumstances. The good Dr. Andrew Hunter, of the Little Rock Conference, once said in a sermon on secret prayer: "Brethren and sisters, have a place, and form the habit of visiting that place often, and it will become the dearest place to you on earth." No doubt every Christian can bear testimony to the truth of this. We read of two ministers in Missouri who were going to hold service in a certain vicinity. At a certain time, and on the night before, they lodged at the home of a pious layman who was familiarly called "Uncle Aaron." The next morning they were walking about the premises and farm, and, leading into a copse, they discovered a very narrow path, and at its terminus there was a sapling, worn entirely smooth, and near it were two impressions, as though some person had been habitually kneeling there. On returning they told Uncle Aaron their discovery. "Yes," he replied, "that is the place of my daily resort; and while I love the services of my church, that grove is the dearest place to me in this world." After the lapse of years that grove was cleared up and cultivated, and Uncle Aaron said that he sustained an irreparable loss.

It is a trial for a faithful pastor to sever his connection with an appreciative people. Attachments and habits are formed to which his heart is bound as with hooks of steel.

During the writer's three years' pastorate at Franklin the nearest way to Main street and the post-office was to enter the back door of the church and come out at the front door. In passing through we formed a habit of kneeling at the chancel to pray. This habit was never broken in the three years. Three or four times a day there was a kneeling, a wrestling, and a feast on things unseen. Oh, how we missed it when we left! In our early youth, in Western Kentucky, we knelt at the root of a young oak to pray for a long time. The habit was broken when we entered the Southern Army in the cruel war. On visiting the old home (our brother's) in 1895 we hunted for that tree, and found it. It was on the rocky hill-side of a woods pasture, and was green and flourishing. We inquired for the old log church in which we were converted on Thursday, Sept. 7, 1854; but it had rotted down long ago, and a much nicer one stood near the same place. Now, we have written largely about self, and wish to hear from some one else.

A TRIBUTE TO THE MEMORY OF THE LATE REV. JOSEPH B. WALKER, D. D.

MR. EDITOR: It is always with a sense of profound sadness that we listen, in response to the disciplinary question, "What preachers have died during the past year?" to the description of the individual characteristics, work, worth and virtues of the heroes who have died upon the battle-field. It was with a deepened sense of this sadness we awaited the reports of the Committee on Memorials at the last session of "our" Louisiana Annual Conference. And as each of the five names were called, and each in turn were eulogized, we felt that surely this was the hero of the occasion, the victor of the cross; yet more especially did we feel interested as the name of the one whose name appears at the head of this article was called. He, to our mind, was the "veteran" of the Conference. A man well-known and much beloved wherever known, he was to me an especial friend, a kind pastor, and a wise counselor.

My first acquaintance with Dr. Walker was as preacher in charge of the Louisiana Avenue Church, of New Orleans, where I was associated with him as member, steward, and later as local preacher, during much of the time of his four years of ministrations to that people. His preaching ability was of the very best type; his style was exalted. He at times was pathetic, and often eloquent. There comes to my mind just at present a somnolent member of the Doctor's church, who was also a steward, but a rather inconsistent member, at whom the Doctor seemed often to delight in hurling the anathemas of the law; but while the law vehemently declared that "the 'soul' that sinneth, it shall die," this "body" invariably slumbered.

Another incident of his life comes up to me. It was in midsummer, when the city was sweltering from the effects of extra warm weather, and when many of those able to go had left the city for seaside resorts, or other Summer retreats. The Doctor had stayed by his flock, and the modest chapel—where services were held—still served as a nucleus to a small band of the more devout which congregated there. After preaching to a small congregation, at which time he had made as labored an effort as if though the house were full, he had dismissed the service, and was just coming out of the church, when Sister I. Coffree, a widowed sister of my mother's, who was at that time keeping house for her brother, Mr. Geo. Thomson, asked the Doctor home to dine with her—a courtesy which apparently had been neglected by all others; and then, turning to me, she requested of me to offer the Doctor my arm, as he looked tired and exhausted. My mind almost instinctively refused. The thought paramount to me just at that moment was: "Can it be possible a mind so strong, a will-power so self-assertive, and intellectual faculties so active, perceiving, portraying, discriminating, explaining so minutely the every element of the spiritual life; a voice so voluminous, lungs so strong—can it be possible this man is weak?" This was all thought in a moment of time. I offered the Doctor my arm, which he apparently was more than glad to accept. The moment he took my arm I shuddered for the weakness of the man—"a reed shaken by the wind," "an aspen leaf trembling in the breeze;" yea, a man exhausted from the effort; yea, drained of vitality, of strength, of zeal, of life, that others might have these very characteristics. Such was this man of research as he stood by my side. We went together to dinner, where, when we reached the parlor, the Doctor sank exhausted in a chair, and such company as he was—how delightful in conversation, how exact in manners, how proper in deportment; the whole how edifying. There was wit interspersed in his narrative, luminous nuggets of pleasantry and satire drawn from scriptural texts, peculiar renderings of familiar quotations from Scripture, and familiar quotations peculiarly rendered and often misapplied to Scripture. Such was the repast to which the two of us were invited; and in such company there was a truly sacred influence which emanated from and was gathered up only by those who were thus permitted to come into the inner sanctuary of his social and religious life.

I feel sure that much of the power and inspiration of the man, as a sweet halo, abides still with those who were permitted to sit under and enjoy his Sunday pulpit ministrations. He steadied my careening bark in the midst of the storms and whirlpools of city life and temptations. I feel to-day that I am living on the gospel sustenance that was evolved and gratuitously bestowed upon his flock during those years; and how many to-day, were they permitted to speak, might say the same?

And just here permit me to enter a protest against the idea that "spasmodic preaching" is sufficient; that "a camp meeting occasion is all we need," for while souls may be saved in these seasons of grace, yet that is not all, for who can estimate the worth to themselves of the privilege of the regular pastorate and the Sunday's gospel message?

No, Dr. Walker, "being dead, yet speaketh," and in tones such as are heard and seen only in the deep ebullitions of Christian characters, many of whom were wrought out then, and whom God alone knows, and the worth of which eternity alone can reveal. What a power for good such a life! How potent its influence! The class meeting, when led by him, was a special season of grace.

I feel that I owe a special debt of gratitude to this man of God, both for the position of honor which I hold in the church of God, and for the places of trust which, although granted to me by the franchise of my brethren, yet which I would be ungrateful of without, and which can never be satisfactorily acknowledged to his credit.

With such recollections I can not refrain from writing, "The love of Christ constraineth me," and yet there is something unsatisfactory in such a record; a record of the birth, the number of years, the place and occupation of life, and the place and time of one's death. The radiant countenance, the pleasant demeanor, born of love; the sympathetic nature, the noble bearing, and the brilliant eye, these live only in the hearts and memories of those left behind. Thus it is in this case, our friend lives; he lives in the redupplicated Christian lives of those left behind.

THE COST OF BEING A MEMBER OF THE W. F. M. S.; AND DOES IT PAY?

(Concluded.)

There are two self supporting churches in China, several large Missionary Societies, 9 Epworth Leagues, 19 Sunday-schools. Last year the native Christians contributed $623.85 for different church purposes. At our hospital at Souchow over four thousand received prescriptions and treatment under our efficient Dr. Anne Walter Fearn and her successor, Dr. Margaret Polk. A number of these patients were from the upper class and paid fees. A creditable per cent. of the girls in our boarding schools pay board and tuition.

At Durango, Mexico, for one quarter $237.82 was paid for tuition, with a promise of still larger amounts. In Korea, the last field entered by the Woman's Board, the spirit of liberality is more manifest than in any heathen country; they seem quite ambitious to become self-supporting. News from all our missionary stations is most encouraging; many doors are open that we might enter; but money belonging to the Lord is withheld and his work retarded. Think you that you will escape when the heathen rise up in judgment, and you having the consciousness of never having offered an earnest prayer in their behalf or gave a penny for their deliverance? If our people would only adopt systematic giving, our barns would overflow with plenty. The Lord would heal our land and our vines would no longer cast their fruit before the time in the field. Our whole nation has robbed God in tithes and offerings. "The law of tithes" was given when the race was in its childhood, and the relations of money to the kingdom of God were radically different from what they are now. The Israelite was not held responsible for the conversion of the world. Money had no such spiritual equivalent then as now; it did not represent the salvation of the heathen. The Jew was required simply to make provision for his own worship; and its limited demands might appropriately be met by levying upon a certain proportion of his increase. Palestine was his world, his kindred the race; but under the Christian dispensation the world is our country and the race our kindred. If the Jew was bound by law to render unto the Lord the tenth, surely as Christians, with the manifold gift of God, and the love of Christ constraining us, should render even more. No person unprejudiced could read the Bible and not be convinced that God's children after Pentecost gave more than the tenth, and Paul tells us that the Macedonian Church gave even "beyond" their power, the ten in the minimum, not the maximum, and yet you say you never felt impressed to give, go, send or pray for missions. Did, then, the command of Christ, his last command, delivered under the most solemn circumstances, make no impression upon you? Do the woes and degradation of the heathen and their piteous cries make no impression upon you? Alas! of what is your heart made that it does not feel? He that hath eyes and ears and does not feel may well tremble for his own salvation. Friends, we want you to count the cost. If you will take that trouble, you will surely be convinced that the investment pays a hundredfold, for this unselfish work (the only real unselfish work many of us do for God) is sure to bring its reward even in this life.

Taste the luxury of doing good by self-denial and free-will offerings, and you will only regret that you began so late.

RESTITUTION.

A member of the Christian Church who had contracted a loan for a long time neglected to pay it, and then by degrees reached the conclusion that he might be excused if he ignored it altogether, in view of the fact that it required great self-denial to accumulate the money to reach the obligation. Gradually, however, it dawned upon his mind that his religious life had disappeared. His conscience was aroused and quickened by the Holy Spirit. He was thoroughly convinced that he could not make any advancement in religion or read his title clear to heaven if he did not manfully confess the obligation and toil and save to pay it. He acted according to this conviction, and after a long struggle emancipated himself, but during the entire period the light of God's countenance was lifted upon him. He rejoiced, and bore his trials with greater satisfaction of mind than he previously endured his ordinary experiences. Did the man do right? Is it the duty of a person to toil, and save, and perhaps deny his children the luxuries that the children of the neighbors have, in order to pay his debts? Does the duty of paying debts never cease? If a man manages to neglect paying principal or interest for five or six years, so that he can not be compelled to pay by process of law, may he not lull his conscience to sleep? Does the obligation never wear out?

Certainly this man had the Scriptures with him: "Owe no man anything, but love one another. Provide things honest in the sight of all men." In the sight of pure morality, a man owes until he pays. If he is unable to pay, he has no right to indulge himself in a single luxury. The bare necessities of life he must have, but beyond that he must toil and save until he pays. If his creditors voluntarily release him or indulge him, he may avail himself of that with gratitude, but not to discharge the obligation from his conscience. If this man was right, a multitude of professed Christians are wrong. If he was wrong, then the whole world might plead the precedent for repudiation. A wise philosopher said:

"The man who owes and will not pay
Is stealing every moment of the day."

Everything that happens to us leaves some trace behind; everything contributes imperceptibly to make us what we are.—Goethe.

GOD'S PRESENCE.

The consciousness of God's presence with us is a very delicate thing. It is like a very sensitive thermometer, which will drop when an iceberg is a league off over the sea, and scarcely visible. We do not want his company, or we are not in harmony with his thoughts, or we are not going his road, and, therefore, of course, we part. At bottom there is only one thing that separates a soul from God, and that is sin—sin of some sort, like tiny grains of dust that get between two polished plates in an engine, that ought to move smoothly and closely against each other. The obstruction may be invisible, and yet be powerful enough to cause friction which hinders the working of the engine and throws everything out of gear. A light cloud, that we can not see, may come between us and a star, and we shall only know it is there because the star is not visibly there. Similarly, many a Christian, quite ignorantly, has something or other in his habits, or in his conduct, or in his affections, which would reveal itself to him, if he would look, as being wrong because it blots out God.

Let us remember that very little divergence will, if the two paths are prolonged far enough, part their other ends by a world. Our way may go off from the ways of the Lord at a very acute angle. There may be scarcely any consciousness of parting company at the beginning. Let the man travel on upon it far enough, and the two will be so far apart that he can not see God nor hear him speak. Take care of the little divergences which are habitual, for their accumulated results will be complete separation. There must be absolute surrender if there is to be uninterrupted fellowship.—Alexander Maclaren, D. D.

GIVING THANKS IN ALL THINGS.

Winter, no doubt, is not the pleasant season that Summer brings with her songs and flowers and long bright days. Bitter medicines, no doubt, are not savory meat; yet he who believes that all things work together for good to them that love God will be as ready to thank God for the Winter frost that kills the weeds and breaks up the soil, as for the dewy nights and sunny days that ripen the fields of corn. May God give us such a faith! With nature weak and grace imperfect, when there is no lifting of the cloud and trials are severe and long protracted, O, though it may be easy for an onlooker to preach patience, it is not easy for the sufferer to practice it. How ready are we to cry, "How long, O Lord, how long?" Yet let me have a firm faith in God's truth and love; let me be confident that he will do what he has said, and perform all that he has promised, and I shall discover mercy's bow bent on fortune's darkest cloud, and under the most trying providences shall enjoy in my heart, and exhibit to others in my temper, the blessed difference between a sufferer that mourns and a spirit that murmurs.—Thomas Guthrie.

THE BEST CURE FOR WEARINESS.

There is nothing which will give a chance for rest to the overtired nerves so surely as a simple religious faith in the over-ruling, wise, and tender Providence which has us in its keeping. It is in chafing against the conditions of our lives that we tire ourselves immeasurably. It is in being anxious about things which we can not help that we often do the most of our spending. A simple faith in God, which practically and every moment, and not only theoretically and on Sundays, rests on the knowledge that he cares for us at least as much as we care for those who are the dearest to us, will do much to give the tired nerves the feeling of the bird in its nest. Do not spend what strength you have, like the clematis, in climbing on yourself, but lay hold on things which are eternal, and the peace of them will pass into your soul like a healing balm. Put yourself in the great, everlasting currents, and then you can rest on your oars, and let those currents bear you on their strength.—Anna C. Bracket, in Harper's Magazine.

Always remember that sincerity is the very soul of religion. A single intention to please God and to approve ourselves to him must animate and govern all that we do.—Philip Doddridge.

WHERE BRIGHTEST EXAMPLES OF CHRISTIAN LIVING ABOUND.

It is a delightful employment to discover and trace the operations of divine grace, as they are manifested in the dispositions and lives of God's real children. It is peculiarly gratifying to observe how frequently, among the poorer classes of mankind, the sunshine of mercy beams upon the heart, and bears witness to the image of Christ which the Spirit of God has impressed thereupon. Among such, the sincerity and simplicity of the Christian character appear unincumbered by those obstacles to spirituality of mind and conversation which too often prove a great hindrance to those who live in the higher ranks. Many are the difficulties which riches, worldly consequence, high connections, and the luxurious refinements of polished society, throw in the way of religious profession. Happy, indeed, it is (and some such happy instances I know) where grace has so strikingly supported its conflict with natural pride, self-importance, the allurements of luxury, ease, and worldly opinion, that the noble and mighty appear adorned with genuine poverty of spirit, self-denial, humble-mindedness, and deep spirituality of heart.

But, in general, if we want to see religion in its most simple and pure character, we must look for it among the poor of this world, who are rich in faith. How often is the poor man's cottage the palace of God! Many can truly declare that they have there learned the most valuable lessons of faith and hope, and there witnessed the most striking demonstrations of the wisdom, power, and goodness of God.—Leigh Richmond, in the Dairyman's Daughter.

A pastor sometimes finds it to be no easy matter to induce the members of his church to call on the new-comers. Even after they have joined the church they are often not shown that degree of personal and social attention which is needful in order to make them feel at home. And it sometimes happens that when such a call is made, it is so perfunctorily performed as to rob it of its value. An earnest pastor thus describes an incident which came within his knowledge: "We recently heard of a lady, a member of one of the churches of this city, who called on another who had been attending her church as a stranger. She announced by way of apology for calling, that her pastor had urged her to do so, and then told how little she enjoyed calling, how busy she was, how much work she had done that day, how tired she was, ending with a sigh, and that she 'must be going.' As she went toward the door she said: 'Now I've called on you, you must come to our church, and come to see me some time.' Better for all had that woman stayed at home."—The Mid-Continent.

HOW TO GET TEACHERS.

Write to J. M. Dewberry, Manager of "The School Agency," Birmingham, Ala., stating kind of teacher desired and the pay. He recommends efficient teachers to Schools, Colleges and Families free of charge throughout the South and Southwest. Sells and rents school property. Efficient teachers desiring information should write for circulars.

Sermons may be divided into many classes, but there are two great general divisions which embrace most pulpit productions. They are the sermons filled with words and the sermons filled with work. The first kind costs little and is worth little. Its preacher holds the low ideal that a sermon only means a collection of certain accepted and conventional ideas. He gathers his material from commonplace sources, arranges them in position, and weaves the various parts into a continuous whole. The result may be a neat and interesting address, but it lacks personality and the touch of mystic influence which stirs the heart and life of the hearer. The work-filled sermon possesses the power denied to the word-filled sermon, because the preacher puts himself into it. It is not a mere collection of ideas gathered with more or less carefulness from different sources, but it is a presentation of ideas which have been thought, studied and prayed over,—Zion's Herald.

Those persons who would dissuade us from evangelizing countries possessing an ancient civilization get no sympathy from Sir Charles Elliott, who has been many years in India, and has just returned from the post of Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal. He affirms that it is impossible to shirk or conceal the fact that the Christian religion is the one pre-eminently excellent, and that the morality of the Christian faith is what is most desirable for India." As we hold that the morality is based upon the facts and truths of the gospel, we have here a striking testimony to the fitness of the gospel to one of the greatest nations under heaven. What would India be if she were thoroughly permeated with these truths and this morality? The gratification also expressed by Sir Charles at the thought of being able to aid missionary work at home will be shared by all lovers of our great missionary societies.—The Christian.

The most helpful people are those who are careful to discriminate between the things which need help and the things which help themselves. A great many disturbances in life—disturbances, for instance, in the tide of thought or feeling in social or religious life—are like the overturning of a short bottle with a broad, heavy, curved bottom. That sort of a bottle quickly rights itself. Other changes are like the raising of dust in sweeping. A child rushes about the room trying to settle the dust, and only succeeds in raising more; one who has learned better gives it time to settle, and turns to settle the things about the room that can not settle themselves with any amount of time.

No one is fitted to lead a nation, a church, or, least of all, a little child, who can not note certain disturbances without feeling that something must be done about them.—Sunday-School Times.

In various places and on many occasions does Jesus pledge us to meet him in this life—at the cross, in the sacrament, in the cries of joy and sorrow—and now once again he appoints us a meeting place. It is the Valley of the Shadow, where, in the quietness and seclusion as in a lover's glade, he will expect us one day. Is there any spot on earth so common or so wild that it has not been transformed by love? Are there any places in our thought so beautiful as those where we kept tryst with those that were dearer than life? So Jesus put a fair face on death, so that it becometh but his dark dream as he returneth to receive us home.—Ian Maclaren.

This much despised and abused doctrine (future punishment) is likely to survive for several reasons. First, it is in the Bible. To get rid of it one must get rid of the Bible. Second, it has proved a wholesome doctrine. Say what one may against frightening people into religion, the fact remains that the starting-point of most reformations is the fear of punishment. Teachers who drop future punishment out of their creed lose their power to rescue the perishing.—New York Advocate.

In a few instances when accounts have been sent to subscribers who are in arrears, they have written back: "Stop the paper—not able to pay." Or, "I only subscribed for one year and won't pay." As to the first excuse, we say, How would it look to make such a reply to your grocer or dry-goods merchant? In the second, we say, Why did you not order your paper stopped, instead of taking it out of the office for a year or two, and then refusing to pay for it.—Wesleyan Advocate.

A minister once intimated to Mr. Whitefield that he had some doubts about the piety of John Wesley and the reasonableness of his hope of salvation, and said to Whitefield: "Sir, do you think when we get to heaven we shall see John Wesley?" "No, sir," replied Whitefield, "I fear not; for he will be so near the eternal throne, and we shall be at such a distance, we shall hardly get a sight of him!"

FROM THE WORK.

CHESTER, MISS.

We have several items of interest to mention; hence this note. This is our first year on this charge. We have been in a flurry since Conference, trying to meet the seven regular appointments and above seven hundred members. Now that the row is about off, and we have gotten the facts very well in hand, we pause to report impressions and results.

Our first Quarterly Conference, with our new presiding elder in the chair, was a decided success. The position fits Bro. Oakley capa-pie; he magnifies his office, and it magnifies him. The people speak of the series of four sermons by him as a treat rarely enjoyed. Pray that they may produce abundant fruit! That care and dispatch marked the proceedings goes without saying with those who are acquainted either with the presiding elder or the very efficient Official Board here. The finances are in fairly good shape; near 25 per cent. of pastor's salary in hand and about 60 per cent. of mission fund. Pastor's family has received many useful perquisites since Conference.

One of the churches—Antioch—has built, but not yet finished, a new house of worship since Christmas. When this one and that at Salem shall have been completed there will be six as good country churches on the charge as are to be found in North Mississippi Conference.

A series of revival meetings is planned by Chester Church, to begin on second Sunday in March. Pray for divine presence and power among us! The South Union Camp Meeting will embrace the fourth Sunday in August, as usual, beginning on Friday before. The presiding elder and pastor wish to make it an occasion of great spiritual power to the entire district. Nothing would please and profit us more than the presence, during the entire time, of the editor of the ADVOCATE. Can't you come, Doctor?

Between 30 and 40 copies of the ADVOCATE taken. My predecessors have wrought well in this and other lines. A greater work is yet to be done. Pray for us. W. L. ANDERSON, P. C.

EBENEZER CHARGE.

While we are passing through this life we often lose some of the richest and sweetest blessings that life has in store. I have seen some who seem to be getting very little, if anything, out of life besides trouble and disappointment. Why is this the case? Is it because some have been destined to misery and woe in this life? Nay, verily—nay, it is a failure on their part. They have failed to cultivate the great law of love. Love is one of the attributes of God, and we see it manifested in all the workings of Providence. But we see its manifestation most strikingly exhibited in the redemption of man. While love is one of God's wise and noble, though painful dispensations, man is said to be a prototype of this immutable principle, "God is love." Man was made in image and after the likeness of the invisible and omnipotent God, holy, just and good; had daily communion with his Creator, which was eternal life in itself. Though man, notwithstanding his having a perfect law of love stamped on his being by the hand of his all-wise Creator, was not confirmed in this perfect state, God, in his infinite wisdom, saw fit and deemed it needful to test man further by giving him one direct command and fixing death the penalty of the violation. Death—ah! spiritual and physical death. Man violated this command and died; was banished from the presence of his Creator, and became subject to all the ailments of both soul and body that was possible for a fallen creature to suffer. Without God in the world, which was death to the soul. But God was not willing for his creatures to be lost. While under condemnation, God manifested his great love in the gift of Jesus to redeem lost man. So man is redeemed by a dispensation of love. This dispensation is wise because it was founded and given by the Father of wisdom, love and light; noble, because God is the only source of true nobility. There is not anything noble that is not God-like, and governed by the great law of love. This law is immutable. It is not changed by revolutions in kingdoms. The corrosive finger of time will destroy everything it touches, but love will live as long as the God who gave it.

This dispensation often proves to be painful to us by placing our love upon things that are not eternal; not only pain to the body, but to the soul also. Some have had their affections so tenaciously fixed upon the world, that they lost sight of the blessed Creator and went down into the infernal regions of the damned. Dives realized all the pain and anguish of a lost soul in hell because he loved in the wrong direction, and we often feel the pain of love when God, in his infinite love and mercy, sends the scythe of death into our homes and reaps down the budded flowers. The pride of an anxious mother and a fond father's life; tender ties are severed, brightest flowers are taken from earth, and transplanted in the paradise of God. Those of us who have had this experience feel and see the loving care of God to draw us to him—a God of love, and a God of mercy. "God is love," and he hath imparted his love to our dead souls by the gift of Jesus. "A new commandment I give unto you, that ye love one another. Cultivate your love unto perfection. Perfect love casteth out fear. Fear hath a torment," and torment keeps us from enjoying life.

Love God supremely and our neighbors as ourselves. We know that we have passed from death unto life because we love the brethren. Glory to God for his unspeakable gift! More love to thee, O Christ, more love to thee.

Bro. J. A. Wilson is our pastor, and we all love him, and think God is going to do a good work through him this year. May God bless the ADVOCATE! Is the prayer of Yours in for the fight,

J. L. RED.

Nervous

People wonder why their nerves are so weak; why they get tired so easily; why they do not sleep naturally; why they have frequent headaches, indigestion and

Nervous Dyspepsia. The explanation is simple. It is found in that impure blood feeding the nerves on refuse instead of the elements of strength and vigor. Hood's Sarsaparilla feeds the nerves pure, rich blood; gives natural sleep, good digestion, is the true remedy for all nervous troubles.

Devout priests frequently mortify their flesh and voluntarily force themselves to undergo great bodily hardships and deprivation. They are enabled to do this and escape serious injury to their health by reason of the purity of their lives and the fact that they deny themselves the pleasures of the table. An ordinary man who lives in the ordinary way cannot long endure hardship, deprivation or overwork, unless he takes the right remedy to reinforce nature. The average man when he is in good health eats too much. When he gets a little out of sorts he pays no heed and keeps right on "making a hog of himself." In some instances he gets thin and emaciated. In others he gets grossly corpulent, and weighted down with flabby fat. In the first instance he is a candidate for dyspepsia and nervous prostration. In the second for kidney trouble or heart failure. Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery enables the average man to undergo a great deal of hardship, deprivation and overwork, in spite of the life he leads. It causes the food to be properly assimilated. It builds firm, healthy flesh, but does not make corpulent people more fat. It cures dyspepsia, nervous troubles, kidney disease and 98 per cent. of all cases of consumption. It prevents weakness in any organ of the body.

"In August, 1895, I was taken down in bed with a burning and severe pains in my stomach and under my shoulders, and dizziness in my head," writes Ira D. Herring, Esq., of Emporia, Volusia Co., Fla. "My home physician said my symptoms were like consumption. Nothing that I ate would digest, and I had great distress in my stomach. I wrote Dr. Pierce for advice, and took four bottles of his 'Golden Medical Discovery' and three of 'Pleasant Pellets.' I am now able to do my work and eat many things that I could not touch before I took these medicines."

DOES EDUCATION DECREASE CRIME?

The latest statistics on the subject bring to light the startling fact that crime in this country is increasing faster than the population. Since during the last quarter of a century schools and colleges have multiplied amazingly, and since the average intelligence of the people has greatly advanced during that time, this increase in crime is all the more perplexing to those who regard education as a sure remedy for vice and lawlessness. In every part of the Union people are more deeply interested in education than ever before. Colleges here and there are being endowed, the State institutions of learning are receiving ampler appropriations, and the public school system was never so perfect as now. Twenty-five years ago there was but one college student to every two thousand of the population. Now there is one for every 729 of the population. Several writers of note hold that in spite of the increase of knowledge and educational facilities, crime has neither been checked nor diminished, but, on the contrary, has increased.

The editor of the New York World, not many months ago, took the position that crimes, robbery and bribery, crimes against life, property and chastity, have increased since the war proportionately to the population. It is an undeniable fact that the number of murders and homicides annually committed in the United States is tenfold greater than it was twelve years ago. While the laxity of the courts in meting out punishment to the guilty, the abuse of the pardoning power, and the shirking of jury duty by the better class of citizens, are, in a large measure, responsible for the increase of certain forms of lawlessness, yet it is plain that secular education has not by any means produced the beneficial results upon public morals that many have fondly expected.

Dr. Wilbur F. Crafts is right in saying that "intellectual education can not be depended on as the chief factor in the production of good morals." He further states that "only four per cent. of those arrested in New York City in 1884," when he investigated the subject, "could not read or write. At the same time seven per cent. of the inmates of Auburn prison were graduates of colleges, or other higher institutions of learning. An ignorant thief rubs a freight car, while an educated thief steals a railroad."

In the palmiest days of Greece corruption and vice flourished side by side with culture and art. In Rome the same sad story was repeated. Yet there are philosophers among us who fancy they see in education a potent remedy for crime and degradation. This is theorizing against facts. The greatest evils of our civilization, like Banquo's ghost, will not down at the bidding of the school-master.

Facts like these give tremendous emphasis to the importance of training the heart as well as the mind. The Duke of Wellington never uttered a truer thing than when he remarked that "education without religion would only surround us with clever devils."

We note with pleasure the profound attention that is being bestowed upon the education of youth, but we fear that knowledge by reason of business considerations is too often esteemed above character. With many parents the chief reason for desiring an education for their children is that they may thereby become rich. Such a motive is laudable within certain limits. Knowledge merely as a means of getting on in the world should be highly valued. The illiterate are for the most part doomed to poverty, and are nearly always the prey of the unscrupulous and the designing. Ignorance of itself is never a virtue. Education, however, that aims no higher than equipment for business, for worldly success, having little or no reference to the moral nature, is not only incomplete, but is ofttimes a promoter of dishonesty and crime. The chief end of education ought to be to make good citizens and useful Christians.

We do not pose as an opponent of education, but as one of its warmest advocates, provided it be of the right sort. The editor of the Popular Science Monthly, in the December number, said very pertinently: "We fear that with all the alleged improvements that are being introduced into the methods of education, the true end of education is being more and more lost sight of. The idea that education is essentially a preparation for money making, is, it seems to us, gradually taking complete possession of the popular consciousness. According to the humanistic ideal, the business of education is to enable a human being to enter on full possession of his faculties in order that, so far as possible, he may be perfect as a human being."

Christian education is the only solution of the problem before us. Within the past few years crime has developed so largely among the youth of Chicago that educators and philanthropists have been brought to see the grave necessity of coupling moral with intellectual training, and it is said to be very probable that the Bible will ere long be introduced into the public schools there. It is becoming more and more apparent that non-religious education is unsatisfactory. The secular press may sneer as much as it pleases at the denominational college, but it is chiefly in the denominational colleges that parents can be sure that their sons and daughters will receive proper moral instruction, and be surrounded by wholesome religious influences. Were it not for the fact that the majority of the public school teachers of our land are professing Christians, our day schools would undoubtedly turn out a much larger percentage of criminals than is the case at present.

Any attempt at sectarian instruction in the public schools is not for a moment to be thought of. Nevertheless, it is greatly to be deplored that the Bible is so generally excluded therefrom. Even if moral instruction formed a part of the public school curriculum, the duty of supplementing such instruction would still rest upon Sabbath-school teachers and parents; but, as matters now stand, this work is doubly necessary, and, when neglected, leads to dire consequences. Those interested in the welfare of youth should see to it that none but instructors of Christian principles and upright character be employed anywhere.

AT BAY ST. LOUIS, MISS.

On Tuesday, the first, by invitation of the pastor, Rev. J. P. Drake, we lectured at Bay St. Louis, Miss., for the benefit of the parsonage fund. Bro. Drake has built a considerable extension to the parsonage, thus making room for a preacher's family of orthodox size. He has also ceiled the new church. It is now quite a handsome structure, and of ample dimensions for the wants of the community. Bro. Drake is in high favor with his flock, and is keeping up his record as a diligent, wide-awake shepherd. So far as we could see, this beautiful little city looks none the worse for its bout with Yellow Jack. We were domiciled at the parsonage, and we much enjoyed our association with its inmates, including Mrs. R. E. Jones, relict of the late Rev. B. Jones, of precious memory. Next morning early we found ourself again in the treadmill.

A WAY TO HELP MILLSAPS COLLEGE.

We invite special attention to the communication of Prof. A. M. Muckenfuss in this issue. The cause which he presents is one that ought to appeal strongly to every friend of education among us, and he has presented it clearly and strongly. The plan which he has devised makes it easy to raise a considerable sum without any one being burdened. Read, reflect and act.

Occasionally a man who has occupied a position of some prominence in the church changes his mind in regard to essential truth, makes a little flutter, breaks away from his positions, and thinks that he is about to revolutionize the religious world. In only a little while he finds that this is a mistake. He is soon lost sight of and forgotten, while the church goes on with its great work of bringing souls to Christ. A dissatisfied fish leaped out of the river, and said that many other fish felt just as he did about it. The river flowed on, the great schools of fish went on their way, and the foolish experimenter soon gasped his last upon the sands.—Exchange.

A Christian ought to wear the kind of face that would be worth going two blocks to see.—D. L. Moody.

AT LAFAYETTE.

By invitation, we attended the Annual Convention of the Woman's Parsonage and Home Mission Society at Lafayette. The convention met on Thursday morning, the efficient president, Mrs. F. A. Lyons, in the chair. We reached Lafayette on Saturday afternoon in time to meet an engagement to deliver an address at night on the life and character of Miss Lucinda B. Heim. An interesting paper was read at the same service by Mrs. B. J. Williams, of Lafayette. On Sunday morning we preached the annual sermon to a crowded house. Sunday afternoon we attended a very interesting children's service conducted by Miss Mary Werlein, of this city. Besides Miss Werlein, the speakers were Mrs. T. K. Faunt LeRoy, Mrs. V. D. Skipper and Rev. J. M. Henry. This service resulted in the organization of a juvenile auxiliary of thirty nine members. At night we heard an interesting and vigorous sermon from Rev. J. M. Henry, who was present by invitation of the convention. On Monday night we lectured to a good audience for the benefit of the Lafayette parsonage fund.

The session of the convention was a very pleasant and profitable one. An extended notice is promised for our next issue. The officers of last year were all re elected. The convention made a fine impression on the community. The sessions of the convention were remarkably well attended, not only by Methodists, but by people of all creeds, including Catholics. The delegates were royally entertained.

This was our first visit to Lafayette, though we have often passed through on the railroad. We found that we had greatly underestimated the size of the place. We had estimated its population at about 1,000, whereas it claims more than 3,000. It has electric lights, and will in the near future have a good system of water works. It has a fine, salubrious climate, and is surrounded by a magnificent farming country. The pastor, Rev. I. T. Reames, is immensely popular, not only with his own flock, but with the entire community. He has built a handsome new church, which was dedicated by Bishop Hendrix on the fifth of January, and a very neat seven-room parsonage. Both church and parsonage are yet unpainted, but this work will be completed within a very few weeks. Congregations are large and increasing, and the church is enjoying genuine prosperity.

During a part of our stay we were most hospitably entertained by Bro. and Sister Reames in their new parsonage. Afterwards we made headquarters at the hospitable home of Bro. J. J. Davidson, to whom and to his accomplished wife we are indebted for many appreciated courtesies. We also enjoyed the generous, whole souled hospitalities of Sisters Beraud and Girard and Dr. and Mrs. Hopkins. To Bro. Crow Girard we are under obligations for a delightful drive of several miles. Tuesday morning we are again in the treadmill.

REV. H. R. TUCKER.

Brother Clifford writes us of the sad news of the death of Rev. H. R. Tucker, presiding elder of the Corinth district, North Mississippi Conference.

He died of pneumonia on Monday morning, the seventh, and was buried in Booneville, Miss., Tuesday, the eighth. We deeply sympathize with the family in their bereavement, and pray that the Comforter will sustain them in their hour of sorrow.

Bro. Tucker was a man of most excellent character, thoroughly devoted to the work of the ministry, and decidedly successful in it.

TO THE PREACHERS OF THE MISSISSIPPI AND NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCES.

Maj. R. W. Millsaps last year generously built upon our campus the magnificent Webster Science Hall, over half of the space in which is given up to the teaching of chemistry, experimental physics, and inorganic geology. The church, through the college authorities, undertook the equipment of this beautiful structure and the work is now well under way. Previous to this, Mr. J. R. Bingham had generously donated $500, and this money formed a nucleus towards our present equipment, the increase coming partly from our incidental fund, partly from the "Science Hall equipment fund," and partly from student science fees. In the line of chemistry we have all material essential for the present, but our museum is not sufficiently equipped for the proper teaching of inorganic geology, and we are woefully in need of further physical apparatus.

Let us not consider the urgent fact that church colleges should be well equipped in science even merely as a refutation of the charge that they are indifferent thereto, but only itemize the actual needs of this college as follows:

General physical apparatus	$100
X-Ray outfit	100
Museum specimens	50
Analytical apparatus	50
Glass cases for Museum, etc	100
Stereopticon	50
Spectroscope	50
Microscope	50
Camera and lens	50
Port lumiere	25
	$625

Here is the situation: We have spent $5000 for one floor of building and $1000 in equipment; is it not bad business to delay the expenditure of the $625 necessary to give maximum efficiency to money already expended?

I now call for the aid of the preachers and others in raising this money, without asking anyone to give a cent. A magnificent chromo portrait of John Wesley (size, 14½ by 19 inches) was on exhibition at the late session of the Mississippi Conference, and all will testify to its artistic value and to its striking similarity to an oil painting. It is the finest portrait of the founder of Methodism that is on the market. Recent correspondence has shown me that these portraits can not be sold in this country unframed, the retail price being $3 per picture with frame. By obtaining the agency for the college in Mississippi, I am able to sell at one dollar less than this price and yet make a profit to be used solely for equipping the Science Hall; not only that, I have just succeeded in obtaining permission to sell the pictures unframed, at the reduced cost of $1 apiece. This surely is a great opportunity for every Methodist to get the inspiring likeness of the greatest and first of Methodists and at the same time to aid their own college!

As a special inducement to enlisting the preachers and others in our aid, I will send to each of them one portrait, post paid, on receipt of fifty cents and an agreement to canvass for purchasers. All who so desire may keep ten per cent. of the amount of their sales, as commission, so that this is an excellent chance for many boys and girls. The selling price is $1, post-paid, unframed; and $2 framed in oak and gilt, or white and gilt, express to be paid by purchaser.

TRUE MANHOOD.

Jesus did not come to destroy our manhood; he came to fulfill it. A thorough-going Christian is a man with a stronger reason, kinder heart, firmer will and richer imagination than his fellows—one who has attained to his height in Christ. A bigot, or a prig, or a weakling is a half-developed Christian, one not yet arrived at full age.

What ought a Christian to read? Every book which feeds the intellect. Where ought he to go? Every place where the moral atmosphere is pure and bracing. What ought he to do? Everything which will make character. Religion is not negative, a giving up this or that, but positive, a getting and a possessing. If a man will be content with nothing but the best thought, best work, best friends, best environment, he need not trouble about avoiding the worst. The good drives out the bad. There are two ways of lighting a dark room; one is to attack the darkness with candles; the other is to open the shutters and let in the light. When light comes darkness goes. There are two ways of forming character; one is to conquer our sins, the other is to cultivate the opposite virtues. The latter plan is best because it is surest—the virtue replaces the sin.

Christianity is not a drill: it is life, full, free, radiant and rejoicing. What a young man should do is not to vex himself about his imperfections, but to fix his mind on the bright image of perfection; not to weary his soul with rules, but to live with Christ as one liveth with a friend. There is one way to complete manhood, and that is, fellowship with Jesus Christ.—Ian Maclaren.

MAKING THE CHURCH A HOME.

It is the family spirit which makes a true home. The glad consciousness of a close mutual tie, the precious intimacy due to continuous association and common interests, the mutual sympathy and helpfulness which are shared with no outsiders in the same manner or degree, the oneness of descent, of relationships and largely of friendships, the identity, for the most part, of outlook upon the world—all these, together with other elements, combine to render a typical home what it is. It is a felicitous thought of the church which regards it as a home.

It can be one in fact only as the spirit of home pervades it. Custom may render its house of worship more familiar and agreeable than any other, so that we feel more at home in it on Sunday than elsewhere. But it can only become a true spiritual home when we have learned to look upon it definitely as our Father's house and upon our fellow-Christians as true brothers and sisters in Christ. Then must follow the usual results of such a recognition of relationship. A deeper, securer sympathy between its members, a more trusty co-operation, a more gentle tolerance of personal peculiarities such as we exercise towards our brothers or sisters in the flesh, a more vigorous and patient effort to render its influence penetrating and potent in the community—all these must be experienced and must be rendered evident unobtrusively, but invitingly to those without.

The churches of the present often are compared to clubs. It must be our endeavor to render them more like homes. So far as this effort succeeds, there will be increasingly large interest in them on the part of both their own members and others, and a growing desire to enjoy the privileges which they offer. The nearer a church approaches to being a healthy, active, joyous Christian home, a center of consecrated family activity, the better it will do a noble men, the work which the great founder of all earthly churches has given it to do.—The Congregationalist.

The papers say that the Pope has recently come out with the declaration that Italy ought to be a republic. It is easy to see why he might desire anything as a change from the present form of government. The power of the church in Italy has been steadily decreasing, and thousands of Italians delight to offer affronts to the Vatican. One of the Italian public libraries, it is said, has announced its intention of collecting all the books named in the celebrated Index Expurgatorius, which good Catholics are forbidden to read; the evident purpose being to defy the ecclesiastical authorities. But the Pope is very much mistaken if he thinks his situation at Rome would be any more agreeable if the nation should adopt a republican form of government. The temporal power which he was obliged to surrender in 1870 is not likely to be regained. The Pope is still a power in the political affairs of Europe, but he is fast losing his hold on Italy.—Baptist Standard.

NOTES.

A meeting will begin at Lonisiana Avenue Church, Sunday, March [illegible]. All Methodists in the city are invited. The pastor will be assisted by his brother, Rev. P. R. Knickerbocker, of Crowley.

***

Rev. Robert Randle, of the Louisiana Conference, let the light of his countenance shine into our sanctum on Monday last. He is in the city looking after the interests of the Church Extension Board.

***

Bishop N. B. Harmon, of the diocese of Eilisville, illuminated our den a few days since with his genial presence. As usual, he is busy with plans for the prosperity of Zion. He expects soon to liquidate a considerable indebtedness on the parsonage.

We are in receipt of a copy of the Minutes of the last session of the North Mississippi Conference. It is a very neatly gotten-up pamphlet published by the Holly Springs South. The name of the secretary, Rev. J. S. Oakley, is a sufficient guarantee that the secretarial work is admirably done. There is no better secretary among us.

CENSOR OR EDITOR—WHICH?

MR. EDITOR: Bro. Harrison, in his last article on the Epworth League topic for the weekly prayer meeting, transcends his office as editor, and is seen in his old garb worn while running that virulent little sheet styled "Gabriel's Trumpet"—a self-appointed censor. He says in the last issue: "In a recent social gathering of one of the Leagues there were present one presiding elder, three preachers, two stewards, one Sunday-school superintendent, and many Methodists, and yet this assemblage of leaguers did not, as a League, invoke or acknowledge the presence of the Lord Jesus. There were nice refreshments, pleasant conversation, and amusing games, but not a song of praise to him, not a prayer, not a syllable from his Word in acknowledgment of his supervising presence."

Are we to have this self-installed critic for a whole year transforming his position as editor into one for trial by newspaper of the various social gatherings of our Leagues in this city?

We are surprised, Mr. Editor, that you should let this paragraph be dragged into what purported to be an exposition of a passage of Scripture. There is no surprise at Bro. Harrison undertaking to instruct anybody in the Southern Methodist Church from Bishops down, for his former publications in the Pentecostal Age and the above-named sheet have proven that he was filled with a conceit that is colossal in its proportions. To deal fair with their constituency, the ancient censor did at least give out a manual, by which things could be done in proper form. Has our modern censor sent out his manual by which our Leagues can govern themselves?

As one of those present at that entertainment, we would say that the Lord Jesus was acknowledged at the fitting time, and in the usual form, according to a judge of these things—equally as good authority on those matters as our self-constituted censor. No doubt, our brother would have liked for the presiding elder to have lined up the whole assemblage and drilled them on shouting "Hallelujia," like he has often drilled a certain mission Sunday-school. To him that would have been not only appropriate, but a religious performance, while to some other people equally as spiritual as our brother, it would have been next to hypocrisy, pretending to feel a holy emotion when there was none, and then the use of sacred words and terms in a vain repetition. So, maybe, our dear brother's manual would make some of us sin to use it; therefore, he need not be too swift to issue it. The Scripture way for our brother, so seemingly zealous, to have done was, when he found his brethren were at fault, to take them aside and convince them of their fault; turn them from the error of their way. He who talks to from "one to ten every day' in personal work has lost a golden opportunity. There would be more of the Christly spirit in such treatment, more genuine courage, than this trial by newspaper and this fling at preachers and Methodists. If such a censorious spirit is the evidence of holiness and high attainments in the Christian life, then Paul's law of love, in the thirteenth chapter of First Corinthians, is a sounding brass and tinkling cymbal. Now, that pharisaical person who sat back taking notes in order to inform our censor, how "little-eyed" and contemptible must it be to partake of the hospitality of a family, and then criticise that entertainment, where did he, she, or it, get their sense of propriety?

If this editor proposes to keep up this line of criticism, the Union League had better do away with this office. Shall all our harmonious action be interrupted by thus holding up the action of separate Leagues because, forsooth, they do not exactly comport to the ideas of this censor?

NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE NOTES.

I have recently spent twenty days in the Delta at Greenwood, Shaws, Greenville, Arcola and Hollandale, and had engagements at other points which I had to cancel on account of sickness. I could write many good things of the preachers and work in those charges, but others have recently borne testimony of them in the ADVOCATE, so I refrain for the present, as I am unable to write but little anyway.

The Methodist Church in Greenville, under the leadership of the pastor, has undertaken the work of Bible distribution and supply in Washington county under the auspices of the American Bible Society. Rev. W. O. Sadler, a worthy young local preacher, has been engaged to do the work.

Since the last report libraries have been placed in the Sunday-schools at Sidon, Shaws, Greenville, Hollandale and Aberdeen. Who'll be the next? Let the ball roll on. See "Important Notice" in last week's ADVOCATE in reference to the matter. Let us have orders rapidly for these libraries, "The Children's Visitor," and other literature for use in the schools during the Spring. I am sick in bed, but hope to be up and out soon.

GONE HOME.

On the twenty-fourth of January I was called to Bolivar to perform the burial service of little Paden, the infant son of Bro. and Sister Jno. R. Countiss. About 3 P. M. I reached the parsonage and found Bro. and Sister Countiss with sad hearts and tear dimmed eyes. They were much bereaved, but beautiful and complete was their resignation. At 4 P. M. we laid the little body to rest in the cemetery, just behind the parsonage, to await the general resurrection.

In a letter of recent date Bro. Countiss said, in speaking of little Paden: "If his mission was to be a blessing to our home, then he fulfilled it. I am resigned to his death, but, oh! how I miss my child."

Dear brother and sister, may the grace of God and the comfort of his Spirit be given to you in abundance, and as you linger with sorrowing hearts besides the little grave may you remember that,

"He shall sleep, but not forever,
In that lone and silent grave,"

And may you ever be able to say,

"Blessed be the Lord that taketh, Blessed be the Lord that gave."

Little Paden was born Oct. 24, 1897, and died Jan. 23, 1898.

THE MISSISSIPPI ORPHANS' HOME.

The manager opened the Home this week for the reception of orphans. Some have already been admitted and others are expected next week. The Home is only partially furnished, but what has been done is substantial and beautiful. Rev. M. L. Burton and wife are proving themselves fully competent to fill the responsible position of managers. The outlook is bright. Please remember that now is the best time to assist this worthy cause. The children must be fed and clothed and the Home completely furnished.

We urge the observance of Orphans' Day, which is the first Sunday in April, or soon thereafter as practicable. See Minutes of our Conference (page 24). Some of the brethren are observing Orphans' Day before that time. Let all take collections for orphans before April, if possible. Bro. Burton will be glad to correspond with any friend of the Home. He will visit as many charges as possible.

Yours in behalf of the orphans,

J. A. BOWEN.

PAINT TALKS. III.

LEAD POISONING.

Mankind are prone to doubt what they can't see. Thus the fatal disease germs were discredited until the microscope revealed them and scientists demonstrated their virulence on animals.

Every doctor knows something about lead poisoning, but too few physicians think of lead paints as the probable source of the common symptoms of rheumatism, neuralgia, cholera-morbus, malaria, indigestion, etc. When a paint dealer or a painter exhibits such symptoms, lead poisoning is promptly suspected; but it should be remembered that everyone living in a lead-painted house is exposed to the same danger.

This peril is real and constant, and can be avoided only by rejecting lead-paints entirely. The market is full of good combination paints based on zinc, as the consumer will find if he insists on having them; and it is not only safety, but economy, to use such paints. They are cheaper, cover more surface, and wear better than lead paints; and the zinc whites are whiter, to begin with, and do not darken like lead.

Some prepared paints are based on a mixture of zinc and lead. Such paints are durable in proportion to the zinc contained. Generally speaking, the more zinc and the less lead, the better and safer the paint.

The Commission on Unsanitary Dwellings, in Paris, France (which corresponds in purpose and authority to our City Boards of Health), has published a report proclaiming zinc white superior to white lead on every ground, and has unanimously adopted the following:

"The Commission, taking into consideration at once the healthfulness of dwellings, the health of the workmen, and the interests of property owners, and in view of the fact that for painting the choice lies between two materials, one entirely inoffensive, the other constituting a virulent poison, has decided that—

"1.—The use of zinc white to the exclusion of white lead shall be specified in all orders for painting.

"2.—The Commission renews the request made by it in 1880, for the exclusion of white lead from all public works."

Knowing that lead in any form is exceedingly poisonous, and knowing that paints based on zinc are cheaper, more durable, handsomer, and absolutely innocuous, is it not foolish to court danger by painting with white lead? Among the many foolhardy risks taken by thoughtless people nothing surpasses this. STANTON DUDLEY.

Epworth League

BY H. N. HARRISON.

TOPIC FOR MARCH 13.—BREADTH OF GOD'S LOVE.

(Acts x. 11-20.)

1. Peter was on Simon the tanner's housetop, in Joppa, at noon-time, praying. He was praying for himself, the church, and the lost sheep of the house of Israel. Being a Jew, and very narrow in his views, he still held to his Jewish feelings and customs. According to his view, the salvation of Christ belonged only to his own people. His narrow conception of salvation, and his prejudices, though not wrong in themselves, might eventually lead to evil conclusions. God wanted this sturdy apostle to have a broader mind and deeper sympathies. He gave him a vision of four footed beasts, creeping things, and fowls of the air. This set Peter to thinking. A thinking spell is what many narrow folks need these days in Methodism.

2. We note that Peter's mind was open to conviction. His heart was in an attitude of acquiescence to new light. If wrong in his views, he was ready at once to revise them. Religious views, preconceived opinions, frequently resist every encroachment of light. The last thing that a man is willing to put upon God's altar is his judgment, opinions, or prejudices, especially in doctrinal matters. He is a morally brave man who will say, "My convictions on this or that religious question are on God's altar, subject to revision and new light." Such a man is in a right attitude of mind and heart to divine truth. Such was Peter's attitude on the housetop in Joppa, and God blessed, honored, and advanced him. Now, some folks have strong convictions on the subject of entire sanctification, pro or con. Lay all such feelings and views on the altar, and await results. Do not be afraid; come down with your convictions and await the light. (Ps. xxxvi, 9, and Ps. xcvii, 11.)

3. The breadth of God's love in dealing with Peter's narrowness is revealed to him in the vision by showing him that "the grace of God which bringeth salvation hath appeared to all men." Not only the Jew, but the Gentile, may be saved. It is the purpose of the vision to remove Peter's prejudices, and give him a larger conception of the greatness of God's love. It embraces the entire race. Palestine is not big enough to contain this love. It reaches "far as the curse is found." In the house of many mansions there is room for all; Jesus welcomes all. "He is not willing that any should perish, but that all should come to repentance." With this lesson more or less clearly impressed upon his mind and heart, Peter sets forth on his journey to Cesarea to the house of Cornelius, a Gentile, not only a wiser, but a more useful apostle.

FORGIVENESS.

I sat in the evening cool
Of the heat-baked city street,
Musing, and watching a little pair
Who played on the walk at my feet:
A boy, the elder, of strong, rough mould;
His sister, a blossom sweet.

When just in the midst of their play,
Came an angry cry, and a blow
That bruised the cheek of the little maid
And caused bright tears to flow,
And brought from my lips quick, sharp reproof
On the lad who had acted so.

And he stood by, sullen and hard,
While the maid soon dried her tear;
He looked at her with an angry eye;
She timidly drew near:
"Don't be cross, Johnny" (a little sob);
"Let me forgive 'oo, dear!"

And the cloud is passed and gone,
And again in their play they meet,
And the strong, rough boy wears a kinder mien,
And brighter the maiden sweet;
While a whisper has come from the heart of God
To a man, a man on the street.

MAKING A GENTLEMAN OF HIM.

"My wife has peculiar views about bringing up boys," said the man in the barber-shop, while he waited his turn.

"So has mine," said the man with a scowl who wanted a haircut. "She thinks they're privileged to turn the house upside down, and keep up no end of a row. And when I interfere she says, 'Oh, never mind; we're only young once.' And a good thing it's true," he ended crossly.

"Well, man, let your wife have her own way with your boys," said the first speaker. "As a rule, it isn't the father that a man yearns for when he goes out into the cold world. It's his mother every time. Now I just escaped making a scene at the breakfast-table this morning and writing myself down a fool, but that I had sense enough to trust my wife. You see, it was this way: We have two rollicksome boys, not bad as boys go, but full of vim. Well, the girl was waiting on the table, and our youngest, a boy of nine, with eyes like an angel and the temper of—well, like mine—asked her to make him a piece of toast. I did not notice how he worded it, but it appears his mother did. He waited, but the toast did not come.

"'How did you ask for it?' says his mother, and he answered right quick:

"'I said, 'Huldah, bring me a piece of toast!'

"His mother touched a bell and the girl came in. 'Ask her again,' she said. The boy squirmed and I was mad, but I saw a warning in my wife's eyes and kept still.

"'Please, Huldah, make me a piece of toast,' said the little fellow bravely, and Huldah smiled and went out for the toast.

"Now my sympathies were all with the boy that wanted his toast, and when we were alone I ventured to say that I thought Huldah was putting on style, but my wife squelched me.

"'It isn't for Huldah,' she said, 'it is for my boy. I want him to be a gentleman for his own sake.'"—Detroit Free Press.

UNSYMPATHETIC OPPOSITION.

If you wish to strengthen a man or a child in a wrong course, an effective way is to manifest an unsympathetic opposition. There is something in human nature which leads most of us in such circumstances to desire to have our own way. We say "most of us," because we ought never to forget that there are certain ideally constituted persons who, when they are told what they ought to do, straightway go and do it. But parents commonly find that in dealing with average children, a hard exercise of authority is not usually the most effective to lead them to choose the best courses. And those who seek to influence and lead men, discover that to lay down the law too vigorously is not always the wisest way of getting men to do what they desire.

It is not the mere fact of opposition that fixes men in their determination not to be guided by others. It is unsympathetic opposition. If you can once convince a man or a child that you have his interests at heart, and that your opposition is not prompted by disregard of his opinions or by pride of authority, you have gone far toward winning him to your view.

The Apostle Paul enjoins men to "speak the truth in love." It is not enough that a parent or leader possess the truth, and declare it; to be effective the truth should be spoken "in love." Some people think so much of the truth that they think nothing at all of the feelings, the opinions and prejudices of those to whom they declare it. They wonder that they do not do more good. There is nothing mysterious about it. Their attitude toward others is unsympathetic, and that is enough to account for the fact that those whom they seek to influence are under a strong temptation not to do the thing which has been urged upon them.—The Watchman.

ADVICE TO MINISTERS.

Given by a Minister.

Preachers who practise it will preach better.

No class of people is so liable to throat trouble as the great class who make up the Gospel ministry. The strain put upon the vocal organs by constant exercise; the sudden change from a heated building to the cool air when the vocal organs are in a state of complete relaxation; the fact that a minister feels impelled to use his voice when actors and lecturers would take the needed rest; these are among the reasons why "Clergymen's sore throat" is known as a special disease. The Rev. E. M. Brawley, D. D., District Secretary of the American Baptist Publication Society, writes from Petersburg, Va., the account of an experience of his own which is profitable reading to those afflicted with Bronchial or other throat troubles. The substance of the letter is as follows:

PETERSBURG, VA.

J. C. AYER CO.,

DEAR SIRS: Three months ago I took a violent cold which resulted in an attack of acute bronchitis. I put myself under medical treatment, and at the end of two months was no better. I found it very difficult to preach, and concluded to try Dr. Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. The first bottle gave me great relief; the second, which I am now taking, has relieved me almost entirely of all unpleasant symptoms. To ministers suffering from throat troubles, I recommend Dr. Ayer's Cherry Pectoral.

"Prevention is better than cure." A bottle of Dr. Ayer's Cherry Pectoral kept in the house, will effectually prevent the rooting of a cold and its consequent development into some dangerous malady. This remedy has no equal in Bronchial troubles. The most stubborn cases have yielded to its use. It is equally effective for Asthma, Croup, Whooping Cough, and every disease that attacks the throat or lungs. For years Dr. Ayer's Cherry Pectoral has been put up only in large size bottles, at a price of $1.00. To meet an increasing demand for a smaller sized package the remedy can now be obtained in half-size bottles, at half price—50 cents. Send for Dr. Ayer's Curebook (free) and you will get a clearer idea of the great value of Dr. Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. Address J. C. Ayer Co., Lowell, Mass.

"IT MAKES ME LOVE YOU MORE."

A mother was hurrying one morning with her household duties, and her four-year-old little girl was playing with her doll. The little one left her play, and going to her mother asked, "Mamma, do you love your little girl?"

"Yes, dear," said the mother, "mamma loves you very much."

"And I love you, mamma," said the little one.

And every few minutes during the forenoon the child came to the mother with the simple statement: "I love you, mamma." After a while the mother said: "Yes, darling, mamma knows her little girl loves her; but why do you tell me so often that you love me?"

"Because, mamma," said the child, "it makes me love you more every time I tell you so."

And so it is with God's dear children. They may not be able to say something new every time they pray or testify. It may be the same old story that they have told so long, but every time they confess Christ with a trusting and loving heart it makes them love him more; and it helps to shake off the adversary, who is ever ready to lead astray.—Michigan Christian Advocate.

POWER-STORING.

The great business of the first part of every successful life is storing power. The true aim of all discipline, the real meaning of the drudgery of the dreary years spent in poring over books, of listening to lectures, of note-taking, of all the dry details of study, is to fill the mental reservoir, the storage battery full of reserve for future use. It is the accumulation of force which will enable one in future years to bridge over, without exhaustion, a great panic, an unexpected emergency; to save life in some critical surgical operation or epidemic; to meet some exigency; to pass scathless through some great commercial crisis.

Every man who would leave his mark behind him or attain to any degree of success, every wrestler in the world's arena, must have such a reservoir of power to draw upon in times of unexpected perplexity or trial, or he will fail.—Selected.

GENIUS.

"I never do a thing thoroughly," Mary said to me the other day. She had just been competing for a prize in composition. "I read my composition only once after I wrote it, and I never practiced it in the chapel at all." She was naturally far more gifted than Alice, who was her principal competitor. Alice wrote and rewrote her article, and practiced it again and again. The day came. Alice read her composition in a clear, distinct voice, without hesitation or lack of expression. It was condensed and well written. Mary's could not be heard beyond the fifth row of seats, and was long and uninteresting. Alice won the prize. One remembered and the other forgot that truth so trite, but so aptly put by Carlyle: "Genius is an immense capacity for taking trouble."

SPIRITUAL BABYHOOD, SPIRITUAL MANHOOD.

What a difference lies between these two conditions. It is to the former class the apostle addresses the bracing appeal: "Therefore leaving the principles of the doctrine of Christ, let us go on unto perfection." That is, leaving the swaddling bands of babyhood, let us go on unto maturity and manhood. A baby is a very lovely thing at a certain age, but an everlasting baby is a great nuisance. May the Lord save us from spiritual dwarfs, antiquated babies, and Christians that everlastingly need to be nursed, and lead us all, with the new Spring-time, into robust and holy manhood.—Rev. A. B. Simpson.

LEARN TO WORK.

No young man can make a success in life unless he works. He can not loaf around the street-corners and saloons without deteriorating. He must learn a trade or do some honest work, or, before he knows it, he will be a chronic loafer, despised by all with whom he comes in contact.

Do something, no matter how small, and do it well, and you will eventually find yourself climbing the ladder of success. There are many obstacles to overcome, but toil, grit and endurance will overcome them all. Help yourself, and God and good men will help you.—Farm and Fireside.

THE ART OF SILENCE.

No art puts more healing and sweetness into the soul and society than the art of silence. Our worst regrets are for what we have said, rather than what we have left unsaid. Many a great success has been reaped by keeping still at the right time. Very few of our richest human relationships are preserved without wise and sacrificing silences. The difficulty lies in knowing and seizing the right time. We all know the golden opportunity when it is past. How, then, shall we acquire this art without which one never becomes a graceful Christian? It is an art whose last and hardest lesson is best learned first. Be sure it is safest and wisest to keep still when you are under the greatest provocation to speak. It is then that silence is of the most value, and one such silence carries easily within itself the promise and power of all lesser ones.—Sunday-School Times.

Who does not welcome the man of cheerful and hopeful spirit? The happy countenance, the genial smile, the winning way and the timely word have an inspiring and uplifting influence. Men are attracted and won by a kindly manner and generous action. He is a benefactor who carries sunshine into the home, church and community. A bright optimism is always preferable to a gloomy pessimism.—Presbyterian.

We should be stepping-stones to heaven, not stumbling-blocks. Christ revealed himself as the Way; and we, as "members of Christ," are part of that Way.—J. L. Hurlbut.

Hygiene.

AN INSIDIOUS IMP.

The use of coca wine and such stuff is ruining many persons. A student writes to a contemporary that she has chewed coca leaves for over three months, and has done more work than she used to in six months. The poor, simple girl is in the same condition as the drunkard. It has been said that coca in any form does not create force or energy, but, in some mysterious way, it sets every latent and reserve energy in the body in motion. Thus the abnormally stimulated system uses up energy needed for emergencies, and at last collapses. By its anæsthetic action it destroys or deadens the sense of hunger, and food is not craved, thus adding another element of final exhaustion. Even strong coffee or tea habitually used can conceal a man's breaking condition from him for many years. Tobacco does the same. The other day a merchant remarked: "I could not get through my business if it was not for my cigars." He might just as well have said: "I could not keep my bank account good if I did not pawn my stock, or pay my interest account if I did not take the money out of the principal."—New York Advocate.

HYGIENE OF THE NIGHT.

Sunshine is good for beds by daylight. The best number of persons to each bed is—one. Away with heavy hangings. Beware a dusty, musty carpet; better sweetness and a bare floor. Do not fail to provide some means for ventilation during the night. Keep the head cool while sleeping. If a folding-bed must be used, contrive some way to keep it aired. Let the pillow be high enough to bring the head in a natural position. Air the sleeping-room every day; air the beds and bedding often. A dark corner is not fitted for a sleeping-room. A bed which has done service for a generation or two without remaking is not fit to sleep upon.—Exchange.

THE MOST ATTRACTIVE ROUTE TO BALTIMORE VIA WASHINGTON CITY.

The Chesapeake and Ohio railway with its connections offers by far the most interesting route to the Conference in Baltimore in May. The route from Louisville is through the Blue Grass region of Kentucky, passing Frankfort, the State Capital, Lexington and the home of Henry Clay. At Ashland the line from Cincinnati is joined; the route from Cincinnati being along the banks of the beautiful Ohio river for 165 miles. Shortly after entering West Virginia the banks of the Kanawha river are followed, Kanawha Falls is passed and the canons of New River are penetrated. After skirting the picturesque Greenbrier for 50 miles, the heights of the Alleghenies are reached; and next comes the Shenandoah Valley, the Blue Ridge Mountains and Piedmont section, the most beautiful of the Appalachain Valley. After passing through Charlottsville and Gordonsville, the route is through the most memorable battle-fields of the Civil War, among them Cedar Mountain, Culpepper, Rappahannock, Warrenton Junction, Manasses and Bull Run.

FELIX H. G TAYLOR.

There appeared in the columns of the Advocate more than twenty years ago, from the pen of Dr C. K. Marshall, an eloquent and highly appreciative memoir of the Rev. and Hon. John Moore Taylor, late of Madison parish, La. Not a few readers of this paper will learn with equal regret of the death of his son, Mr. Felix H. G. Taylor, of Lake Providence, La.

Mr. Taylor was born in Huntsville, Ala., March 28, 1822, and came to Vicksburg, Miss., in 1832. His home was in Mississippi until he became a planter in Carroll parish, La., in 1853. He graduated at Randolph-Macon College in 1845; was ever a man of scholarly tastes and unusual mentality.

During the war of secession Mr. Taylor was a member of the State Legislature, serving throughout that trying period as senator. He was also a member of the same body during the first Nicholls administration—an even more critical period of the history of his State—and rendered important service in the rehabilitation of the shattered commonwealth. He was always very pronounced in his political views, and knew no more of a compromise of these than of his principles. His interest was unremitting in all that pertained to the welfare of his State and home community.

Mr. Taylor was married three times. His last wife and eight children survive him. Few men have been more to their families than he—friend, companion and priest within his household.

He died Feb. 7, 1898, at his residence in Providence, La. He contemplated the past with regret only because of what he deemed the deficiencies of his life as a follower of Christ and a member of his church. He endured the feebleness and privations of his latter days with equanimity, fortitude, patience, and with confidence he anticipated victory in death and awaited the joys of heaven. II. Cor. v, 1-6, was a favorite passage. Turning to it in the Bible that lay always upon his writing-desk in the postoffice, he once asked me to expound it more perfectly to him.

The period of youth was one of irreligion. That all his days had not been as his latter days was a grief to him, but his faith in the atoning blood of Jesus was absolute, and he made no doubt that the all-merciful Father had blotted out the record that he himself could not obliterate. He became a member of the M. E. Church, South, in young manhood, but for some years his religious experience was that of aspiration rather than realization. But he had entered into the conscious experience of salvation more than fifteen years before the exit to come up higher reached him. He ripened in the Christian graces towards the end of life. His presiding elder, Rev. B. F. White, preached last Fall on the text, "If any man have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his." Mr. Taylor sat in his usual seat, and faithfully applied all the tests the preacher suggested in the course of the sermon for determining whether one were certainly in Christ. The following Wednesday evening he gave his testimony, saying that he did indeed realize that he was in Christ, and that by the tests of God's own Word. His love for the church antedated his conversion and endured to the end. The ministers were his friends. He delighted in their company, and rejoiced in the communion of saints. His chief field of Christian effort was the Sunday-school, of which he had been superintendent in his home church for many years. His nature was genial and his friendships intense. He longed for the salvation of those whom he loved, and allowed no opportunity of speaking a word in season to pass unimproved. Death had no terrors for him. He passed in peace from the light of earth's duties into the day of God's paradise. May my last and his like his!

FITZGERALD SALE PARKER.

LENOIR—JULIA PAINE LENOIR, daughter of Mr. S. and Mrs. Julia P. Lenoir, of near Aberdon, Miss., was born Dec. 31, 1879, and died Dec. 5, 1897.

Thus passed away, in the bloom and buoyancy of life's Spring-time, our fair, sweet young friend. Her illness was but of three weeks' duration. She and her younger sister were students at the I. I. and C. at Columbus. Resuming their school work upon the opening of the session, after passing the rigid examinations in which so many others failed, she was taken with typhoid fever, and in a short while loving hands conveyed her to her home, where she patiently lingered for five days, and then calmly fell asleep. We speak of her as dead, but death to her is but a peaceful slumber. The casket contains her dust; she herself lives forever with the angels. Her pure young life was as bright as a sunbeam on a May morning. It was an expression of the sweet Christian character, and a benediction and inspiration to all who knew her. It will live behind it through the coming years an odor of sweet perfume.

She was reared in a Christian home and baptized in infancy by her distinguished relative, Bishop Galloway, she early gave her heart to Christ, and was duly united with the church. A shining light in the church, and the idol of a large circle of devoted friends, it was yet in the morning that this sweet girl's character shone with unclimmed lustre. In the endearing relations of daughter and sister she was verily a queen, a model. She clung to loved ones with passionate tenderness, and in unceasing prayers to God to make them happy she seemed to study only to forget self. Ever faithful in loving offices to mother, the devoted companion of older sister and the guardian spirit of the younger, the trusting and trusted and confidential associate of the older brother (a second mother to the little ones), and, in gentlest ministries of love, a very angel of gladness and sunshine in an afflicted father, it is no wonder that, with her departure, the light of the home has gone out, and the shadows are dark and heavy.

Julia Paine Lenoir was truly a lovely character. Her price was above rubies. Nature had richly endowed her in mind and soul, and divine grace fashioned nature's handiwork into a polished shaft of young Christian womanhood. We have never known a more modest, unassuming, self-denying Christian, nor a life more full of joy and sunlight. Were I to inscribe her epitaph in two simple words, I would write, "Self-sacrificing love." An instance of this predominating trait occurred a short time before her departure. When her sister gave her five dollars with which to purchase a school or society badge, she said, "I appreciate the gift, but, oh, how I would love to give it all to the missionary cause, and in this way commemorate my birthday." She did not live to celebrate her birthday, and now the sister declares that the present shall be appropriated as the sainted one desired. Her last moments were, like her life, tranquil and serene. The same sunny cheerfulness that had accompanied her through the daytime of life abode with her when the night was drawing its sable curtains about her for her long and peaceful sleep. May He who tempers the wind to the shorn lamb be comfort and solace to the stricken hearts of the shadowed home! H. T. CUNNINGHAM.

Carrollton, Miss.

OWEN—S. CLIFFON OWEN, son of B. L. and Mrs A. C. Owen, was born Oct 19, 1857, in Itawamba county, Miss.; was reared in Verona, Miss.; lived several years each in Kosciusko, Miss., Waxahatchie, Texas, and McComb City, Miss., and ascended to heaven from San Antonio, Texas, Jan. 27, 1898.

His life was one of sacrificial service for home. At the age of thirteen his father died, leaving him with a Christian mother, the care provision and education of younger brothers and sisters. He left the schoolroom, entered the store, and early became perfect master of this problem thrust upon his young, but mature mind. The brothers and sisters feel that they have lost in him both father and brother.

His life was one of perpetual consecration to the church. Wherever he lived, whether in Mississippi or in Texas, there was at once recognized in him that faith, that energy, that intrepidity essential to successful leadership in the church. As steward, he has been the preacher's advisor, provider, friend; as Epworth League president, he has been the inspiration and guide of the church's young life; as Sunday-school teacher, he has sown seed and cultivated hearts which will some day produce abundant fruitage; as a Christian, he was a noble example, a bright and shining light. Unfaltering and unwavering in fidelity to truth and right, stainless and staunch in character, the very embodiment of integrity and virtue, an appreciative employer has called him "my Henry Grady."

Memorial services at Waxahatchie, Texas, and at Tupelo and Kosciusko, Miss.; a "memorial bed" placed in Orphans' Home by McComb City League, and a circle of mourning friends as large as his acquaintance, tell of his worth and the sincere esteem of his friends. His life was beautiful, his death a glorious triumph.

On a bright Sunday morning we laid his body away in the town of Verona, but there was very little given to the earth. Frail in body, there was very little clay in "Cliff;" he was all soul.

We commend his loved ones to a loving Father, whom they know and in whom they trust. J. C. PARK

Happy Homes

..AND THE..

Hearts that Make Them;

Or, Thrifty People and Why They Thrive

BY

SAMUEL SMILES,

AUTHOR OF SELF-HELP, CHARACTER, DUTY, THRIFT, ETC.

CAREFULLY REVISED WITH ADDITIONAL MATTER BY CHAS. A. CASKELL, A. M.

A beautifully illustrated book of 644 pages, cover stamped in gold, marble edges, size 8vo, red cloth. Probably no books of the same general type were ever written that have so much interested and inspired to worthy action the various classes to whom they were addressed, as have the productions of SAMUEL SMILES. The marked interest which attaches to MR. SMILES' productions is chiefly due to his happy use of biography. Readers who tire of extended biographical histories find here groups of the wise and distinguished of earth, each giving testimony to the various principles the author wishes to inculcate. The interest excited by the novel arises solely from our interest in the lives and struggles of men and women. They are interesting biographies; but much more interest should attach to lives actually lived and conquests actually made, provided they are produced with equal care. The home is the epitome of society and government. The application of these principles to every member of the home—the importance of their inculcation in the home, where character is chiefly molded—and the value of such lessons in making every home what it may be and should be, has dictated the title,

"Happy Homes and the Hearts that Make Them."

Publisher's price, $2.50. Sent postpaid to any address on receipt of price. To any subscriber who will pay his subscription one full year in advance—viz., to March, '99—we will send it postpaid for $1.85.

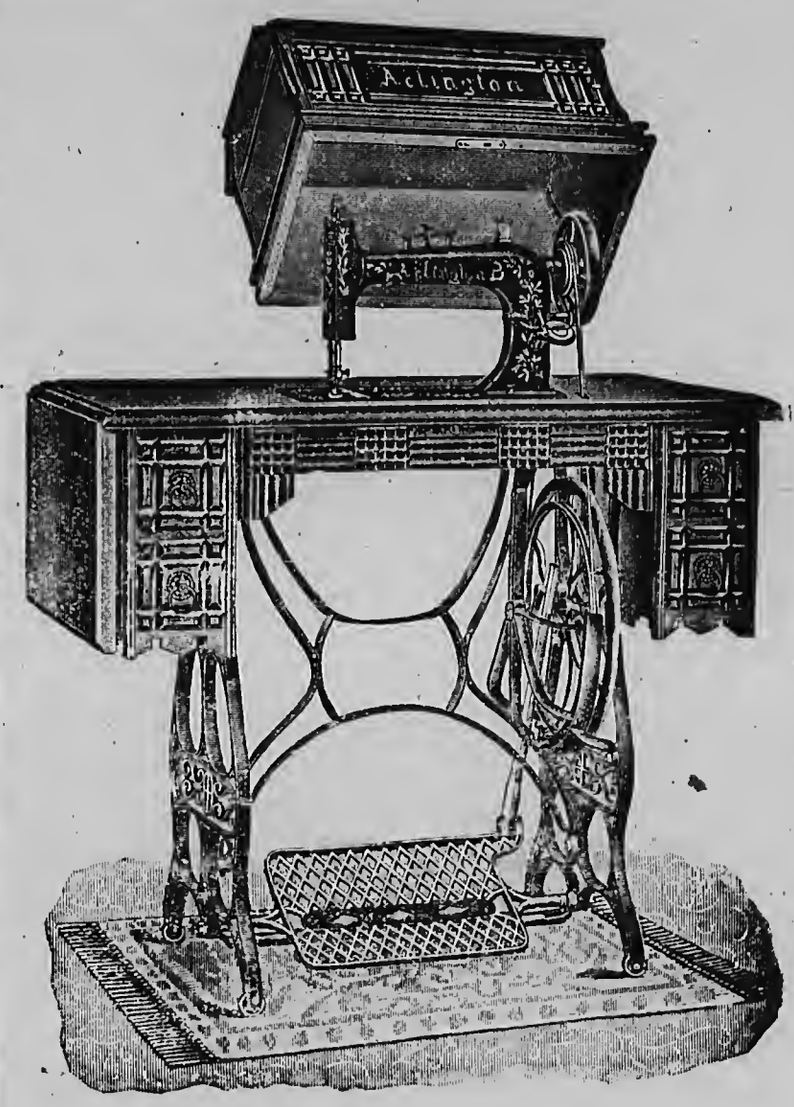
Our Machine Offer.

New Improved High-Arm "Arlington B" Self-Threading Sewing Machine.

A recorded certificate of warranty for 10 years accompanies each machine. The "Arlington B" is complete in every detail, combining all modern and late improvements, such as automatic bobbin winder, self-threading shuttle, self-setting needle, upper spring tension, etc.



The "Arlington B" self-threading sewing machine has a large high arm, its mechanical appearance is perfect, its adjustment is absolute, positive take-up, convenient foot rest, with the best style furniture, either oak or walnut; in addition to which each machine is furnished with the best steel combination attachments free, as follows: One tucker, one foot ruffler, one set of plain hemmers (five different widths up to seven-eighths of an inch), one binder, one shirring plate and one under-braider, packed in a handsome velvet lined case. It is also furnished with one foot hemmer, one screw driver, one wrench, one oil can with oil, one gauge, one package of needles, six bobbins and one instruction book.

THE HEAD is strong and substantial; has large space under the arm for handling bulky goods, is finely japanned and protected by a hard finish. Has so few bearings and friction points that it is easily oiled and kept clean.

NEEDLE BAR is round, with adjustable bearing polished and fitted, insuring great wear, and can run a long time without oiling. It has a slack dip motion, relieving the strain upon the thread when the shuttle is passing through the loop. Using the adjustable take-up, controlling the threads perfectly on all grades of work.

IMPROVED AUTOMATIC BOBBIN WINDER which is so positive and reliable in its action that an imperfectly wound bobbin is an impossibility. So simple that a child can easily operate it. This valuable attachment renders possible a perfect control of shuttle tension.

SELF-THREADING—The "Arlington B" is self-threading, requiring no change from light to heavy work. Uses double thread, and makes the lock stitch.

THE NEEDLE is the same as used on the New Home machine, and is self-setting both as to height and position with reference to shuttle, with short blade and long shank, insuring great strength; finely polished.

SELF-THREADING SHUTTLE—A perfect steel cylinder shuttle with delicate and perfect tension, open at one end to allow the bobbin to be inserted without displacing any of the parts; runs loose in the shell, without spring centre or point bearings, thus insuring an even tension; can be threaded in the dark, and easily understood.

LOOSE PULLEY for winding the bobbin without running the machine requires no change or adjustment, nor is it necessary to remove the work from the machine.

PARTS SUBJECT TO WEAR are made of the finest steel, case hardened, light and noiseless and are very durable.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

The Ohio Senate has passed a bill for a State Examining Board to license barbers.

The gross receipts of the Pennsylvania Railroad for last year were over $128,000,000.

John Hopkins University has asked the Maryland Legislature for an appropriation of $100,000.

The Senate of Ohio passed a bill authorizing the governor to appoint women notaries public. It is now a law. This is probably the extent of the change in the political status of women that will be made by the present Legislature.

A bill was introduced into the National House of Representatives, on March 7, appropriating $50,000,000 for buying war vessels and preparing for hostilities. The bill was introduced after a conference at the White House.

The general officers of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union have announced that it is their intention to carry out the plan of their late leader, Frances E. Willard, with reference to the retirement of the temple trust bonds.

It has been developed through telegraphic correspondence between Secretary Long and Admiral Sieard, that the court of inquiry declined to fix even an approximate date for the conclusion of its investigation into the disaster to the "Maine."

St. Louis is to have an office building erected exclusively for women. The offices are to be rented to business or professional women. Special inducements are to be offered for the attraction of dressmakers, milliners, hairdressers, women manicurists, chiropodists, typewriters, women physicians and women lawyers.

The Senate Commerce Committee, which has been charged with the investigation of complaints against the character and political conduct of Naval Officer Henry Demas at this port, has reported unfavorably to him, and advised that the Senate do not confirm his appointment which had been made by the President.

George D. Tillman is a candidate for governor of South Carolina. He is an ex-member of Congress, 70 years old, and a brother of the senator, to whom he has not spoken since the senator, in order to repay W. J. Talbot for political services backed him and defeated his brother's reelection. George D. Tillman is a man of great ability and different in every way from the present senator.

On Saturday the British steamship "Indrani" cleared from this port with a cargo of cotton and iron direct for Japan. The ship will go to Kobe, via Yokohama, and her departure marks the opening of a new trade route for this port. The "Indrani's" cargo consisted of 11,500 bales of cotton and 3800 tons of pig iron. The iron and 3800 bales of cotton were taken on board at Mobile, and the balance of the cotton was loaded here.

Eight men-of-war, which are now practically completed in foreign shipyards, have been offered for sale to the United States. The President has given consideration to the advisability of placing an option on them. The Secretary of the Navy has learned that he can now purchase for about $10,000,000 two small-sized battle-ships, two armored cruisers and four torpedo boats. The builders have urged that the purchases be made at once, as they say that a declaration of war would result in the enforcement of neutrality laws and prevent the sale of ships. The battle-ships and armored cruisers have been built by English and German firms for governments which are now unable to pay for them.

NOW IS THE TIME

To purify your blood with Hood's Sarsaparilla. March, April, May are the trying months of the year. At this season your blood is loaded with impurities which have accumulated during the Winter, and these impurities must be immediately expelled. Hood's Sarsaparilla is the One True Blood Purifier. It is the medicine which has accomplished many thousands of remarkable cures of all blood diseases. It is what the millions take in the Spring to build up health and ward off sickness.

FOREIGN.

The President of Argentina has vetoed the bill authorizing bull fights in Buenos Ayres.

The memorial services, on March 6, at the Methodist Episcopal Church in Mexico City, in honor of the "Maine's" dead, was attended by the American minister and all prominent Americans. The authorities sent a military band, which rendered suitable selections. Many Mexican and Cuban sympathizers were present.

Ever since the withdrawal of Senor Dupuy de Lome, recently Spanish Minister at Washington, for writing a letter discourteous to President McKinley, the Spanish press has not ceased to criticise the Madrid Government for what the papers call weakness in so promptly yielding to the demands from Washington, and, as an offset to the De Lome incident, they demand that Consul General Lee's recall be asked, on the ground that he has become "persona non grata," because of open sympathy for the insurgents. It now appears that the Spanish Ministry has yielded to the popular clamor to the extent of intimating to United States Minister Woodford that General Lee's recall would be agreeable to Spain.

At the Capitol.

I am in my seventy-third year, and for fifty years I have been a great sufferer from indigestion, constipation and biliousness. I have tried all the remedies advertised for these diseases, and got no permanent relief. About one year ago, the disease assuming a more severe and dangerous form, I became very weak, and lost flesh rapidly. I commenced using Dr. Mozley's Lemon Elixir. I gained twelve pounds in three months. My strength and health, my appetite and my digestion were perfectly restored, and now I feel as young and vigorous as I ever did in my life.

The speediest and most reliable remedy for all derangements of the throat and lungs is Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. This wonderful preparation checks coughing, induces refreshing sleep, and affords great relief, even in the advanced stages of consumption.

Pray for no particular blessings, but for that state of mind which will make His will ours.

SOLITUDE.

BY ELLA WHEELER.

Laugh, and the world laughs with you;
Weep, and you weep alone;
For the sad old earth must borrow its mirth,
But has trouble enough of its own.
Sing, and the hills will answer;
Sigh, it is lost on the air;
The echoes bound to a joyful sound,
But shrinking from voicing care.

Rejoice, and men will seek you;
Grieve, and they turn and go;
They want full measure of all your pleasure,
But they do not heed your woe.
Be glad, and your friends are many;
Be sad, and you lose them all.
There are none to decline your meat and wine,
But alone you must drink life's gall.

Feast, and your halls are crowded;
Fast, and the world goes by;
Succeed and give, and it helps you to live,
But no man can help you die.
There is room in the halls of pleasure
For a large and lordly train;
But one by one we must all file on
Through the narrow aisle of pain.

SOME COMMENTS.

This ADVOCATE, of March 3, which just come to my hand, is full of rest to me, and moves me to some ments.

1. "Gilderoy" follows the Minutes the North Mississippi Conference giving 1856 as the date of my en- nce into the itinerant ministry. is is an error. At that date I was Oxford, Miss., trying to get ready enter. "Gilderoy" is my senior one year. He was "soldiering" en I was received on trial in the mphis Conference with Dr. J. W. well in 1859. A. P. Sage was re; six years old in the Confer- e. He and I had been to school ether; had sat at the feet of that at teacher and noble man, the v. James N. Temple, A. M. A ler, truer heart never beat than t of A. P. Sago.

2. Bro. T. W. Lewis has an inter- ing article on 'Our Domestic Mis- s." His main topics are of seri- moment, and ought to be better derstood at large. I can not quite ree with all he says concerning the at stretches of territory in what is wn as the interior of our Confer- e that are not as strong to-day rally as they were some years ." So far as exodus has affected "interior," it has not been wholly the worse. Sometimes the effect the other way. The well-to-do out the poorer, the thriftless, and floating, and the community is proved. I am sure that it is safe ay that in the interior counties, well as other parts of the State, ro has been, within the last fifteen rs, a steady improvement on the lo in houses for worship, for ools, for preachers' homes, in the stion of school grades, and in the ess of teachers. Modes of living e improved and methods of agri- ure. There is increased convic- and expression in legislative and iciary circles in favor of public als and domestic order.

ue, there are some regions far nd, and spots in retrograde, but point is, that there is improve- t, either manifest or potential; this ought to move us to persist- aggressive effort, until it can not aid "that in a great many com- ities there are lawless men who wild-cat stills and peddle out ky to those who drink, and the people seem to be powerless to the evil." The fact is, that the -cat crowd is the old crowd of ky peddlers and drinkers who been driven to desperate straits e "good people" of these inte- counties, and nearly all the ties of the State, in the over- of the saloon. It must not be otten that these "wild-cats" are ed from the fire that burned old dens, and they can be d out of their retreats if the people" and good officers will ly pursue their search together.

3. Space fails me to say all I wish in favor of Bro. Lewis' idea of need- ed change in this field, and also in commendation of President J. W. Malone's call for the endowed college for young ladies. The truth is, a school that is called a college ought to be what its name properly desig- nates. To make it so, under the ex- isting status and functions of educa- tion, requires endowment. Why not endow our school at Grenada, and make it a college proper in its whole organization and outfit?

It will be a great step forward if the next General Conference shall arrange for such modification of our denominational work in education that there shall be clear boundaries for the preparatory or training- school, the college, and the univer- sity, and that the lower shall not take the name of the higher. I look for something valuable to be done in this direction. There are masters working for the best conditions and forms. W. T. J. SULLIVAN.

"TRANSFERRED."

On Monday morning, March 7, at eight o'clock, the Rev. Heslep Riley Tucker was "transferred" from the church militant to the church tri- umphant. At the home of an hum- ble Christian farmer, twenty-two miles from the railroad—on his way from the seat of one Quarterly Con- ference to that of another—he was taken sick and fell at his post of duty with his face toward heaven. He now rests from his labors, but his works do follow him. Two weeks ago he was present at my prayer meeting (he always attended when he was at home), but last night (Thursday), as I looked at that va- cant seat, I realized with much sad- ness that I should see him there no more.

One of the truest and most faithful men that ever lived has gone. I loved him more than any man with whom I was ever associated. Our friendship grew stronger with the coming of every day (we had been much together of late). I can hardly realize that he has gone. He died as he lived—with the conscious assur- ance that God was with him. Peace- fully, triumphantly, he crossed to the other shore, and we do not sorrow as those that have no hope, for we ex- pect some sweet day by and by to meet him in "that land of pure de- light," where we'll never say good- by.

The funeral services were more largely attended than those of, per- haps, any person who ever died here and scarcely a dry eye could be seen in the house. Our beautiful new church, in which he had taken so much interest, was draped in black and white, and all about the altar and on the casket were seen some of the most beautiful flowers that could possibly be procured. These flowers, raised at great expense by the ladies of different denominations for ship- ment to the Northern and Western cities, were freely given as evidences of sympathy for the family, and high appreciation of the life and labors of this noble man of God. The preach- ers of the district acted as pall bear- ers, and the Woodmen of the World, of which he was an honored member, followed in a body to the grave. The writer (whose privilege and pleasure it has been to be the pastor of the family during this year), assisted by Revs. J. M. Wyatt and J. H. Shu- maker, conducted the services, and Rev. W. T. J. Sullivan, D. D., in his own tender and loving manner, de- livered a touching address, paying high tribute to the life and labors of our departed brother. At the close of the service two men not members of any church came forward and laid —each— a white flower upon the casket.

Besides those already mentioned the following preachers were pres ent: Revs. M. H. Honuoll, B. P. Fnl- lilove, W. A. Clark, W. R. Williams, D. C. Foust, and Revs. Smith and Thornton, of the Presbyterian and Baptist Churches.

The prayers of the entire church are asked for Sister Tucker, the six children, and his aged father, that He who has taken such particular oversight of us as to number the very hairs of our head, may give comfort and consolation and strength in this trying hour. The two oldest sons are preachers in the North Mis- sissippi Conference. May the mantle of their ascended father fall on them!

MEMORIAL OF SYMPATHIES.

At a called meeting of the preachers of the Corinth district, North Missis- sippi Conference, March 8, 1898, held in the pastor's study at Booneville, Miss., there was sadness in all hearts and tears in all eyes. Our faithful leader and brother beloved had fallen. Rev. Heslep R. Tucker tri- umphed gloriously as he died at his post with the whole armor of God upon him. There was earnest and faithful prayer and counsel, and ten- derest expressions of heartfelt sym- pathy and love, for his precious and stricken family. With unwavering confidence we commend them to the loving favor of the good Father who careth for his children, carrying them as lambs in his bosom, as the Good Shepherd; under his wings as the hen her brood, with his eye upon them to guide and keep. May his grace sustain, comfort, and heal! We loved our brother for his purity of heart, single eye, noble purpose, high aim, and ability to serve his Master so well. We will endeavor to emulate his example as he followed Christ, and strive, with his loved ones, to all meet him in the home of the soul. J. H. SHUMAKER, Sec.

Such a day as that in Booneville we have rarely seen before. Such beautiful symmetry and harmony of effort to properly honor the dead and comfort the living; such a sense of the divine presence; how solemnly sweet and uplifting to be there! Bro. Tucker was a very congenial companion, spiritually minded and helpful to all. He made every preacher in the district a confidant, and familiarized them with all the intricate problems and minutest de- tails of the presiding elder's work, and thus everyone became deeply in- terested in every part of the field. He loved the preachers, and seldom mentioned the defects of any, but was constantly lauding all for their successes. He particularized every- thing, and was ready any day to turn over his work to a successor. I was with him during his last illness, and in his rational moments his faith was sublime, supremely happy, radi- ant with peace, joy, and hope. Said he was ready to go, and hadn't a doubt. He kept the faith, fought a good fight, and, without doubt, wears a crown of life. J. H. S.

HOW TO BUILD UP COUNTRY CHURCHES.

BY THEODORE L. CUYLER, D. D.

How to bring the masses in our large towns within ear-shot of the gospel is one of the most constantly threshed questions of the day. But the percentage of attendance upon places of Sabbath worship in the rural districts shows a lamentable falling off during the last fifty years. The statistics published by Dr. Josiah Strong, of the Evangelical Alliance, and other high authorities prove this sad fact. The farming population of New England, of New York, of New Jersey, and of the Northern States generally (we can not speak as intel- ligently in regard to the South), used to be a church-going population. At present an immense proportion of the people on farms and in the small hamlets seldom enter the house of God. Their Sabbaths are spent in sitting idly about their dwellings, or strolling in their fields, or in visiting neighbors, or, in too many cases, in some form of amusement. The ex- cuse that their hard work during the week necessitates entire bodily rest on the Lord's day was not made by their forefathers in past generations; and, as a matter of fact, the dwellers in the rural districts for half of the year have more leisure and less toil than the dwellers in the cities.

This subject is one of vital impor- tance; it touches the religious life, the conscience-life of the nation. Rapidly as the cities grow, the ma- jority of the American people live in what may be called the agricultural districts. How can the rural popu- lation be reached? How can the non-church-goers be brought to the houses of worship? How can the country churches be filled up? How can the careless and unconverted class be brought under the reach and power of a living gospel?

The first answer to these questions concerns the country ministers. Here, for example, is a Christian minister who has accepted the charge of a rural parish. His first business is— or should be— to find out who live in that parish, and that he can only do by going among the people thor- oughly. A missionary to China does not wait for the Chinese to come to him; he goes after them. An ambas- sador of Jesus Christ to the residents of a rural region is under the same obligation to go after those resi- dents, rich or poor, high or humble. He ought to know just where every family within the reasonable bounds of his parish stands, and this he can only do by proper personal inquiry. When he ascertains that any partic- ular family belongs regularly to some other congregation he has nothing further to do with them. He is a shepherd, but not a sheep-stealer. When he comes upon a family or an individual who does not attend upon any place of divine worship his first duty undoubtedly is to use every possible influence to bring that fam- ily or that person to the church in which he preaches. He is not set to work for salary, but to watch for souls. Every human soul that he can reach he is bound to reach.

It is not enough to extend a cor- dial invitation to non-church-goers. To call at a farm-house, or at the dwelling of some humble day-laborer, and ask the inmates to attend his church, may prove a bootless busi- ness, or, in some cases, be regarded as a piece of clerical "electioneering." He should, first of all, become ac- quainted with the family or the per- son; he should interest himself in them, and seek to win their personal regard. A minister can do very lit- tle good to those who do not like him, and none at all to those who will not listen to him. His first aim should be to win hearts. If there is sickness in the house, let him sympa- thize with and do what he can for the sufferers; if there is trouble, let him turn comforter; if there are chil- dren, let him notice them, and get hold of them. The chief power of every genuine minister of Jesus Christ is heart-power; that was our Divine Master's real power, after all. When a minister has won a hold on the hearts of any household, he can bring them to listen to the gospel message interested to him. Congre- gations are built up externally by thorough pastoral visitation and per- sonal effort; they are built up inter- nally by faithful, fearless, loving setting forth of God's glorious Word. Dr. Chalmers, of Scotland, was the most colossal minister of Christ dur- ing the first third of this century; and about the most memorable sen- tence he ever uttered was that "a house-going minister makes a church- going people." It is my intensely earnest conviction that the foremost duty of every ordained preacher is not merely to prepare sermons, but to be a shepherd of souls, and espe- cially of every soul that is outside of the fold of Christ. Every successful rural pastor will say "Amen" to this declaration.

The responsibility for this lament- ably increasing neglect of all religious ordinances in the rural communities may rest in part upon the ministry; it also rests, in part, upon the officers and members of many of the churches. The personal and so- cial relations of people in the coun- try are very different from those of residents in the large cities. Every farmer is apt to know every other farmer; every merchant knows his customers, and the humblest day- laborer is not a stranger to his neigh- bors. This personal acquaintance in a community is an immense advan- tage in creating a church life; it more than compensates for the dis- tances between residences or from a house of worship. If the hearts of rural Christians are up to blood- heat, their opportunities for personal efforts, for the conversion, and for quickening the spiritual life of their neighbors, are far greater than those of Christians in the great towns. Personal acquaintance affords religi- ous opportunity and creates religi- ous responsibility. Then, also, the dwellers in the country have not the thousand things to absorb their time and attention that the residents of cities have. My own early life was spent in a farming region, and the last forty-five years of it in a great city; and from my own observation I am persuaded that it is easier to cul- tivate a strong spiritual life in the country than it is in the towns. I recall now a rural church in my na- tive region to which the farmers came for miles around, unhindered by the deepest mud in March, or the deepest snows in January. Two serv- ices on the Lord's day did not weary them; the pastor gave them strong meat on Sunday, and a grip of his hand during the week. In revi- val seasons he got some help from a neighboring pastor, for the joyful work of leading souls to Christ was not put out "on commission" to itin- erant strangers. Church members worked for spiritual harvests just as they worked for harvests of wheat and corn on their own farms. The long Winters were especially favor- able for spiritual activities.

Now, what was possible in rural communities a half century ago is equally possible now; it is realized now when pastor and people come up to the full measure of their duty. If all rural ministers would scour their parishes to gather in the neg- lecters of the Sabbath and the sanc- tuary, and if church members would keep the spiritual atmosphere of their hearts warm, and the spiritual life of their church active and ag- gressive, this sorrowful shame and scandal of religious decline in the country region would be soon abated. It was from the rural parishes that the mighty ministers like Payson and Bushnell and Finney and Bishop Simpson came, and the mighty mis- sionaries like Judson and Spalding and Goodell; they reared our leading Christian laymen and "mothers in Israel." On the life of the country churches depends, in large measure, the social, moral and religious health of our nation. Decline there means decay and death! A new spiritual life there means new life everywhere. "He that hath ears to hear, let him hear!"—New York Independent.

A FIELD OF LABOR.

BY MRS. E. R. GATES.

If you are too weak to journey
Up the mountain steep and high,
You can stand within the valley
While the multitudes go by.
You can chant in happy measures
As they slowly pass along;
Though they may forget the singer,
They will not forget the song.

Do not, then, stand idly waiting
For some greater work to do.
Fortune is a lazy goddess,
She will never come to you.
Go and toil in any vineyard,
Do not fear to do or dare;
If you want a field of labor,
You can find it anywhere.

A SHIPWRECK, AND WHAT CAME OF IT.

A STORY THAT IS NOT ALL FICTION.

BY REV. W. P. ANDREWS,

Author of "Two Epistles: I. To Professors of Perfect Love. II. To Opposers of the 'Second Blessing.'"

CHAPTER II.

ON PROVIDENCE ISLAND.

Knowing no other name for it, they named the island Providence. By means of such tools as they had been able to take from the ship, on taking their hurried departure therefrom, they improvised huts of the timbers of the island. They fed upon berries, herbs, birds, and shell-fish. Day after day passed, and week was added to week, but no vessel was sighted, no hope of escape from their Patmos came to them. At length they began to ask themselves: "Is it possible that God would have us live thus isolated from the world, where there is no human being whom we can bring to Christ?" So it seemed. Yet, were they not greatly distressed, feeling that "God doeth all things well."

By and by a little chapel was built, where this isolated company of Christians came often together. No heathen or other unsaved persons with whom to labor, they soon came to realize that there were differences of views among them; nor did they feel that they were one in experience. Their discussions sometimes grew warm, and they seemed to be on the eve of a rupture. Strange as it may seem, their differences were on the subject of holiness. One said, "We are wholly purified in regeneration;" another, "Sin remains in them that believe." One declared, "Entire sanctification is the removal of inbred sin;" another, "It is simply more love, a greater nearness to God." One insisted, "Sanctification is an instantaneous work;" another, "It is attained by growth."

One Sunday afternoon all were together in the little chapel to participate in a love feast. Bro. Fullilove presided. Two or three soul-stirring songs were sung, a Scripture lesson was read, and a brother and sister led successively in prayer. Each sipped from the same cup of water as a token of brotherly love, and experiences followed. All were in the Spirit, and differences were forgotten.

Bro. Fullilove told his experience first. He told how, when he was without Christ, he was arrested by the Word and the Spirit; how God spoke peace to his soul; how the Lord had borne with his weaknesses and brought him through his trials; and how his love was then filling his soul. Not by a word that he uttered did he seem to say, "I am holier than thou."

Bro. Porter followed. He said: "I gave my heart to God while a boy. I know my sins were then forgiven. My peace, however, did not remain constant, and I frequently stumbled; but about seventeen years ago I settled down into one long, sweet, abiding life of peace, trust, hope, and love. My last battle with God was fought on the question of perfect and cheerful submission to his will. It was a Garden of Gethsemane, a night of agony, but my human will bowed in humble submission to God's will, and then the peace of God that passeth all understanding filled my mind and heart. It abides to this blessed hour, only growing sweeter, and I shall never cease to thank God for the trial that he sent to establish me."

Bro. Jacks, whose prematurely white locks gave him a venerable appearance, was next upon his feet. He said: "I was converted when a little boy but nine years of age. From that day to this I have been the Lord's. Some years ago, when studying the life of the Savior with reference to preparing my catechism, I came into such a realization of his nearness to me as I had never felt before. Since then I have never been without the evidence of his presence with me. Trials, afflictions, death, have invaded my home, but I have not spent one lonely hour."

Sister Secunda arose: "It was fifteen years ago last month that the Lord, for Christ's sake, forgave my sins. It was a happy hour, and I shall never forget it. Two years ago the well known evangelist, Dr. C., came to our town, on the invitation of the pastor, to hold a meeting. There was much prejudice against him because of his advocacy of the 'second blessing.' I was myself hardly willing to hear him. However, the Holy Spirit seemed to be present from the start, and the interest in the meeting grew from day to day. Mr. Secunda yielded the second day of the meeting, and on the third day I got under conviction. The Spirit showed me much in my conduct and spirit that was contrary to the spirit of the gospel. My burden became heavier and heavier, and I almost unconsciously moved to the altar. I felt that I would die if I did not get relief. Question after question was presented to my mind as to my willingness to do, or to refrain from doing this or that. At length all barriers gave way, and I seemed to drop into the arms of the Savior. O, such peace! Brothers and sisters, that peace is mine to day."

Bro. Growthor: "I stand as a monument to God's grace. He found me a wretched sinner, and made me his own child. Though I have made many mistakes, and have often had to cry, 'Father, forgive me!' I have never had any desire to turn back from the service of God, and believe. I have steadily grown in grace. I fought a battle with the tempter when I felt the call to go as a missionary to a foreign land. It lasted for several days, and a dark cloud hovered over me, obscuring my spiritual vision. By and by the victory was won, and my soul—aye, and my body as well—seemed flooded with light, peace, and joy. It abides, and, brethren, I mean to go on to perfection."

Sister Jones closed her testimony with these words: "I have peace, sweet peace. The Lord is ever with me, and I realize his presence more and more. I believe it will yet be better further on."

Such were the testimonies of those men and women of God. All spoke. They had often before spoken of God's dealings with their souls; but, as a rule, only detached portions of the experience of each had been given. Now, ample time had been taken, and each saw the other's life as never before, and the feeling of all was, "We are one."

The meeting closed with the singing of, "Blest be the tie that binds," and a general handshaking. Never had that good old hymn been sung with greater zest. As the last notes were dying away the voice of the watchman was heard crying, "A vessel! a vessel!"

FALLACIOUS ARGUMENTS.

However objectionable may be those methods known as "clap-trap," when restored to in the common affairs of life, they are especially to be despised and shunned in any intelligent defense of biblical doctrines.

The Baptist Chronicle, of recent date, contains a catechetical lesson, the only perceptical object of which was to prop up the failing doctrine of immersion. This column, by A. M. Vardeman, contains more "clap-trap" than I have elsewhere seen or ever heard. When the reader sees a few examples of Mr. Vardeman's style of sustaining a point by questions and answers—questions having answers which do not answer—if it be not seen that I am right in calling all this "clap-trap," then this writer may be "set down" as "slow of understanding." E. G.—Mr. Vardeman asks: "Where were the first baptisms performed?" and answers by saying: "In the river Jordan." In the ordinary mortal it would not seem so strong to differ from St. Paul, but for one who poses "as a teacher sent from God," it does seem a little curious that he should plainly dispute St. Paul, who tells us that the Israelites "were all baptized" hundreds of years before John ever saw "the river Jordan" (I. Cor. x, 2).

Besides differing from St. Paul, Mr. Vardeman runs right over the author of the fourth gospel (John x, 40), who tells us plainly that "at first" John baptized "beyond Jordan." This same authority tells us the place "where John was baptizing" was "in Bethabara, beyond Jordan." The preposition "in" was evidently what Mr. Vardeman was after, but positions express place, not mode.

Had Mr. V. asked another very simple, but pertinent question, viz., "How was Jesus baptized?" he would have had an answer from the administrator in these words: "I indeed baptize"—not in water, nor under water, but—"WITH water"—not after repentance, but—"unto repentance." Wonder why Mr. V. did not take this question, and answer into his "dialogue?" (Matt. iii, 11.)

Again Mr. V. asks a question: "Did the apostles baptize infants?" He answers: "They 'baptized both men and women.'" (Acts. viii, 12.) Further on he alludes to the baptism of "households" in terms disparaging to the idea of any of these homes having children in them. Here again I wonder! How did Mr. Vardeman find out that Lydia's home was without a child—an infant (Acts xvi, 15); and the jailor's home likewise choerless (Acts xvi, 33); and Crispus "and all his house" had passed the days of childhood (Acts xviii, 8); and "the household of Stephanus" had all grown to manhood?

Mr. Vardeman may have been baptizing longer, and has baptized more people than St. Paul, but I venture to express the belief that he never baptized four "households" where there were no children. He may have baptized parts—the father and mother of as many families, but he left the children out—I suppose. He does not answer his question. To say, "They 'baptized both men and women,'" certainly does not answer the question as to "infants."

But here is another example of Mr. V.'s struggle for a feeble cause: "How many baptisms are there?" He answers this question by quoting the apostle's denunciation of doctrine of divers baptisms and the pantheism—the "gods many"—and the numerous objects of worship and trust at that time recognized among the heathens. "One Lord, one faith, one baptism." Suppose the apostle intended herein to express the idea—as no doubt he did—that the only baptism for Christians was that performed "in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost," that fact does not tell us how this "on baptism" was performed. "Immerse" was never in a New Testament till Mr. Vardeman's people put it there. But "sprinkling" has been a long time in God's purpose. "I will sprinkle clean water upon you." (Ezek. xxxvi, 25.) "Sprinkle the water of purifying." (Numbers viii, 7.)

Will Mr. V. give us a few examples of immersion? Let him try it. When John the Baptist tells that he "baptized with water," and Paul tells us he baptized in the privacy of the oriental homes and in a jail, and when we add to these statements the fact that God's original use of water as a religious rite was by sprinkling, we can stand a good deal of catechising, and escape many clap-traps.

SABBATH OBSERVANCE.

MR. EDITOR: I read a communication from Bro. Hawkins in the ADVOCATE, of recent date, on the subject of Sabbath observance, which I endorsed from beginning to end. It is a subject in which I am very much interested. It has been said that when we strike the railroad and other corporations, that we are contending with a giant. This may be true, and, in reply, I would say that the church is a strong ecclesiastical force when her powers are thrown against any evil that threatens the moral and spiritual status of our people.

There is a time when forbearance ceases to be a virtue, and surely that time has come in the desecration of the Sabbath. I was associated with a man in Meridian, Miss., a few days since, who is in the employ of a railroad company, and he said to me that he had been tempted to quit the church because he was forced to work on the Sabbath. It is the only way those men have of making a support for their families, for they have learned the trade, and could not, without injury to themselves, give up their jobs.

But one will say, "Let them give it up and follow something else." Well, suppose they do; will this make matters any better? Will it stop the evil? Will not some one take their place and keep the work of Sabbath desecration going on? The way to stop a wrong is to go to the starting point. Begin right at the tap-root, and the work of reformation will be effected. I have had it said to me that some of our preachers ride on Sunday trains. Well, if they do, it should not be done any longer; and if this be true, it does not argue the legality of Sabbath violations.

At the last convocation of our Legislature a bill was put before the House by Mr. Cox relating to Sabbath observance by railroad and other corporations, and was voted upon, and the nays carried it by three votes. Some who opposed the bill said that it was a good thing that those men could be kept at work on the Sabbath, for it kept them from shooting craps and other demoralizing games. To such I would say, "Judge not, that ye be not judged; for with what judgment ye judge ye shall be judged."

We want the railroad men to turn them loose on the Sabbath, and then it will be the business of the church to look them up and get them into the kingdom by the grace of God. But how are we to get our hands on those men as long as they are in the clutches of railroad and other corporations on the Sabbath? It is a painful thing that while our people are in the churches on Sabbath days, engaged in the service of God, trains are dashing by with their shrill whoop, ringing out through the forest, drowning the preacher's voice so that the audience can not hear a word that is being said; perhaps just a few minutes after the choir has sung, "Sweet day of rest." The heroes of our church, by faithful work, crushed the life out of the Louisiana State Lottery, and buried her out of our sight. Then the next fight has been with the whisky ring, and, thank God! we have reduced it in many places from barrels to jugs, that move around "on the sly."

I trust that everyone who loves the Sabbath will do all in their power to put down this evil that threatens the moral and spiritual life, to a great extent, of our nation.

AN IDEA.

In an article, of which it is difficult to determine whether it abounds most in inept quotations or non sequiturs, "A. C. Y." has presented to the public an idea which certainly bears the stamp of originality, viz.: that "a home be established in connection with and under control of the Mississippi Orphans' Home, for those noble old veterans who bore the heat and burden of the pioneer days of Methodism, . . . and for the widows and orphans of those preachers already gone to their reward."

A glance at the Minutes of the Mississippi Conference shows that there are on its list forty-five such claimants. How many appear on that of the North Mississippi Conference this writer can not say, but possibly as many more. That most of these servants of the Master have family ties which would, of necessity, be broken by consigning them to such an institution, is doubtless true; that a large majority would be altogether unwilling to be so consigned, is highly probable; that the church could so far forget her indebtedness to these veterans and their families as to insult them with such a proposition, is past belief. It would be more to the purpose to double their present meagre stipends, and to this our "noble philanthropic men" can contribute to the full extent of their inclination. And those "kindly, genial gentlemen of the old school, who were reared in the halcyon days of Southern chivalry, and under the 'old regime' of love, many of them fathers and grandfathers," can expend their "dormant affection" on their own children and grandchildren, where, doubtless, it will do the most good.

P. AND H. M. S., NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

We would call the attention of our members to the following report of our retiring treasurer, Mrs. Rowan Thayer, who has been "abundant in labors" during her four years of service, and will always be close in the hearts of her fellow workers. It must be borne in mind that this is not the annual report that Mrs. Thayer made at the annual meeting in Winona, nor is it a quarterly report (Mrs. Trotter, our new treasurer, will make that later), but it is only her final report in turning the office over to her successor. We hope, hereafter, to publish our quarterly reports regularly, that auxiliaries may see just what they are doing, both to encourage them and to stimulate to stronger efforts. It is the wish of the society, so expressed at annual meeting, that this be done.

Mrs. A. P. Ball, November: "The W. F. M. S. of the First M. E. Church, South, Jackson, Miss., has, since the session of last annual meeting, added seven new names to its membership, held regular monthly meetings, and is increasing in interest, notwithstanding the serious interruptions caused by the spread and dread of yellow fever. God has graciously preserved us from disease, and we are all the spared monuments of his great mercy. Observing the past week as ordered by our Woman's Board, using the subject and program prepared for daily services, we find, as a result, much warmth and growing zeal among our members, increased information, and the sum of $5.05 as a thank-offering. Amount of dues paid since June, $17.05. Our treasurer's roll contains 69 names. Average attendance, 20 or 25. This may seem a very small per cent. of active members, but when we consider the many duties devolving upon us, we are sure there are quite a number of whom it may be said, 'She hath done what she could.'"

At an executive meetiug of W. F. M. S, Mississippi Conference, held in Jackson during session of Annual Conference, last December-January, it was decided to request each district secretary to raise $8 additional for McNemar fund, so that more of her time may be devoted to study.

Items from Miss Smylie, Conference corresponding secretary, January: Miss Fannie Hinds, of Kentucky, was fully endorsed by the Board, and recommended to Annual Board for appointment to foreign field. Miss Watts' need of a kindergarten teacher at Petropolis is urgent, and Miss Holder, a suitable, consecrated woman willing to go out, is chosen for that position.

A good map, on cloth, of our missionary stations in Brazil is now ready at $1. This map can be had by sending amount to Barbee & Smith, Publishing House, Nashville, Tenn., or to Mrs. S. C. Truehart.

The "Oak Street Missionary Society" is in booklet form, and can be had by applying to Miss Sallie Smylie, Meridian. Ten cents each.

W. M. A., February: "We call especial attention to the fact in this beginning of the new year 1898 that many subscriptions to the Woman's Missionary Advocate expired in December. We can not afford to lose a single one, nor can you do the Lord's work with intelligent zeal and enthusiasm without being well informed in regard to the progress of the whole work. The Woman's Missionary Advocate needs you, and you need the information it gives. Look at the label on your magazine, and please renew at once. Do not expect us to continue sending it beyond the proper time. This is needless trouble and expense. A little kindly thought for the interests of our magazine in sending renewals in time and securing new subscribers would, in a few months, run up our list to the 20,000 so much coveted and hoped for when the new century shall be ushered in. While we hope for this we pray. As Dr. Summers said when the first number of this magazine was issued in July, 1880, 'Let all the women help.'"

We kindly urge each district secretary to do all she can for the magazine. MRS. E. D. JONES.

BROKEN PLANS.

Man has his plans, and God has his plans. Man plans ignorantly; God plans wisely. Man plans concerning an unknown future, God plans with omniscient foresight. Man may have determination, but God has power. Man's plans may be disarranged, God's purposes have omnipotence behind them. Man's life is but a span, and then "his breath goeth forth, he returneth to his earth, in that very day his thoughts perish." But God lives and plans for eternal ages, and has eternity in which to carry out his plan. It is easy for a man to say, "I will," or "I will not," but God can easily break that "will," or reverse that "will not." Man may plan his course in utter independence, caring nothing for counsel or reproof, but it is easy for the Highest to interfere and interrupt, and baffle mortal plans, and teach us, in poverty, in sorrow, in sickness, in suffering, and in helplessness, that our plans must yield to the divine purpose, and we must learn to submit to God and be still.

How long will it take us to learn this lesson? How long will we beat against the bonnds which God has set, and struggle to carry out plans which are not in accordance with his will? Will we ever learn God's will? Will broken plans, broken fortunes, broken health, and broken hearts ever teach us to fear the Lord, confide in God, and to wait in patience the openings of his providence? —The Christian.

Do not try to do a great thing when you may waste all your life waiting for the opportunity which may never come. But since little things are always claiming your attention, do them as they come, from a great motive, for the glory of God, to win his smile of approval, and to do good to men. It is harder to plod on in obscurity, acting thus, than to stand on the high places of the field, with in the view of all, and to do deeds of valor at which rival armies stand still to gaze. But no such act goes without the swift recognition and the ultimate recompense of Christ. To fulfill faithfully the duties of your station; to use to the uttermost the gifts of your ministry; to bear chafing annoyances and trivial irritations as martyrs bore the pile and stake; to find the one noble thing in people who try to molest you; to put the kindest construction on unkind acts and words; to love with the love of God even the unthankful and evil; to be content to be a fountain in the midst of a wild valley of stones, nourishing a few lichens and wild flowers, or now and again a thirsty sheep; and to do this always and not for the praise of man, but for the sake of God—this makes a great life.—F. B. Meyer.

It is useless to expect the average man to feel a deep interest in a work in which he has no part. Even among the best of men disinterested zeal seldom runs to blood-heat. The fact that there are a few employers in the world who seem to take as deep an interest in their employes' business as if it were their own is evidence that they would not discover new depths of interest that should become their own. We need often to remind ourselves that in every church there are scores of members whose interest in the church could be materially quickened by making them feel that they have a part in it.—Richmond Advocate.

REV. H. J. HARRIS.

After an illness of several weeks, from plexy, my father, Rev. H. J. Harris, sed away at 12:30 A. M., Jan. 14, 98. He was born in Columbus, Miss., had he lived to see the first of Feb- ary, would have been 76 years of age, r ever fifty years he served faithfully the Methodist Church itineraney. To day of his death his love for the nistry, his love for his God and the lo never faltered. Was never con- t unless serving the blessed Master.

Sod never gave to the church on earth more consecrated disciple; to children, more devoted, kind father, or to a man a better husband. His friend- ps were true, his charity and forgive- s were almost divine.

When the end came he was ready to "home to heaven." and without one gle struggle "life and light went out ether," and my dear father "fell on ep," to wake amid the glories of the y of God. Wife and loved ones who ted him on the other shore can never ow how lonely and sad will be the grimage here without his loving com- . The long journey of life here on th has ended for him; yet we would , were the power given us, call him k to this sinful world, so full of sor- and sadness.

We dare not question God's doings; d so, while we miss our father more dly as the days go by, yet we know weary longing for the "better land" ver. The tired feet are forever at t, and we strive to crush back the ter tears, while we bow in meek sub- sion to the will of him who says in hour of bereavement,

"I love thee! I love thee!
Pass under the rod."

A BLIND BOY GRADUATE

ES THE HIGHEST HONORS IN THE UNIVERSITY OF TEXAS.

Franz Joseph Dohmen, of Austin, xas, ranks above any of his fellow- dents of the present senior class of University of Texas. At the next mencement he will receive the degree achelor of literature. The fact that Dohmen is the first honor man of class is only remarkable because ee his tenth year he has been totally nd. He is twenty-four years old, d was born at New Braunfels, Texas, German parents. His father, Dr. hmen, was at the time of his death State oculist, and one of the most dis- guished men of his profession in the te. When young Dohmen was ten rs old he was seized with an attack the typhoid fever which settled in his , and when his strength was restored as found that he had completely lost sight. His fondness for study and natural musical taste have apparently ded him ample recompense for the of his sight. He was placed in the d Asylum, and there had his talents music developed, and at the same received splendid preparatory ning for his University career. ile he was studying in the Blind lum he received training in a system writing that has been invaluable to while a student in the University. s system consists of piercing full of ll holes a stiff waxed paper by means sharp instrument, the position of hole being determined by a small l frame held on the opposite side of paper: this furnishes projections ch the blind learn to read as readily hey do raised letters. Mr. Dohmen perfect master of this system and tes as rapidly as an ordinary writer long hand. He comes to the Uni- ity daily with his note book, attends ses, takes notes, and goes about the dling so easily and naturally that the of his sight is scarcely noticed. n a term of examination occurs he tes his answers to the questions ac- ding to his short-hand system for the d, and then takes his replies home makes a neat copy himself upon his -writer. He does his type-written rapidly and neatly, and presents is professors manuscript faultless in ppearance and almost flawless as to holarly grasp of the subject under deration.

r. Dohmen graduated from the Blind Asylum in 1893 with the highest honors and has now been a student of the University of Texas for five years. His proficiency as a performer on the piano is a great solace both to himself and to his friends, but his greatest de- light consists in delving in the problems of higher mathematics, philosophy, and political science. He speaks and writes English, German and French. He is a fair Latin scholar and knows a smatter- ing of Greek. At present he is studying Greek, French, German, mathematics, Latin, and political science. Upon these studies next June he will receive his de- gree of bachelor of literature and will leave immediately for Germany to pursue further investigation in his favorite sub- jects of philosophy, mathematics and political science in some one of the great Universities there.

Mr. Dohmen is rather tall. His face is sensitive, refined and pleasingly intel- ligent. His disposition is bright and cheerful. He is popular with everyone, and the small coterie of his friends, to whom he reveals in some degree his in- ner self, all testify by their sincere ad- miration to the true nobility and great- ness of his character. His life after his return from Germany will be spent in teaching.

No citizen of Texas can ever begrudge the generosity of the State that has pro- vided means for educating the unfortu- nate blind, and surely everyone will re- joice that the honors of the present graduating class of the University of Texas will be taken by a blind boy who received his preparatory education in the State Institute for the Blind. And patient, persistent, persevering applica- tion have won this honor for young Dohmen. His record will be left behind him on the books of the University, and it is as phenomenal as it is hoped his success will be in after life.

LOCAL PREACHERS.

Our feelings prompt us to respond to the appreciation and sympathy of that good layman as expressed in the last number of the CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE but we can not agree with him that local preachers should be paid for their services to the church, otherwise than with such appreciation and sympathy. That is all the pay that any conscien- tious local preacher desires of his brethren. If there are any of this order who expect, or covet in the least degree, a pecuniary compensation, or its equiva- lent, for his ministerial services, we would advise them to locate a little lower down, and take his place among the seekers. The local preacher is not required nor expected to do any work for the church that will conflict with his secular business; yet a true one will often do so. To pay the local preacher, as the good brother suggests, would, I fear, make him less efficient than he is. Speaking from experience and observa- tion—for I've been a local preacher thirty-five years—there has always been too much of a mercenary spirit amongst us. To pay us, as suggested, would tend to encourage this spirit, and crowd our rank with unworthy characters.

Appealing to my local brethren, I would ask: What material help are we to our pastors? What do we do to relieve them from temporal cares, so that they may do the Master's work untrammeled? How many of us, after officiating at weddings, hand over the marriage fees to the preacher in charge? It is his perquisite; we have no right to it. I lived on a charge once within which a certain local preacher monopolized the marrying business, and, so far from dividing fees with his pastor, he contribu- ted very niggardly otherwise to his support. Of course, he did a great deal of preaching (!), especially on protracted- meeting occasions. He reminded me forcibly of the "Jeremy Larkin" type as set forth in "Post Oak Circuit."

All that a true local preacher covets is, that he may fully meet the great re sponsibilities involved in the relation he sustains to the regular ministry and laity, being the connecting link between these. The privilege and honor of being a right-hand co-worker with the preacher in charge, and the spiritual fruits accru- ing from fidelity, is all the pay he de- sires.

THE NEW HOMILETICS.

BY REV. JESSE S. HILBERT, A. M., SPRING VALLEY, N. Y.

In every direction new methods are being applied to old pursuits. Thus we have the new astronomy, the new chemi- istry, the new psychology, and even the new theology.

Pulpit methods have felt this univer- sal impulse, and while conservatism may still be enthroned in the professor's chair, we have practically a new homi- letics.

The sermon of to-day differs from the sermon of the past in many important respects. It differs in length, being shorter. What interminable sermons the old Puritans used to preach. It was said of Father Byles that he usually preached one hour, and then, taking the hour glass in hand and turning it over, would say, "Now we will take a second glass." But many went far beyond an hour.

It is said of Isaac Barrow that preach- ing the annual sermon before the Lord mayor and corperation of London, hav- ing spoken an hour, he said, "And now, having made these few preliminary re- marks, we will proceed to the discussion of the subject."

We live in a fast age, an age of steam and electricity.

Thought must be condensed. He who would catch the public ear must put his ideas in a direct and pungent style.

The sermon of to-day is less formal. The old-fashioned sermon was built upon every artificial plan. No lawyer could so prepare his plea before a jury, and have a ghost of a chance of getting a verdict. A sermon preached in Hartford by Samuel Wakeman contained some fif- ty-six divisions and sub-divisions, and we are told that "each separate portion of the discourse was treated with a fair degree of elaboration."

One of Cotton Mather's sermons was entitled "Brantelogia Sacra." He di- vided it into seven thunderbolts, filled with sharp lightnings from the Script- ures.

The "skeleton" was a prominent feat- ure of the old-time sermon, often con- taining almost as many bones as the human body, and dangled in the face of the congregation. A sermon without many heads, divisions and sub-divi- sions, would have been thought an of- fense against pulpit propriety. He who would get a hearing to-day must keep the framework of his sermon well out of sight, cover his skeleton with flesh.

The old-time preaching often assumed a controversial character. Fifty years ago a Methodist preacher felt that he must show up the five points of Calvin- ism every time he entered the pulpit, and the brethren of that faith were by no means slow to reply, whilst a "watery war" was kept up between the Baptists and the other denominations.

The points of difference were then made prominent, but the Christian world has found a more excellent way, and now not the few and non-essential points of difference, but the many and vital points of agreement, are the ones upon which the emphasis is placed.

The preaching of to-day is more prac- tical and direct, deals with precept rather than dogma, and presents the living rather than the theological Christ. It also takes a wider range, presenting a gospel that not only saves men from a hell in the future, but from the hell of passion and sin that even now consumes heart and life; a gospel that not only lifts people to heaven when they die, but brings heaven into their hearts and homes here and now.

The Christian world has come to see that to change the environment of many is a very important step in the work of soul-saving. The conditions of living must be altered.

How can we expect people to lead pure and religious lives where the natu- ral as well as the moral atmosphere is reeking with all foulness, where the or- dinary decencies and proprieties of life are impossible, and while all the condi- tions tend to breed vice and crime?

Hence, in no uncertain tone, the pul- pit of to-day calls upon monopoly to re- lax its grip, and upon the church to minister to the physical and social as well as the spiritual needs of men.

Those who talk of the decay of the pulpit know not whereof they affirm. There are, no doubt, still a few Dr. Dryasdusts who preach upon the "Fed- oral Headship of Adam," and the sins of the Babylonians, but, as a whole, preaching was never more direct, prac- tical and forceful than at the present time.—The Treasury.

FROM THE WORK.

Rev. A. J. Foster, P. C., Ethel, Miss., March 2, 1898: "The first Quarterly Conference for Salem circuit, North Mis- sissippi Conference, was held at Smyrna, nine miles southeast of Kosciusko, Feb. 12 and 13, ultimo. Bro. Oakley, the presiding elder, was on hand and preached two good sermons and left a blessing with us all. What a noble Christian gentleman and minister he is! We all thank God for his coming among us. I am resolved to live a better life. God bless such Christians as Bro. Oakley. The circuit made the best financial re- port it has ever made at any first Quar- terly Conference."

It is warm and weary work that the woman has to undergo who cooks the year 'round for a big family. Thou- sands of women whose husbands are only in moderate circumstances have to bear this hardship uncomplainingly. If a woman is in thoroughly good health it does not come so hard, but when, as is fre- quently the case, the poor woman is suf- fering from the pains, nervousness, debility and ill-health that are a result of weakness and disease of the distinctly feminine or- ganism, the task is too much.

Under these circumstances, unless the right remedy is used, the poor woman will soon break down completely and fill an early grave. Over 90,000 women have testi- fied to the marvelous merits of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. Many of their names, addresses, photographs and ex- periences have been published by permis- sion in Dr. Pierce's Common Sense Med- ical Adviser. The "Favorite Prescription" cures all weakness and disease of the deli- cate and important organs that bear matern- ity's burdens. It makes them well and strong. It builds up the nervous system. It makes weak, sickly, nervous, fretful wo- men strong, healthy, amiable wives. All medicine dealers sell it.

"My youngest daughter, Mrs. Julia Raphe, was all run down with nervous prostration and lung trouble," writes Mrs. Julia Ann Gibson, of Nickerson, Reno Co., Kansas. "She took Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription and 'Golden Med- ical Discovery' and was cured."

If you want to read the testimonies and see the photographs of many grateful pa- tients who were cured by Dr. Pierce's rem- edies send for Dr. Pierce's Common Sense Medical Adviser. Besides telling about these cures it tells about the home-treat- ment of all diseases. 1,008 pages. Over 300 illustrations. TOTAL ABSTINENCE.

Although the cause of temperance has made marvelous progress during the last decade, the contests have thus far been only skirmishes, as it were, while the great and decisive battle yet remains to be fought. Temperance sentiment is undoubtedly growing stronger year by year, and one State after another is wheeling into line under the glorious banner of prohibition. This is no time, however, for sloth and mere hurrahing. In order to hold what has been wrested from the enemy's hands there must be unswerving diligence and vigilance. In many regions where the whisky demon once was vanquished, a retrograde movement has taken place, owing to the apathy of prohibitionists and the persistent activity of the liquorites. Maine is just now, it is said, suffering from such a movement simply because the methods once pursued by Neal Dow, the father of prohibition, have been set aside. Temperance literature must be sown broadcast, and that continually. The pulpit must persistently picture the gigantic evils wrought by King Alcohol, and make the most ignorant to understand that teetotalism is the only safe course for the individual. Parents must teach their children that the drink evil is the greatest curse of modern times, and train them to avoid the intoxicating cup as they would a pestilence. It will do little good for the children to be taught sciontific temperance in the schools if at home the whisky bottle is resorted to for every little ailment.

Indications are that in fashionable circles wine drinking, once somewhat under the ban, but never entirely banished, is again becoming popular. If this goes on unchecked, we may look in the next few years for a marked increase in intemperance, for the use of such beverages almost invariably begets a thirst for something stronger.

Because of the cessation in some quarters of the agitation of the temperance question many are falling into the pernicious notion that after all there is no danger in the moderate use of intoxicants, especially of beer and the lighter wines, and thus public sentiment is being debased. Both by example and precept must this baneful error be combatted.

After the great Brussels Temperance Congress, held last Fall, Baron Plessen, Lord Chamberlain of Denmark, who was one of the delegates, made this striking statement: "No one could attend the sessions of this Brussels Congress as I have done, and not be convinced that total abstinence is the only safe rule for individual life." Let it never be forgotten that all confirmed drunkards were once moderate drinkers, and that all moderate drinkers are liable to become confirmed inebriates. Though it may be fashionable to take a social glass, let it ever be remembered that in multitudes of instances the inebriate's career begins in the splendid saloons and fashionable circles, and that Bacchus transforms thousands of tipplers into degraded sots.

A Presbyterian minister of Newark, N. J., gives the following sadly interesting account of four young men who, a few years ago, were his fellow-students. They were in the habit every day while eating at the restaurant of drinking a little mild wine or beer. They were studying for the ministry, but, as might readily be supposed, not one of them reached the sacred office. Within three years one of the four became a common drunkard; a year later another died from the effects of a drunken debauch; the third, the brightest and most promising of them all, is in the insane asylum; the fourth saw the danger of the course pursued, and stopped in time.

One of the great fallacies regarding the moderate use of intoxicants is that they build up the system, and add to its resistive power. The well-nigh unanimous verdict of medical experts is that alcohol, even in moderate quantities, is an irritant and a poison, and that it is not only not needed by the healthy human system, but is positively injurious. It is a heart excitant, a digestion hinderer, a liver disturber, and a character destroyer. The athlete, while in training, whether he be an oarsman, a runner, wrestler, foot-ball player, or prize-fighter, nowadays abstains entirely from stimulants, knowing full well that a little indulgence therein means almost certain defeat. "If then," as Rev. F. B. Meyer well says, "men do not need liquor for such extraordinary exertions, why do they want them for ordinary ones?" Recent English expeditions in Abyssinia, the Transvaal and Egypt, demonstrate that where soldiers are to perform forced marches, or undergo unusual fatigue, coffee must be substituted for grog.

Travelers and explorers have repeatedly testified that Arctic cold and tropic heat are best endured by those who abstain entirely from the use of intoxicants. Bishop Tucker, of Central Africa, some time ago said: "I have been a teetotaler for twenty years. So far from regretting it, I would commence it sooner, if I had the chance again. I find that in Africa not only is a teetotaler better fitted to cope with the climate, but he is better fitted for the great physical exercise which he has to undergo."

Statistics carefully prepared by life insurance companies show that one hundred moderate drinkers die for every seventy-three abstainers, and that the average life of the teetotaler is thirteen years longer than that of the moderate drinker.

Beer, thought by many to be harmless, belongs in the same category with other alcoholic beverages. Says an eminent authority: "Fatty deposits, diminished circulation, conditions of congestion, and perversion of functional activities, local inflammation of both the liver and the kidneys, are the results of beer drinking."

In view of these and multitudes of similar facts that might be cited, we appeal to the friends of temperance everywhere both to teach and practice teetotalism. Self-interest, as well as the highest good of our fellow-men, demands that we let all intoxicants severely alone. If the doctrine of total abstinence were preached a little more faithfully in some prohibition towns and counties, a decided diminution of the jug trade would result.

"The two articles of the temperance creed," as Dr. Wilbur F. Crafts rightly says, "are total abstinence and prohibition." By these we must conquer the demon, intemperance. If ever they be disjoined, we shall suffer ignominious defeat at the hands of an unscrupulous and ever vigilant foe.

DR. MORTON DEAD.

Rev. David Morton, D. D., Secretary of the Board of Church Extension of the M. E. Church, South, died at his home in Louisville, last week. His death was the result of blood poisoning caused by a very small scratch on the hand received a few days before.

Dr. Morton was a tower of strength to our church. As a preacher, he was clear, earnest, and forceful. In the pastorate he was diligent, tactful, successful. On the platform he took high rank among the magnates of American Methodism. Those qualities that are requisite to success in business life he possessed in a pre eminent degree. He would have been a decided success at the head of a large banking institution. In social life he was one of the most charming men it has ever been our good fortune to meet. Of him, as fully as of anyone we have ever known, it could be truthfully said, "To know him was to love him." To him our church is immensely indebted for his work in the cause of church extension. We only state what all well-informed people know to be true when we say that the church extension movement, when first inaugurated among us, was very far from being popular. The masses, including many of our preachers, were prejudiced against it. The cries of "Too much machinery" and "Too many collections" were heard on every hand. To David Morton we are chiefly indebted for the marvelous change of public sentiment that has been brought about within the last twelve years. His strong, sensible, earnest appeals before the Annual Conferences, together with his wonderful success as a money-getter, and the skill with which he managed the affairs of the Church Extension Board, can not be too highly recommended.

In the earlier years of his ministry he rendered valuable service to the church in the cause of education. He raised $40,000 for the founding of Logan Female College at Russellville, now one of the foremost institutions in the State, and was for several years its president. He achieved the marvelous task of making it a financial success at a time when the country was in the throes of fratricidal war. In 1876, at the solicitation of our Bishops, he went to Montana to take charge of our mission work there in the capacity of presiding elder. The travel and labor required were immense, and the difficulties in his way appalling, but, undaunted, he met the exigencies of the situation, and laid the foundations of the prosperity which our church has since enjoyed in that vast region. He was the very life of every enterprise of any moment in his own Conference.

The funeral services were held at Walnut Street Church, Louisville, and were conducted by Bishop Hargrove, assisted by the pastors of the city. His remains were interred on the eleventh at Russellville, the place of his nativity.

In his death we have lost a personal friend. We hope to meet him by and by.

GOULDSBORO CHURCH DEDICATION.

At 3:30 P. M. of Sunday, March 13, the new Methodist Church in Gouldsboro, La., was dedicated by Rev. John T. Sawyer, D. D. A large congregation was assembled, some not being able to get a seat. The services were most interesting. Mr. T. O. Adams as leader, and Miss Nonie Jones as organist for the occasion, with a number of prominent singers, rendered most charming music. The opening prayer was made by Rev. Robt. H. Wynn, and the sermon was preached by Dr. Sawyer from Psalms lxxxiv, 10, after which he took the collection, realizing all that was needed to secure the debt upon the building. Then the church was solemnly dedicated and "set apart from all unhallowed or common uses, for the worship of Almighty God." The benediction was pronounced by the Rev. Sam'l S. Keener, P. E. Our Gouldsboro people and their pastor, Rev. C. T. Munholland, are to be congratulated upon possessing in the new church one of the most beautiful buildings of its size in the State. Morris B. De Pass was the architect and W. H. Krone the builder.

STARVING TO DEATH.

The Cubans are starving to death. We appeal to our readers for immediate help. The report of the Committee of Investigation sent by the United States government to make careful inquiry along the coast of Cuba, and in the interior as far as it was possible to go, makes it absolutely certain that hundreds and thousands of these wretched people are perishing for want of food. Our heroic preacher at Havana, Bro. Barredo, writes that the situation could not be worse. His little flock is being ravaged by privation and disease.

Miss Mary Bruce, who is in charge of the Parsonage and Home Mission Society in Tampa and Key West, has written us that the suffering in both of those places is very great. This being the case, what must be the extent of disease and death on the Island of Cuba, where an inhuman policy has forced the concentration of the inhabitants in the towns? Cut off from what nature on the Queen of the Antilles could so generously bestow, men, and especially women and children, are dying from the most dreadful, because the slowest of all tortures—hunger.

Miss Clara Barton, who for so many years has been the leader of the Red Cross Society, has undertaken to see that relief is judiciously applied. Her name is a sufficient guarantee of faithful work. We know what she accomplished in behalf of the Armenians in the very face of Turkish threats and opposition. Over one thousand dollars passed through our hands for distribution in Turkey and Armenia. Shall our Southern people be less liberal in this case? Already several car-loads of provisions have been shipped from the West, and sums of money contributed in the cities along the Atlantic coast; but these are still inadequate. Delay is fatal. We must act promptly.

Let funds and offers of provision be sent Mr. George W. Cain, treasurer of Board of Missions, Nashville, Tenn. We will see that all remittances will be immediately forwarded.

EDITORS WORLD FOR CHRIST AND OUR HOMES.

MET HIS MATCH.

An esteemed brother writes: "Can you tell me how to get my flock to take the church papers, or any other good papers? Some of our women can spend $25 in entertaining a woman's club for one afternoon, but can't—just can't—take the ADVOCATE, or the Woman's Missionary Advocate, or Our Homes, or even The World for Christ. An old revolutionary patriot once said, 'Millions for defense, but not a cent for tribute.' Our people have reversed that rule, or modified it into, 'Thousands for self, but just a little for Christ and his church.'"

We would like to give our brother some helpful advice, but we can not. When in the pastorate we have seen such church members, and it is our deliberate conviction that they would not read our very best church papers if sent to them free of charge. The pastor who canvasses for church papers among them is like the thunder-storm that tried to split a gum-stump; he has met his match.

REV. J. W. PITMAN DEAD.

On Monday evening last we received from Rev. C. H. Pitman, Eupora, Miss., a telegram announcing the death of Rev. J. W. Pitman. He was stricken while in the pulpit, and died very soon afterwards. A good and faithful man has gone from his labors on earth to his reward on high.

NEW BOOKS.

LECTURES ON SOCIAL PROGRESS, with Outline of the Topic, a Month Course of Reform Studies. By Rev. Wilbur F. Crafts, Ph.D., superintendent of the Reform Bureau, Washington, D. C.; author of "Practical Christian Sociology," "The Sabbath for Man," etc. 158 pages. Illustrated. Cloth, 50 cents. Paper, 25 cents. The Reform Bureau, publishers, 210 Delaware avenue, Washington, D. C.

This is a timely and suggestive book. It is full of deeply interesting and valuable information, and ought to be widely circulated. The author has for some time been recognized as a leador in reform work, and is thoroughly acquainted with the matters discussed. He pleads for the more earnest consideration of sociological problems by Christians generally, and urges greater union of effort everywhere in bringing about much-needed reforms, such as the overthrow of the liquor traffic, the better observance of the Sabbath, the diminution of crime, and social purity.

In the opening chapter the author takes a rapid, but comprehensive, glance at "The Good Old Times," bringing out some startling facts as to the state of morals in past centuries, and showing what wonderful progress has been made since the days of the Roman Empire. The theological characteristic of the "new era," which embraces the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries, he claims is "larger appreciation of the Holy Spirit and larger development of spiritual religion." "Methodism and machinery," he says, "are the first words of the new times."

"The Better New Times" is the subject of the next chapter, in which it is made plain that, though we live in a better world than that of any preceding age, we are confronted with many grave problems, among others the rapid increase in criminality and municipal corruption. Though not a pessimist, Dr. Crafts says: "It is easy to prove progress in the United States if you compare the present with one hundred and fifty years ago. But prove that the closing third of the century, since the war for the Union, has been a period of moral and social gain, if you can. I can not."

In the third lecture the author looks into the future, and discusses boldly and forcefully the social forces that fail, and also those that aid social progress.

The last seventy-five pages are devoted to carefully prepared outlines and suggestions for courses in social reform studies, one topic being given for each month. Sociology is a very fascinating as well as helpful study, and we would advise our readers to purchase and profit by this brief, but excellent, work on that line.

WOMAN'S PLACE UNDER THE GOSPEL. A sermon preached before the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of the seventh judicial district of Mississippi. By the Rev. T. L. Mollen, of the Mississippi Annual Conference of the M. E. Church, South. Jackson, Miss.: The R. W. Bailey Printing Co. 1898.

The above is the title of a small pamphlet that lies upon our table by courtesy of the gifted author. In our judgment, the views it presents concerning woman's sphere are pre eminently scriptural and sensible. The author states his views clearly and strongly. We regret the brevity of the work. Its value would have been greatly enhanced if it had been three times as large.

In every congregation assembled on the Sabbath day at a place of worship there are to be found various types of spiritual hunger and need. These instances of individual want, peril, and temptation, when duly considered by the pastor, either in advance, or by a certain subtle sympathy in the very hour of public service, will help and prompt him to administer to the waiting souls before him nourishment fitly apportioned to their needs. As he thinks of his congregation beforehand he will, if he has the true spirit of a shepherd within him, fix his attention upon certain cases of sorrow, or trial, or danger, as especially needing a message from the Word. Here, for example, is a young man who is being enticed by evil companions; yonder is a giddy girl, whose feet have begun to venture in the direction of perilous pleasures; there, in another direction, is a widow, left in poverty and distress, with a brood of helpless little ones to provide for; and all about the community are business men baffled by financial difficulties, victims of alcohol or opium, struggling against the doom which their morbid appetites have opened up before them, and people assaulted by the manifold agencies of the world, the flesh, and the devil—a multitude of hungry and needy souls to be warned, helped, comforted, and led to Christ. How dare any pastor stand up before his flock, then, without a message, without bringing a portion of the Bread of Life for the perishing, without justifying himself as a messenger of God to men and women in danger and ignorance and trouble?—Central Advocate.

NOTES.

Whitworth College is having a very prosperous session.

Rev. D. L. Cogdell is in the midst of a prosperous pastorate at Eupora and Mayhew.

Rev. C. C. Weir has purchased an elegant corner lot on which to erect his parsonage at White Castle.

Let our Methodist people in the city remember Dr. Knickerbocker's meeting, commencing next Sabbath.

Rev. Hervie Mellard, of the Mississippi Conference, writes that the outlook on the Dalevillo charge is decidedly encouraging.

Rev. H. A. Gatlin received a cordial welcome on the Providence circuit, and regards the outlook for the year as full of hope.

Under the leadership of Rev. J. T. Stone the Winona district is moving steadily forward. The district is well manned, and all the preachers are doing faithful work.

After completing his theological course at Vanderbilt, next June Rev. Henry B. Carre, of this city, will spend two years in Germany, taking a course in Greek and Hebrew.

Rev. B. F. Jones has a meeting in progress at Brookhavon. He was assisted last week by Rev. R. Selby. This week Rev. J. A. B. Jones is with him. The meeting has been steadily growing in interest, and gives promise of fine results.

Under the wise leadership of Dr. W. L. C. Hunnicutt, the Natchez district is making progress along all lines. The preachers are all working diligently, and the people are pleased and show a disposition to co operate heartily. Finances are steadily improving.

Rev. R. A. Breland, of the Mississippi Conference, was married on the ninth to Miss Eugenia Gray, of Tryus, Miss.; Rev. H. A. Gatlin officiating. We extend our hearty congratulations to Bro. Breland and his fair bride, and wish them unalloyed felicity through life.

Young Folks' Missionary is the title of a new venture in journalism. It is a four-page monthly published at St. Louis, Mo., by Rev. W. B. Palmore. Subscription price, 25 cents in clubs of five, 20 cents; in clubs of 20, 15 cents; in clubs of 50, 10 cents. It is filled with choice reading matter bearing upon the all-important and many-sided question of missions.

We invite the special attention of the preachers of the Corinth district to the Quarterly Conference notices for that district. This list of appointments was made out by Bishop Tucker a short time before his death. Each preacher will be expected to hold his own Quarterly Conference at the time appointed until Bishop Tucker's successor has been appointed.

MISSIONS.

STATEMENT OF B. F. JONES, TREASURER OF THE BOARD OF MISSIONS, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

FOR FOREIGN MISSIONS.

Feb. 21, Hazlehurst, R. Solby.....$25 00
" 21, Gloster, M. M. Black..... 16 00
" 24, Waynesboro and State Line, A. T. Bell..... 35 00
March 2, Rose Hill, D. C. Langford..... 39 00

FOR DOMESTIC MISSIONS.

Feb. 25, Hazlehurst, R. Solby.....$10 00

I would urge our pastors to comply with the resolution adopted by our last Annual Conference, viz: "That collections be taken very early in the year wherever practicable, securing the full amount during the first quarter." Some of our preachers serving missions already need help, but I am unable to honor their checks. As will be seen from the above, only ten dollars have been deposited up to this time for our home workers, and we are nearing the end of the first quarter.

I would also call attention to the following letter from Dr. Lambuth. Brethren, let us raise the entire assessment on our Conference for foreign missions during this month, and thus save our General Board the embarrassment of borrowing money, and our church the enormous interest that must be paid out for borrowed money. Forward to me as rapidly as you collect, so that I can remit the whole amount by the last of March. Let every man do his duty, and the whole amount will be raised.

B. F. JONES.

Nashville, Tenn., Feb. 5, 1898.

DEAR BRO. JONES: We approach the close of the quadrennium with a profound sense of gratitude. Our missions have prospered abroad, and our financial burdens are being lifted at home. Surely God is with us.

The success or failure of every enterprise of the church rests with the pastors. We now ask you, Shall we make the advance permanent? It can be done. You can do it. How? Lay the obligation on the heart of your church and arouse the conscience. Then take a collection quarterly for missions.

We respectfully ask and urge that between this and March 10 you will preach on missions, or otherwise present the matter to your people, and take a collection and forward it to your Conference treasurer, that he may remit to us before the end of the month.

It is a fact, that the close of the third quarter of any Annual Conference does not bring us fifty per cent. of its apportionment. Hence we are forced to borrow for more than six months in every year. This costs, in interest, nearly $3,000, or enough to maintain three married missionaries.

Delay means short collections. Early effort in most cases means full collections. The church has committed this cause, as a sacred trust, to our presiding elders and pastors. (Discipline, par. 356, 357.)

We know your fidelity, and believe that you will respond to the call of the church. Let us unite our prayers to the "Lord of the harvest that he will send forth laborers into his harvest."

By all means, let a part of your apportionment reach us by the last of March, and let us have done with borrowing.

Your brother in Christ,

WALTER R. LAMBUTH.

NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

DEDICATION.

E. E. Hoss, D. D., editor of Nashville Christian Advocate. All former pastors are invited, and those expecting to attend will please send their names to the undersigned.

SEEKERS AFTER GOLD know they may be disappointed, but seekers after health take Hood's Sarsaparilla with the utmost confidence that it will do them wonderful good.

HOOD'S PILLS are the only pills to take with Hood's Sarsaparilla. Easy, but efficient.

FROM REV. J. L. FUTRELL.

MR. EDITOR: I am in better health than for four years past. The struggle to keep our school work going has been a sore one. It seems the financial stringency waited till 1897-8 to strike us on this extreme coast line with its most intense fury. 1897 gave the middle and eastern part of this State—in fact, of all the coast States—an immense crop of wheat and hops, and both brought a good price; but, as the coast counties grow neither of these, we were not helped except in the general revival of business, which made a better market for our stock, dairies, fruit, lumber, coal, and gold.

As you know, there has been unusual excitement all this Winter in reference to wonderful discoveries in Alaska. Thousands of our men, and many women, have gone, or are preparing to go, to the "Klondike." Steamers leave nearly every day from each of our four ports—San Francisco, Portland, Tacoma, and Seattle—and each vessel carries from 300 to 1,000 passengers. Then there are companies formed which build and outfit their own vessels. I presume I would be safe in saying that between 3,000 and 4,000 per day have embarked since Feb. 1, and I suppose it will continue till May. This has proven a great detriment to us in many ways; drained the country of money, taken nearly all our vessels from us. We have from eight to twelve steamers per week come into Coos bay, and three into Coquille river. We now have one in the river and two in the bay. Then we had about twenty schooners; about half of them are gone. Results: Half our coal mines and saw-mills are shut down, and the others are running on half time, simply because we cannot get transportation. "Why don't we build more?" It takes time to do that, and it costs money. Even a schooner costs $5,000, or more, and steamers into the tons of thousands.

It seems to me it is the strangest craze I ever heard of. Why, if a tithe of the money spent in going to Alaska was invested in Oregon mines, it would result in far greater gains, with not a tithe of the suffering.

BY H. N. HARRISON.

TOPIC FOR MARCH 20.—STRANGE WAYS IN WHICH GOD LEADS US. (Acts xiii. 44-49.)

1. Paul and Barnabas, in their missionary journey, have come to Antioch in Pisidia. We find them making an earnest effort to present the claims of the Lord Jesus before the Jews. The great apostle's constant prayer was that Israel might be saved. He addressed himself, therefore, at the first to the task of reaching his own people. With great force and adroitness these two apostles preached unto them Jesus and the resurrection.

2. Whenever the gospel is faithfully preached, as Paul and Barnabas preached it, it will always create opposition. It was so presented before them that they must either receive or reject it. We must not expect to escape fierce opposition in proclaiming the Word of Life. Men are narrow, bigoted, and selfish. Their obstinate hearts beat back the shafts of light. Truth is a keen blade, and few sinners want to have a surgical operation performed on them from the pulpit. We may, at this point, remind the reader of John the Baptist. How bravo and true to God he was! What marvelous spiritual surgery he performed in his day! No wonder his own head finally felt the edge of the sword. The Jews in Antioch railed fiercely at Paul, and blasphemed the name of Jesus.

3. The Bible tells us not to waste our zeal upon unworthy people, or cast our pearls before swine. There are multitudes of people who will listen to the gospel. Go to them (Luke xiv, 15-24). Hence God had already said to Paul, "Depart, I will send thee far hence unto the Gentiles."

4. This Scripture teaches us the important lesson that the same truth that drives hundreds away from God will also draw hundreds to him. The moment the Jews in Antioch set their faces against Jesus and the resurrection, that same moment multitudes of Gentiles, under the same preaching, accepted the great salvation. This is true to-day. The gospel is still to many a savor of life unto life, and to others of death unto death. One of the characteristics of truth is that it is inexorable. If Christians would remember this, they would not be so quick to adopt compromise methods in proclaiming the Word. We must live and preach a full and holy gospel, always remembering that while many will be slain thereby, many will also be brought to life. We must be bold for the truth. We must not fly our flag at half-mast but lift high the banner of holiness.

LEAGUE NOTES.

The Union Epworth League assembled March 8, in the evening, at Carrollton Avenue Church. This was a very interesting and lively meeting. Rev. Geo. Parker, who presided, together with the local League, made the occasion exceedingly pleasant and agreeable to all present. A protest was filed against the editor of this column by one of the Leagues on account of a paragraph appearing in the ADVOCATE, of March 3, instant. A resolution to do away with the office of editor, reported from the last meeting, was brought up. After a lively debate the resolution was laid on the table by a vote of 2 to 1. Bro. H. H. White, State president of the League, being present, made a very taking address and an earnest plea for liberty of expression on the part of editors of religious papers. Miss Lyons entertained the Leagues with a most excellently read paper on "Amusements," or "Worldliness." The League, under a stirring address from Dr. J. T. Sawyer, resolved to send a Committee of Protest to the Constitutional Convention on the subject of the Sunday law, and against local option.

There is nothing superior to Salvation Oil for the relief and cure of wounds of all kinds. Its effect is marvelous. 25 cents.

ALWAYS IN A HURRY.

BY PRISCILLA LEONARD.

I know a little maiden who is always in a hurry;
She races through her breakfast (to be in time
She scribbles at her desk in a hasty sort of flurry,
And comes home in a breathless whirl that fills the vestibule.

She hurries through her studying, she hurries through her sewing,
Like an engine at high pressure, as if leisure were a crime;
She's always in a scramble, no matter where she's going,
And yet—would you believe it?—she never is in time!

It seems a contradiction until you know the reason;
But I'm sure you'll think it simple, as I do,
When I state
That she never has been known to begin a thing in season,
And she's always in a hurry because she starts too late.

—Churchman.

ECONOMY OF STRENGTH.

One greatest economizer of strength is rest when rest is needed. Another is sleep—abundance of sleep; and still another the husbanding of that strength by not working too hard. And yet do women go daily on, struggling under a burden of work that they are never fitted to bear, many times through a mistaken understanding of duty and economy.

Work is both a duty and a pleasure, and I can think of no more monotonous life than one of enforced idleness. But there are more of the overworked and always tired in our land than of those who are wearied of life because of "nothing to do," and to them it is I would say, "Rest."

No danger that the ambitious wife and mother will ever overdo the matter of resting and sleeping, and one need never fear in repeatedly giving such advice. If more would only heed, we should meet with less of unhappiness, discontent, and ill-health, and all our world would be the better for the happier homes and cheerier hearts.

Just the other day, I was reading of one housewife who said: "I could do all my housework, every bit of it, by keeping busy every moment, but I do want a comfortable old age." Sensible woman, was she not, that instead of expending her whole nervous energy every day, she was preserving carefully a portion of it that should help her to enjoy a comfortable old age?

This she did by keeping competent help in the kitchen and by taking care of her health, and her course is surely to be commended, and is well worth heeding by other housewives everywhere.

Says one writer: "Dr. Johnson had scant sympathy with inconsistent and arrogant industry." He says: "No man, sir, is obliged to do as much as he can. A man should have part of his life to himself." And we take it that this same wise and good man includes woman in this statement. At least we do, do we not? And still, as if in contradiction, do many of us keep struggling on with work to the very last possible limit of endurance, and that day after day until every nerve has reached that state of exhaustion and rebellion that makes a woman far from companionable and hardly even endurable.

Many a time have I suggested to some housewife that she lessen her work by slighting or leaving undone work that I know to be absolutely necessary, and utilize the time thus saved in recruiting her lost strength and health by long hours of rest and sleep in the afternoons until thoroughly rested, and then when once rested through and through—it will take weeks, though—that she continue her afternoon naps, of shorter duration, during the rest of her lifetime.

Some have answered: "O, I would if I could, but there is to be no rest for me this side the grave." Others have said, in a silent language that spoke louder than the words they hardly dared to utter: "Sleep in daytime? O, but you must be lazy!" And I answer, "Indeed, I am just that lazy that my afternoon nap will I indulge in though I never own a much-embroidered petticoat or ruffled sheets and pillow slips in all the days of my life."

I earn the rest, and so do you: I will appropriate that needed hour, and how I wish that you would too! You may live many years the longer, and I know you will be many times the happier for this care of yourself. Be not so thorough a slave to work and whims that you can enjoy none of the real beauties of the beautiful old world, nor the pleasures of your immaculately-kept home. Home ceases in a measure to be a home to those we love if there is never comfort or enjoyment there, and a tired, cross woman is not conducive to real home happiness.

I had actually once for a neighbor a woman whose voice was perpetually filled with a tone of woe and worry, aches and pains and complaints, who gave as an excuse for never lying down in daytime that she "could not bear to muss up a bed."

Bright and early in the morning those two beds were "made up" after her own approved style of completeness, with white spreads and stiff-starched, wrinkleless shams, and woe be to anything that "mussed" them in the least.

Always tired and literally "worked to death" were the complaints. And verily a goodly share of her work was that of thread-lace making, embroidery, and a sort of "fancy work," that, to me, would be a serious trial did I have to give it house-room. She was undoubtedly in ill-health, and she needed no end of rest and sleep. But it was grudgingly denied, that her beds might not be mussed, and that she might revel in more yards of lace and "trumpery."

I hope I shall never own anything that is too good to be used for the comfort of my family and self, and I hope that many a housewife will follow out my plans of resting and afternoon naps, and thus save strength and life to enjoy a comfortable old age.—Nellie Hanks, in The Christian Work.

HARD WORK.

BY REV. E. HERBRUCK, D. D.

Almost every good and substantial thing means hard work. Whether a man be a lawyer, doctor, clergyman, cobbler, or blacksmith, if he accomplishes anything of value, it is by persistent, hard work. Look at some of the things that are lasting in this world, the Pyramids, the Rock-tombs, the Sphinx, the obelisks, the kind deeds, the noble character, all here represent toil, and in some instances the lives of the toilers were sacrificed in the work. Sometimes young men wonder how our men of science, our great theologians, philosophers and historians have attained to such eminence. It is an easy matter to inform them, for there is no royal road, no easy going lightning express to learning or eminence. Everyone of these men spent years of unremitting, hard work, before they gained, not the summit, for no man gains that here, but the higher levels of knowledge; and even when they have gained that much their hungry breasts yearn for more, and the busy brain works on. It is an idle dream which our young people indulge in that life's noblest things are easy of conquest, and that the "sesame" gold story will open the gateways of knowledge. This is all a delusion which many an unfortunate young man has discovered when too late.

The man who rests content when he has once reached a certain stage will inevitably go with the current. It requires constant labor to keep abreast with the times. We knew a young man who had just been admitted to the bar, who thought he had no more need of study and research in law. When reproved by an older attorney for his indolence replied, "Patrick Henry studied law only six months." The sharp reply came, "Ah, but remember you have not got Patrick Henry's head on your shoulders." While in the Orient we saw small pieces of needle-work upon which were spent many months of incessant toil, a stitch at a time. Looking at it one would suppose it could be done in a few days. But those delicate lines and exquisite shadings of varied colored silk all required months of labor.

It is just the same in the building up of character. A man may leap into reputation in a day. But character can not be attained at a bound. It is something that must be built up from the foundation, stone after stone, as the Pyramids were built, as St. Peters reared its dome to the sky. It is tried by storm and fire, and grows stronger by the trial. Just as it is with the ordinary things of life, so it is with religion and religious work. If anything is to be accomplished by minister or layman, it will require hard work. Unless one intends to do with his might what his hands find to do, he had better not enter into the service of his Master. Hard work brings its reward. The laborer shall come with his arms full of sheaves, and in his heart he shall have the peace of God.

The minute the Holy Spirit brings you into a living union with Christ, the germ of a new life is put into your soul and you are born again.

Consider well what you can and ought to do and be faithful in performing it.—Mary Lyon.

To be a great man it is necessary to bring to account all opportunities.—Rochefoucald.

MODEL BED-ROOMS.

The last thirty years have witnessed a wonderful improvement in the manufacture of good-sized, comfortable beds, at least in continental Europe; for the bench-like "bett-stellen" of southern Germany never disgraced the hotels of the English-speaking nations. As early as 1185 a French traveler acknowledged the uniform excellence of the British dormitories—"clean rooms, often carpeted, always well aired, broad blankets, and solid, enormous bedsteads." The latter adjective really fitted the fact, if it is true that the "great bed of Ware" was twelve feet long by eight broad, with a canopy like a circus tent.

Bed curtains are not only entirely superfluous, but positively ruinous to lung patients, who are thus obliged to breathe the same microbe-laden air over and over again; but broad, duplicate mattresses come under the head of rational luxuries, and are out and out preferable to the woven-wire substitutes. Hammocks on board ships are a lesser evil; but on terra firma sleepers should build their hope of a sound night's rest on the firmest possible foundation, and the war against the cradle superstition should be waged without compromise. A modern educator denounces it as the cause of virulent digestive disorders, and classes it with the paregoric outrage: "Never try to overcome sleeplessness by a resort to cradling and narcotics. The lethargy induced by rocking and cradling is akin to the drowsy torpor of a seasick passenger, and one might as well try to benumb a patient by a whack on the head."

Feather beds have happily gone out of fashion; but few housekeepers have as yet recognized the sanitary advantages of woollen blankets, as compared with heavy padded quilts, that repress the organic exhalations and cause night sweats and troubled dreams.

While the body is kept comfortably warm, the breathing of pure cold air is a positive luxury, and the best lung balm thus far discovered—at least to individuals who have freed their minds from the haunting dread of the night-air superstition; for there is no doubt that vivid illusions can cause as well as cure diseases.—The Family Doctor, in the Chautauquan.

THE SKILLFUL SPECIALIST AND HIS NEW DISCOVERY.

The Eminent Physician and Scientist Who Has Proved That All

Kidney, Bladder and Uric Acid Troubles Can Be Quickly Cured.

You May Have a Sample Bottle of the Great Discovery Sent Free by Mail.

As we are by nature subject to many diseases, the only way to guard against all stampedes on our health is to make a study of our own physical self.

If a peculiar pain attacks you, try to locate its origin and discover which organ of the body is sick and in need of attention.

If the kidneys are at fault—and in almost every case in the failing of our health they are—look well to their restoration to health and strength.

They are the great filters of our body, and consequently, the purity of the blood is entirely dependent on their cleansing powers.

If the kidneys are not in a perfectly clean and healthy condition, the blood becomes impregnated with impurities and a decay of the kidneys soon takes place. If your desire to relieve yourself of water increases, and you find it necessary to arise many times during sleeping hours, your kidneys are sick. As they reach a more unhealthy stage, a scalding and irritation takes place as the water flows, and pain or dull ache in the back makes you miserable. If the water, when allowed to remain undisturbed for twenty-four hours, forms a settling or sediment, you are in the grasp of most serious kidney or bladder disorder.

If neglected now the disease advances until the face looks pale or sallow, puffy or dark circles under the eyes, the feet swell, and sometimes the heart acts badly.

There is no more serious menace to health and strength than any derangement of the kidneys.

Swamp-Root is the great discovery of Dr. Kilmer, the eminent physician and specialist, and will be found just what is needed in cases of kidney and bladder disorders and Uric Acid troubles due to weak kidneys, such as catarrh of the bladder, gravel, rheumatism and Bright's Disease, which is the worst form of kidney disease.

It corrects inability to hold water and promptly overcomes that unpleasant necessity of being compelled to go often during the day and to get up many times during the night.

The mild and the extraordinary effect of this great remedy is soon realized. It stands the highest for its wonderful cures, and is sold by druggists in fifty-cent and one dollar bottles.

So universally successful is Swamp-Root in quickly curing even the most distressing cases, that to Prove its wonderful merits you may have a sample bottle and a book of valuable information, both sent absolutely free by mail upon receipt of three two-cent stamps to cover cost of postage on the bottle. The value and success of Swamp-Root are so well known that our readers are advised to write for a sample bottle and to kindly mention NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE when sending their address to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y.

LEAVING QUESTIONS WITH GOD.

In one of his letters touching a very important event in his life, George Fox wrote, "Wherefore I let the thing rest, and went on in the work and service of the Lord."

There is a deep and vital truth of practical living suggested by this fragment of a sentence—a truth which, received and acted upon, goes far to make the mind calm, the heart peaceful, and the hands effective. There are a great many conscientious, but anxious, people who find themselves continually tempted to postpone work until all questions can be settled; who attempt, in a word, to anticipate the education of life by grasping at the beginning those results which come only at the end, for there are a great many perplexing problems which can never be thought out—they must be worked out. The man or woman who wants to settle them in advance will fail alike of the settlement of the question and the doing of the task. It is through the active putting forth of one's power that light continually streams in on the questions which concern what one ought to do.

In any education the understanding of the ultimate uses of things must be postponed. Those uses are revealed only when the educational process nears its close. This is preeminently true of the supreme educational process which we call life. There are thousands of questions weighing upon every sincere and conscientious mind which can not be settled by any amount of thinking, but which, in a way, settle themselves as one slowly, but faithfully, does the duty which lies next.

This comes very nearly being the whole philosophy of life, which is in no sense a settlement of ultimate questions, but which is always primarily the doing of the thing which presses to be done. He who is able to do faithfully and heartily that which lies in his hand is on the road to the settlement of all the final questions. He is working his way through the experience which is to be, from the spiritual side, one of the great sources of personal illumination. To learn to leave things with God, and to do one's work as if God could be trusted, is to gain the repose and full-heartedness which permit one to pour out his whole strength without anxiety, worry, or distraction.—The Outlook.

BEWARE OF OINTMENTS FOR CATARRH THAT CONTAIN MERCURY,

as mercury will surely destroy the sense of smell and completely derange the whole system when entering it through the mucous surfaces. Such articles should never be used except on prescriptions from reputable physicians, as the damage they will do is tenfold to the good you can possibly derive from them. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, O., contains no mercury, and is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. In buying Hall's Catarrh Cure be sure you get the genuine. It is taken internally, and made in Toledo, Ohio, by F. J. Cheney & Co. Testimonials free.

Hall's Family Pills are the best.

Do not expect another man's experience. It would not suit you. Men differ in nature, temperament, gifts, adaptation and environment. God deals with each one according to constitution, circumstance and relation. Neither Bunyon's, nor Mr. Meyer's, nor Mr. Moody's experience will fit you. Each of them has that which is peculiar and personal, and is not transferable. There is the one Spirit, but a difference in operations. He works severally as he will, having regard to the personal needs of each mind, heart, and life.—Presbyterian.

FOR OVER FIFTY YEARS

Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup has been used for children teething. It soothes the child, softens the gums, allays all pain, cures wind colic, and is the best remedy for Diarrhœa. Twenty-five cents a bottle.

God's ideal for the human race is the creation in it of Christian character. Christian character is not the result of moral conditions in the life. It is not the result of individual efforts to do right. It is the result of the impact of the spirit of God on the soul of man. It is the outcome of the constant impress of the life of God on the life of man. And because it is there it is the noblest, grandest, most enduring thing under heaven.—Rev. G. E. McManiman.

OBITUARIES.

Obituaries of 200 words published free. For all words in excess of that number send one cent per word.

WICKER—Andrew Wicker was born in Lexington county, S. C., March 15, 1817; was married to Miss Ellen Hipp, Newberry county, S. C., in January, 1850; joined the M. E. Church, South, in South Carolina, in 1856; moved to Smith county, Miss., in 1857; professed religion in 1860; died in Smith county, Miss., Jan. 9, 1898, in his eighty-first year.

This writer was pastor on what was then called Union circuit (now Trenton circuit) when Bro. Wicker moved to Smith county, Miss.; hence received himself and wife by certificate, and enrolled their names on the register at Trenton, where they have remained all these years. I have been his pastor for two or three terms. He was a true Christian gentleman, loyal to his church; a good and true citizen, kind and good neighbor, affectionate husband, indulgent father, loving and kind to all. His was a life of power for good to his church and neighbors. This writer feels that he has lost a true friend.

Bro. Wicker leaves an aged widow who is just waiting the call to go, and four children, all grown and married, and doing well for this life. They all are members of the M. E. Church, South.

The writer visited him several times during his last sickness; ever found him patient and quiet; ready to go, willing to stay. The very large congregation that attended his funeral demonstrated the estimation in which his neighbors held him. The writer preached a sermon in memory of his life and virtues from Rev. xiv, 13, "Yea, saith the Spirit; . . . their works do follow them," read the burial service, and deposited all his remains in the Homewood Cemetery, Scott county, Miss. We'll meet again in the city of eternal life.

R. A. Sibley, Sr., Ex-Pastor.

HOWARD—John Q. A. Howard was born in North Carolina, Feb. 4, 1813. On the ninth of February, 1898, with the rising of the sun, came the death angel, and took from our midst the spirit of our precious father. He leaves seven daughters and one son to hold him in loving remembrance. He was confined to his bed for about six months, during which time he displayed the noblest Christian fortitude, bearing this long siege without a murmur to the end, which came like a gentle sleep. He closed his eyes to open, we believe, on the glories of heaven, where he will have bright sunshine forever.

A more devoted father would be hard to find. His children will miss his visits, especially when sick, and many little ones who were his delight will miss grandpa as they come about his old home.

He joined the Methodist Church when young. His house was the preacher's home, and many have found in him a friend in time of need. He had no patience with wrong-doing, condemning sin of all kinds and in anybody. The supreme question with him was not, Is it popular? but, Is it right? His sympathies knew no distinction of class or caste, but ever willing and ready to lend a helping hand to those in poverty or distress. He bestowed more favors than he asked for. He said but little about his departure, but we have a better testimony than any death-bed can afford—a pure, honest, unselfish life. Never can we forget the fervent prayers offered by him at the family altar. We thank God for having spared him to us so long, though we sadly miss him, while a sun that knows no setting throws a rainbow on our tears.

A Devoted Daughter.

BELL—Alice Florence Gaoa was born in 1857, near Arkabutla, Tate county, Miss., where she remained till her girlhood was spent. She then moved to Austin, Miss., where she was married to Chas. Gwynn in the year 1883. Their home was blessed with one child only, which was a girl, born to them in June, 1886. Mr. Gwynn died in the year 1891. Sister Gwynn remained a widow from the death of her companion, Mr. Gwynn, till the seventh of February, 1897, when the writer united her and the bereaved Bro. S. T. Bell in holy bonds of matrimony, and on the second day of February, 1898, near Tyro, Miss., in her new home, to which she had just moved with her husband, she departed this life from pneumonia.

She had been a member of the M. E. Church, South, for eighteen years, but not an average member, for she prayed to and labored for the blessed Master twelve months in the year, and was never too busy to look after the comfort of her pastor and his family at all times. I am glad that I ever had the privilege of visiting her model Christian home, but now she is gone, and my prayer for her daughter, husband, and host of friends, who mourn their sad loss, is that they may live in such close touch with God that they may all meet her again in the sweet by and by.

L. A. McKaown.

CARTER—Just four years and six months ago dear papa left us for a home beyond the sky, and to-day we miss his loving presence as sadly as when first he went away. He was a devoted father, and I realize that his advice and counsel is needed, oh, so often! But, alas! I can speak to him no more, for they have laid him in the cold and silent grave. Home was never home without him. I had thought of parting with dear papa, but it seems to me I had never thought of seeing him die until I saw him stricken so suddenly with death. Then, when I saw him breathe his life away, and fall asleep in Jesus, and felt that I was fatherless, the bitter anguish of my soul I will not attempt to describe, for I have no words to express my deep sorrow, and it seems that we miss him more and more; yet I feel that it is God that hath bereft us of our precious papa, and I know that "he doeth all things well."

"'Tis sad indeed to know that he is gone!
And yet a void there'll be within our home,
A sacred, vacant seat will be there still;
And in each saddened heart a lonely place
That naught but a Father's love can fill."

Farewell, dear papa; our loss is your gain, and by the grace of God we will meet again when the last trumpet shall sound

Mollie Carter.

FOLDEN—February 27, 1898, at Colfax, La., Mrs. Debur A. Folden died. To her the end came suddenly. A form of paralysis, at times involving the action of the heart, had been a cause of suffering for several weeks, but by none was the end deemed so nigh. At midnight the final thrust was made by "the last enemy," and before the first half hour of the new day was passed the spirit of the good woman had gone beyond the reach of earth's sorrows. She died quickly, but we know she died well, because all testify that she lived well for thirty-eight years. Said an old man at the grave: "She was a good woman, a good church member, a good Christian. I knew her from her girlhood. She joined the church at the age of twelve years, and, as far as we know, never violated one of the rules."

Such testimony is a thousandfold richer and sweeter than any dying words could be. She lived well. Seven children and the husband wept over her lifeless form. They may, we trust, all meet her in heaven. Will they do it? May God help them! J. A. Parker.

Happy Homes

..AND THE..

Hearts that Make Them;

Or, Thrifty People and Why They Thrive

BY

SAMUEL SMILES,

Author of Self-Help, Character, Duty, Thrift, Etc.

CAREFULLY REVISED WITH ADDITIONAL MATTER BY CHAS. A. CASKELL, A. M.

A beautifully illustrated book of 644 pages, cover stamped in gold, marble edges, size 8vo, red cloth. Probably no books of the same general type were ever written that have so much interested and inspired to worthy action the various classes to whom they were addressed, as have the productions of Samuel Smiles. The marked interest which attaches to Mr. Smiles' productions is chiefly due to his happy use of biography. Readers who tire of extended biographical histories find here groups of the wise and distinguished of earth, each giving testimony to the various principles the author wishes to inculcate. The interest excited by the novel arises solely from our interest in the lives and struggles of men and women. They are interesting biographies; but much more interest should attach to lives actually lived and conquests actually made, provided they are produced with equal care. The home is the epitome of society and government. The application of these principles to every member of the home—the importance of their inculcation in the home, where character is chiefly molded—and the value of such lessons in making every home what it may be and should be, has dictated the title,

"Happy Homes and the Hearts that Make Them."

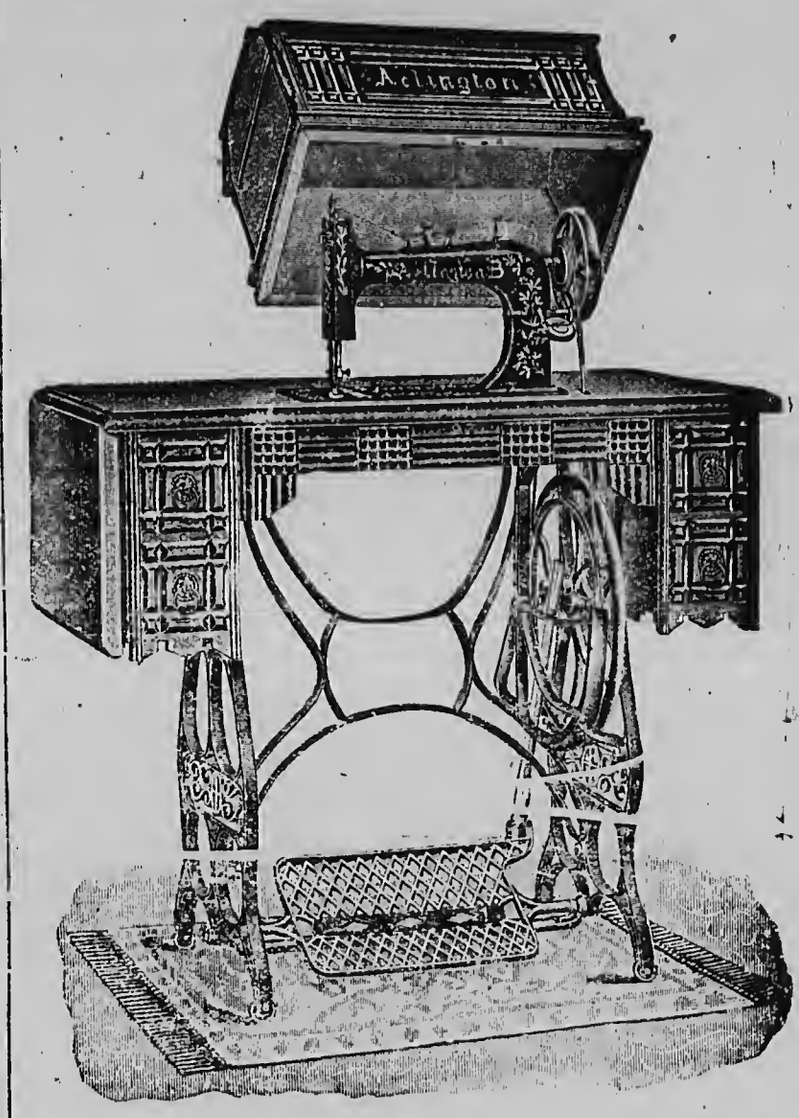
Our Machine Offer.

New Improved High-Arm "Arlington B" Self-Threading Sewing Machine.

A recorded certificate of warranty for 10 years accompanies each machine. The "Arlington B" is complete in every detail, combining all modern and late improvements, such as automatic bobbin winder, self-threading shuttle, self-setting needle, upper spring tension, etc.



The "Arlington B" self-threading sewing machine has a large high-arm, its mechanical appearance is perfect, its adjustment is absolute, positive take-up, convenient foot rest, with the best style furniture, either oak or walnut; in addition to which each machine is furnished with the best steel combination attachments free, as follows: One tucker, one foot ruffler, one set of plain hemmers (five different widths up to seven-eighths of an inch), one binder, one shirring plate and one under-braider, packed in a handsome velvet lined case. It is also furnished with one foot hemmer, one screw driver, one wrench, one oil can with oil, one gauge, one package of needles, six bobbins and one instruction book.

The Head is strong and substantial; has large space under the arm for handling bulky goods, is finely japanned and protected by a hard finish. Has so few bearings and friction points that it is easily oiled and kept clean.

Needle Bar is round, with adjustable bearing polished and fitted, insuring great wear, and can run a long time without oiling. It has a slack dip motion, relieving the strain upon the thread when the shuttle is passing through the loop. Using the adjustable take-up, controlling the threads perfectly on all grades of work.

Improved Automatic Bobbin Winder which is so positive and reliable in its action that an imperfectly wound bobbin is an impossibility. So simple that a child can easily operate it. This valuable attachment renders possible a perfect control of shuttle tension.

Self-Threading—The "Arlington B" is self-threading, requiring no change from light to heavy work. Uses double thread, and makes the lock stitch.

The Needle is the same as used on the New Home machine, and is self-setting both as to height and position with reference to shuttle, with short blade and long shank, insuring great strength; finely polished.

Self-Threading Shuttle—A perfect steel cylinder shuttle with delicate and perfect tension, open at one end to allow the bobbin to be inserted without displacing any of the parts; runs loose in the shell, without spring centre or point bearings, thus insuring an even tension; can be threaded in the dark, and easily understood.

Loose Pulley for winding the bobbin without running the machine requires no change or adjustment, nor is it necessary to remove the work from the machine.

Parts Subject to Wear are made of the finest steel, case hardened, light and noiseless and are very durable.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

The centenary of Methodism in Ohio will be celebrated at Delaware in June, and President McKinley will attend.

The Baldwin locomotive works at Philadelphia have received an order from Egypt for fifteen freight engines.

Ex-Confederate Generals Longstreet, Gordon and Buckner are members of the Board of Trustees of the Grant Monument Association.

The stained-glass window to be placed in St. Paul's Episcopal Church, Richmond, Va., in memory of Jefferson Davis, will be unveiled on Easter Sunday.

One more sign that the South is working ahead in the matter of cotton manufacture is to be found in the fact that the Lynchburg, Va., cotton mills are about to double their equipment.

Three new battle-ships of the staunchest type afloat were authorized by the House Committee on Naval Affairs today, and a provision for their construction inserted in the naval appropriation bill.

The resolution appropriating $50,000,000 for buying war vessels and preparing for hostilities passed both Houses of Congress upon its introduction, and was signed upon its receipt by President McKinley.

Hoping for the best and preparing for the worst about represents the situation in the War and Navy Departments these days. The officials still profess confidence that there is to be a peaceful outcome of the present threatening difficulties, but meanwhile prepare with serenity to meet their duty if events should shape themselves otherwise.

It is reported from Washington that three new battle-ships of the largest size will be provided for, and that one of them will be named the "Maine," to perpetuate the name of the ill-fated battle-ship recently destroyed in Havana harbor. In the matter of docks, the committee will in all probability recommend the construction of four, including one at Algiers.

A great deal of light is thrown on the situation in the New England cotton spinning industry by the incorporation of the three large cotton manufacturing companies in North Carolina in a single week. One of these companies will manufacture the higher class of goods which have hitherto been considered a monopoly of New England. While this is going on in North Carolina, New England is raising funds to keep her striking cotton operatives from starving.

A sweeping anti-trust bill passed by the Kentucky House inveighs against all combinations of persons or corporations organized for or that attempts to raise or lower the price of any article or to prevent competition in any line of trade; to create or carry out restriction in trade; to limit or reduce the production or the price of merchandise, commodities, etc., and imposes forfeiture of charter as penalty for a violation of its provisions.

A week's negotiation closed on March 14, by the triumphant purchase by the navy department in London of the two fine cruisers, hailt and building, at Elswick, for the Brazilian government. Possibly the officials took more pleasure in closing up the business in this manner because of the knowledge that the Spanish agents had been striving to secure these very ships, to whom, it is said, they would be of much greater value in case of trouble than to the United States.

FOREIGN.

One of the pests of being a well-known man is the shoals of begging letters that assail him. Prince Bismarck receives these appeals by the thousands. One day his secretary added up the sums begged for, and found that they amounted to 10,000,000 marks.

Wesleyan Methodism has sustained a heavy loss by the recent death of the Rev. Dr. William Fiddian Moulton, the head master of the Leys School at Cambridge, England. He was born in Staffordshire in March, 1835, and at the early age of 21 gained his master's degree at the London University with high honors in mathematics and natural philosophy. This was followed by his receiving the special distinction of university prizeman in Hebrew, Greek and Christian evidences.

Mr. Pelletor and Mr. Caeenton, the discoverers of quinine and strychnine, are to have a monument erected to their memory in Paris.

Ida Kahn, a Chinese woman who recently graduated from Ann Arbor University, after six years of study, has just returned to her native town, Kin Kiang, to practice medicine. She is China's first woman doctor.

The view held in Spanish official circles is that Spain will not provoke a war, because if she did, she would find herself isolated, but if America gives the provocation, Spain will not be alone in the struggle. The general opinion is that in the event of war Spain will not need to attack American territory. It will suffice her to pursue a war of privateering. As America's commerce is sevenfold greater than Spain's, American interest would suffer most.

At the Capitol.

I am in my seventy-third year, and for fifty years I have been a great sufferer from indigestion, constipation and biliousness. I have tried all the remedies advertised for these diseases, and got no permanent relief. About one year ago, the disease assuming a more severe and dangerous form, I became very weak, and lost flesh rapidly. I commenced using Dr. Mozley's Lemon Elixir. I gained twelve pounds in three months. My strength and health, my appetite and my digestion were perfectly restored, and now I feel as young and vigorous as I ever did in my life.

You are too young, no matter what your age, to lose your hair. Save it by the use of Ayer's Hair Vigor. It removes dandruff, prevents baldness, restores gray and faded hair to its original color, and makes it soft, glossy, and abundant. No toilet is complete without it.

REVIVAL AT BILOXI.

We are in the midst of a revival of unusual spiritual power. Nothing like it has ever been known here. The church is crowded, and conversions and reclamations occur at every service. About thirty to date have offered as candidates for membership.

This evening there were by actual count more than fifty bright testimonies in the love-feast. Bro. Cooper came to our assistance last Monday, and Rev. D. L. Mitchel is doing yoeman service.

A more extended notice will be given later.

CONSUMPTION CURED.

An old physician, retired from practice, having had placed in his hands by an East Indian missionary the formula of a simple vegetable remedy for the speedy and permanent cure of Consumption, Bronchitis, Catarrh, Asthma, and all throat and Lung Affections, also a positive and radical cure for Nervous Debility and all Nervous Complaints, after having tested its wonderful curative powers in thousands of cases, has felt it his duty to make it known to his suffering fellows. Actuated by this motive and a desire to relieve human suffering, I will send free of charge, to all who desire it, this recipe, in German, French or English, with full directions for preparing and using. Sent by mail by addressing with stamp, naming this paper. W. A. NOYES, 820 Powers' Block, Rochester, N. Y.

SCARRITT BIBLE AND TRAINING-SCHOOL.

CARD FROM EASTER PROGRAM COMMITTEE.

Easter Sunday falls on April 10 this year, and with hope and confidence we invite the whole church to unite in praise and thanksgiving to our risen Lord. The program for the Easter service has been prepared with a threefold purpose in view: to celebrate Easter, to commemorate our China Jubilee Year, and to increase the endowment of the school—especially by completing the chair named in honor of Belle H. Bennett, whose works are her highest encomium.

These three objects commend themselves so heartily to the entire membership of our church that all are invited to observe the day with praise and gifts.

The program is designed for the use of Sunday-schools, Epworth Leagues, and missionary societies, and we ask our pastors to aid by arranging in all their churches for the celebration of Easter.

NOTICE.

I was pained to note that in the statistical reports in the Minutes of late session of the North Mississippi Annual Conference nothing was reported from the Asheville circuit on foreign missions. Doubtless some explanation is necessary as to why this blank occurs in the column for foreign missions. On receiving my transfer to the West Texas Conference, I left all moneys and the statistics to be reported at Conference in the hands of Bro. J. J. Housten, with instruction to turn over to proper persons at Conference. The collection for foreign missions not being paid, I left what had been paid, with the subscriptions for this cause, with Bro. Housten, with instruction to collect all he could, add to what I left with him, and then fill the blank and hand to secretary at Conference. I presume the money was handed to the Board, but the statistics were not handed to secretary for insertion in the Minutes. I hope this may be satisfactory.

THE MOST ATTRACTIVE ROUTE TO BALTIMORE VIA WASHINGTON CITY.

The Chesapeake and Ohio railway with its connections offers by far the most interesting route to the Conference in Baltimore in May. The route from Louisville is through the Blue Grass region of Kentucky, passing Frankfort, the State Capital; Lexington, and the home of Henry Clay. At Ashland the line from Cincinnati is joined; the route from Cincinnati being along the banks of the beautiful Ohio river for 165 miles. Shortly after entering West Virginia the banks of the Kanawha river are followed, Kanawha Falls is passed and the canons of New River are penetrated. After skirting the picturesque Greenbrier for 50 miles, the heights of the Alleghenies are reached, and next comes the Shenandoah Valley, the Blue Ridge Mountains and Piedmont section, the most beautiful of the Appalachain Valley. After passing through Charlottsville and Gordonsville, the route is through the most memorable battle-fields of the Civil War, among them Cedar Mountain, Culpepper, Rappahannock, Warrenton Junction, Manasses and Bull Run.

For complete description of the C. & O. Route address C. B. Ryan, A. G. P. A., Cincinnati, Ohio.

HERE AND NOW.

BY ELLA WHEELER WILCOX.

Here in the heart of this world,
Here in the noise and din,
Here where our spirits were hurled
To battle with sorrow and sin—
This is the place and the spot
For the knowledge of infinite things;
This is the kingdom where thought
Can conquer the prowess of kings.

Wait for no heavenly life,
Seek for no temple alone;
Here in the midst of the strife
Know what the sages have known;
See what the Perfect One saw—
God in the depths of each soul,
God as the Light and Law,
God as beginning and goal.

Earth is one chamber of heaven.
Death is no grander than birth;
Joy in the life that is given,
Strive for perfection on earth;
Here in the turmoil and roar,
Show what it is to be calm;
Show how the spirit can soar,
And bring back its healing and balm.

Stand not aloof nor apart,
Plunge in the thick of the fight;
There in the street and the mart,
That is the place to do right.
Not in some cloister or cave,
Not in some kingdom above;
Here on this side of the grave,
Here should we labor and love.

A SHIPWRECK, AND WHAT CAME OF IT.

A STORY THAT IS NOT ALL FICTION.

BY REV. W. P. ANDREWS,

Author of "Two Epistles: I. To Professors of Perfect Love; II. To Opposers of the Second Blessing."

CHAPTER III.

RESCUED. A PACIFIC CONFERENCE.

(Concluded.)

The vessel proved to be a sailing vessel bound for Japan and China. It had been caught in a gale and driven northward. Our missionary company succeeded in hailing it, and were taken on board. It carried no passengers, so they had the cabin to themselves. The first thing they did was to join in singing, "Praise God, from whom all blessings flow," and, kneeling before him, to pour out their hearts in words of thanksgiving. After six months of waiting, not knowing what God's will was concerning them, they are again on their way to carry the gospel to their lost brothers and sisters of the kingdom of the Mikado.

They arose from their knees, and sung a hymn of praise. A Conference followed, which was but a continuation of the love-feast. Bro. Secunda was the first to speak. He said: "Brothers and sisters, that love-feast was a revelation to me. I never before realized how near we are together. Yes, 'how near,' and yet sometimes 'how far!' all because of the use of different expressions to signify the same thing. For instance: Bro. Porter and I have argued on the subject of inbred sin, he insisting that there is no such thing as inbred sin, and that there is no sin in believers, while I insisted that there is, and that its removal is entire sanctification. Now, I find that there is no difference between his experience and mine. Our difference is merely a difference in the definition of sin. He claims no more for regeneration than I do. I have known a church to go to pieces over that question, and I now see clearly that it was all because of a strife about words."

Bro. Porter: "Yes, and I have misjudged Bro. Secunda. It is now clear to my mind that he never claimed that believers are sinners in the sense that I define the word. When we understand each other we are of one mind, and our experiences are substantially identical. Then to think that I was at one time so foolish as to suggest that a division of the church was inevitable in consequence of differences of views concerning the doctrine of 'inbred sin'!"

Bro. Growther: "I, too, have been in error. There is precious little difference between Bro. and Sister Secunda's experience and my own, even if they do claim to have received sanctification instantaneously by faith while I describe the process as a growth. Then I thought their doctrine precluded growth, but after hearing their expressions concerning their aspirations, etc., I know that I misunderstood their position."

Bro. Jacks: "Bros. Porter and Growther have expressed my feelings. I thought some of my brethren meant by their testimonies to say, 'I am holier than thou.' Perhaps some do, but, if so, they are not confined to advocates of any particular theory, and certainly there are none such in this company. I am fully satisfied now that our 'second-blessing' brethren at home have been misunderstood and misrepresented, even as many of them have misunderstood and misrepresented us. I am truly glad that we, at least, at last perfectly understand one another."

Sister Jones: "I, too, find that I have been wrong. I thought it sacrilege for one to claim to be saved from sin before death, but I see that none of you claimed more in giving your experiences than did I in telling mine. We all love God with all our hearts, and long for an increasing capacity to love him more."

Sister Baptista: "I also have somewhat to say. I used to participate in wrangles over the mode of baptism. It's true that I some time since saw that that was childish, but now I lay less stress on water baptism than ever, knowing that the one essential baptism is that by which we have all been made one, even as Paul has declared, 'By one Spirit are we all baptized into one body.'"

Bro. Fullilove: "It is now easy to be seen why God permitted us to suffer shipwreck. We were not altogether ready for our mission. Without the experiences through which we have been called to pass during the past half year, it is more than probable that divisions would have arisen among us in Japan, or we would have felt called upon to stress our peculiar notions, which, to say the least, are non-essential, causing confusion in the minds of our heathen converts, and thus hindering the work. These differences that hurt the church so much at home should never be carried into the mission fields. I have always maintained that Christians are nearer together than they think. If all would endeavor to so express themselves as to be understood, having due respect for the feelings of others, never unnecessarily giving offense, letting others state their positions rather than attempting to state them for them, refusing to contend over non-essentials, seeking points of agreement rather than of disagreement—what a blessed thing it would be! By these means I have confidence that we will maintain the unity of the Spirit. The Lord, who hath begun this good work in us, will perform it. Let us pray without ceasing that in this we may but fitly represent the church at home. This being the case, we will soon be largely reinforced in our mission work, and the fields 'white unto the harvest' will be reaped, bringing the answer to the Savior's prayer for us: 'That they all may be one: that the world may believe that thou hast sent me.'"

Captain Allbright: "I have no regrets for the loss of the vessel. It was the Lord's, to be used in his service. I am sure we are now better equipped without it than if we had never been driven upon that rock. Let us again sing, 'Praise God, from whom all blessings flow.'"

WHY EDUCATE OUR MINISTERS?

A gentleman who practices one of the learned professions in a certain village of Louisiana, a member of the M. E. Church, South, on a fourth-class circuit, gives me the following picture of a certain type of minister: He has been preaching twenty to thirty years, yet he has not learned to speak grammatically, nor can he use words with accuracy and discrimination. He has been a teacher of religion for many years, but he has only a smattering of systematic theology at second hand, and of this meagre furniture he often mars the consistency by crudities of thought obnoxious alike to sound learning and common sense. The Bible is his text-book, and this at least he should have some accurate acquaintance with; but he has only picked up a little on the surface. He can use a fixed and narrow range of texts in a disjointed manner, evidencing no insight into the structure of the books of the Bible. He has no comprehension of the grand harmonies of revelation, but merely catches similarities of sound and plays upon words. The critical questions of date, authorship, composition, integrity of the books are strange to him, although all men who read what the world is thinking about, and who keep in view the shifting grounds of unbelief, know of these questions. He is equally ignorant of the great world movements of the church. In missions he has gotten no farther than Judson, Carey, and Morrison.

"Now, how is it," demands my friend, "that a lawyer must needs learn something of the principles of law, something of the exact use of the English language, acquire some insight into the leading decisions; a physician learns how to diagnose accurately, and prescribe successfully for the diseases of ordinary occurrence; after following it for a term of years the merchant must know his business; but a preacher may go on in the same routine year after year, and never learn anything about his business?"

Of course, it is of first importance, when undertaking the explanation of a fact, to be quite sure that you have a fact to explain. I am loth to believe that this is a true picture, and yet my friend insists that, as an attendant upon public worship during many years, he has had the fact ground into the tissues of his nervous system, and that a short experience in the pew on the part of some of the preachers would justify his portrayal in their eyes. I fear the grotesque picture has at least points of correspondence with reality. I do not quite accept the implication in my friend's question, that there are no shysters, quacks and pettifoggers; and yet I am not satisfied that he is wholly wrong about his type of a certain sort of itinerant preachers. No less courteous, kindly and accurate a gentleman than Bishop Granbery quoted approvingly the assertion of a presiding elder that a certain preacher "had not read a book in twenty years." Presiding elders should certainly know. Even in the precincts exterior to the charmed circle of the cabinet one may sometimes hear the groans and sighs of those who pull and push and lift at "gum logs." And an occasional location puts the seal of authentication upon my friend's picture. I remember similar severe reflections by Bishop J. H. Vincent in a review of about a year ago.

The specimen before us is extreme, no doubt; but is there not too much downward approximation to this type? Are there not too many points of resemblance to this picture, although it be not altogether accurate? Few ministers reach the stage of utter unacceptableness, absolute uselessness — mere cumberers, of whom the church must finally rid itself; but the efficiency of many is far below what it should be and would have been under somewhat different conditions of education.

The fact that preachers in a larger proportion than members of some other professions do not succeed—that some preach for years, and never learn how to preach—may be due to the greater competition and the more strenuous external pressure men in other professions are subjected to. Thus the unfit more speedily succumb in law than in the ministry, and only the fittest remain in the professional rank. But the lack of the external pressure makes a necessity for an inner motive of greater power on the part of the minister. He must have zeal; he must have industry that does not demand necessity to call forth continued effort; he must have a thirst for knowledge that does not need the stimulus of controversy. Zeal can not be other than transitory without knowledge. Enthusiasm feeds on truth. Great thoughts, important facts are fuel to the flame. A man who ceases to acquire and to think can not continue to feel this inner pressure that constitutes one of the conditions of the minister's continuing to advance.

Instead of the ill success and adverse criticism that often meet, and sometimes repel, men at the threshold of a secular calling, the young preacher finds flattery, sympathy, the appearance of instant success. He is under the powerful impulsion of soul experiences that are new, and let but the Holy Ghost whisper through the crudest youth, and men will pause to listen. There is also something that appeals to sympathy in the very lack of equipment with which the young preacher sets out upon his work. The unknown possibilities of his career appeal to older people, who begin to find their prospect in their juniors, and the young people have a fellow feeling for him because he is one of them. But here is a danger. The young man may take these advantages wrongly; he may make them flatter a paralyzing self-conceit that dwarfs all growth. The smart of criticism and exaction is not altogether bad.

A fundamental error to which the beginner in the ministry, if untrained, is often liable is the disposition to underrate the intellectual side of preparation for his calling. It is less inspiring to get down to the grind of hard reading than to engage in revival work. It is possible to pray when one should be at work, and in the absence of right ideals the beginner in the ministry, but recently the subject of the prophet's call, falls into the error of looking only upon the mystical side of preparation for his work. I have had slovenly, ink-bespattered, raw, ill-spelt, absurdly incorrect examination papers handed in by young men of pure and earnest purpose, who never once seemed to have considered that a part of morality lay in accurate, thorough, and conscientious work upon their Conference course. It is hardly necessary to say that I do not mean to underrate the importance of spiritual preparation for the minister's work, but to bring out the need of an adequate intellectual equipment. Faith comes after an intellectual process. The Word, truth, are terms of intellectual import. It is true this may not be the highest aspect of faith, and indeed is not itself final; but it is necessary, and between things necessary there can be no comparison. The Bible is addressed first to mind. The judgment must be convinced before conscience becomes active and the heart is touched. Our preachers must be trained to think and to know in order to lead men to Christ. They must teach the certainty of these things which are most surely believed among us as things capable of evidence and demanding credence before they can make men see these things in relation to moral responsibility. Nothing better than a high ideal to govern the intellectual life as a means of escaping the rock of mental indolence, past which we may sail upon seas of truth in safety, and pilot others also.

Lack of preparatory training for the work of the ministry it is often impossible to make up after entering upon the active duties of the circuit or station without seeming to neglect the immediate work of an evangelist. The round of parish visiting and administration, the preparation for the pulpit, leave little time in which deficiencies of elementary education and insufficient preparation may be filled in; indeed, these deficiencies are often unrecognized until too late. Thus habits of superficial brain work are formed, habits of taking at second hand all one's material; or, worse, habits of entire neglect of study, until the neural channels are worn deep. Character is formed on the last of this superficial mode of life, and the spontaneity and joy of successful work in one's calling is excluded by the narrow round of perfunctory performance and sour disappointment as the unfitted finds himself relegated to the lower rank, and learns how true it is that "from him that hath not shall be taken away even that which he hath."

Education will do most to avert the loss brought about by the errors I have indicated. College work especially makes habits of study and mental honesty. The educated man, whether educated in or out of college, will go forth with an assurance of ability to fulfill his mission that will not be gainsaid by the event. He will find that he has time to pay pastoral visits, organize Sunday-schools and Epworth Leagues, and look into every detail of the pastorate. He will have obtained the key to leisure—the power of working fast and accurately.

College work, and its life of association with intellectual men, generates those ideals to which the Christian man will be likely to prove true throughout life. I heard one of our Bishops say that it was worth more than a sermon for a boy to see Wilbur Fisk walk across the campus at Middleton. We should be astonished to see in how many strong, pure minds, from how many light-giving pulpits the bright spirits of men like Haygood, Francis A. Mood, and James A. Duncan, are still shining by reason of the inspirations imparted in the class rooms at Emory, Georgetown, and Randolph-Macon.

I am not contending that a college course is a warranty of success; but a college training certainly enhances the natural powers of the man, expands his sphere of life by enlarging his range of thought, and gives him a point of advantage from which to enter upon his life-work with the prospect of longer work, better work, and more work—one of the best gifts, and to be earnestly coveted as you would a charism of the Spirit. Education the minister must have, and some can not, some will not, obtain it without the helping hand that opens the way through college. Some obtain it without the college, but at how great expense!

Education aid societies for ministers, private help, endowment funds, afford the opportunity of developing, continuing, enhancing the promise and potency for good and lasting service in the Master's kingdom. Young men of piety, natural ability, enthusiasm, are knocking at the Conference doors. They have heard the command, "Son, go work to-day in my vineyard;" they are eager to enter upon the long day's work, but they are not ready. Let us help them to make ready. Many of us can give no more than a cup of cold water in the name of a prophet; some can give much more. Be it much or little that we have given, we shall have a prophet's reward.

OUR FEMALE COLLEGE.

No invidious distinctions or odious comparisons are intended in this caption or the letter which is to follow. But I do desire to lay before the readers of the ADVOCATE, especially those who live within the bounds of the North Mississippi Conference, the fact that the day for doing something for our female college has fully come. I have held that our girls are as capable of high, broad education as are our sons, and that either we must provide the necessary facilities for them in their own schools, or else we must have co-education. To endow, build and equip a college for the education of our boys is regarded as an absolute necessity. They tell us that the tuition fees will not pay the professors, and hence we must have a large productive endowment; that the buildings must be ample—hence thousands of dollars must be put into brick and mortar; that equipment must be had, or else we can not control patronage—hence large sums of money are expended for books and scientific appliances. I join the leaders of our educational work, and say "Amen!" to all of their demands. But I would not stop here. By what code of ethics do we persuade ourselves that our girls do not need as much education as our boys? The average female college has no endowment; hence it must depend upon the tuition fees to pay its teachers. It has a building that is usually inferior to that of the male college, and as to appliances, an ordinary two-mule wagon can carry them all, with the possible exception of the pianos. The presidents of the female colleges tell us that the "extras" are no longer a source of big revenue to the college; that music teachers are so numerous and cotton so low that this department barely pays its own way. So we are confronted by a new condition. Either endow and equip our female colleges, or let us have co-education of the sexes.

We have at Grenada a splendid plant, worth, at a reasonable estimate, $40 000; but we need better equipment in the way of appliances, and a larger library, and we must have endowment. Dr. Malone is a financial seer, whose forecasts have not been extravagant, but whose good judgment has demonstrated his pre-eminent fitness for the place he fills. He is doing his best, and every dollar he makes above his expenses has been turned into the college to repair its walls, or enlarge its facilities, or increase its efficiency. In spite of the excitement last Fall, he has done remarkably well, and with a faculty equal to the best, he has reached a very high mark in college work. If one hundred persons will give us $100 each, payable in four annual installments, we would have the nucleus of a splendid endowment fund.

There no longer exists any doubt about Grenada's healthfulness. Her present almost perfect sanitation is a guard against all malignant fevers, and her fine artesian water is a guarantee of good health. If any brother or sister whose eye may fall upon these lines should desire to do a noble deed by investing his or her money where it will do permanent good, please correspond with Dr. J. W. Malone or myself.

THE CALM OF THE SOUL.

BY HARRIET BEECHER STOWE.

When winds are raging o'er the upper ocean,
And billows wild contend with angry roar,
'Tis said far down beneath the wild commotion,
That peaceful stillness reigneth, evermore.

Far far beneath, the noise of tempests dieth,
And silver waves chime ever peacefully,
And no rude storm, how fierce soe'er it flieth,
Disturbs the Sabbath of that deeper sea.

So to the heart that knows thy love, oh, Purest!
There is a temple, sacred evermore,
And all the babble of life's angry voices
Dies in hushed stillness at its peaceful door.

Far far away, the roar of passion dieth,
And loving thoughts rise calm and prayerfully
And no rude storm, how fierce soe'er it flieth,
Disturbs the soul that dwells, Oh, Lord, in thee.

Oh, rest of rests! Oh, peace, serene, eternal!
Thou ever live'st, and thou changest never;
And in the secret of thy presence dwelleth
Fullness of joy, forever and forever.

WESLEYAN CATHOLICITY.

MR. EDITOR: Kindly permit me to introduce a subject which seems to me is pertinent just at this time. What is the catholic spirit? I would like to see this great subject expounded by our elder preachers. I have been much impressed with the wonderful sagacity displayed by Mr. Wesley in avoiding dangerous extremes in adhering to the truth. He was neither a Solifidian nor a legalist. He was as far from bigotry as he was from latitudinarian charity. Truth has always suffered from extremes, oscillating pendulum-like from one to the other; the Pharisee creating the Antinomian, and the Antinomian the Pharisee.

Mr. Wesley rose like a star of the first magnitude amidst a labyrinth of ecclesiastical error in the eighteenth century. He was catholic, and his catholicity gave birth to the Methodist Church, which now, though a little more than a century old, has the antipodeans within her loving embrace. To what, then, is her marvelous progress due? Answer: Her catholicity. What is her catholicity? Answer: The "truth as it is in Christ Jesus"—that is, the truth in essentials, the truth without extremes.

It is a well known fact that as extreme doctrinal tenets are productive of opposite extremes, so also are extreme measures in legislation fruitful of other extremes. In this respect Methodist polity has kept even step with Methodist doctrine; they have kept the "middle way." But what is the forecast of the future of Methodism? What are the exigencies of the hour?

There are some questions of law and doctrine being controverted throughout the M. E. Church, South. They are grave questions, and the future of the church may be affected greatly by the manner of their adjustment. When we ask, "What the prospection?" it is pertinent to ask, "What the retrospection?" Have the questions of "evangelists" and "second blessingism" confronted the church in the past? If so, what were the authoritative utterances as to doctrine and polity? Will not the Wesleyan catholicity in doctrine and polity be as certainly a guarantee to the future prosperity of our Zion as it has been in the past? In essentials, unity; in non-essentials, liberty; in all things, charity. Men have always differed in opinion concerning many things of the same church or party. Radical legislation in questions of conscience has frequently been fruitful of ecclesiastical and political revolt. "Is thine heart right, as my heart is with thy heart; if it be, give me thine hand."

God grant that the broad catholic spirit of perfect love may bind our great church together in unity on essentials, in liberty on non-essentials, and in charity on all things.

God grant that the Holy Ghost may have undisputed sway in our beloved church until the rising glory of Methodism will be blended with Christ's coming splendor forever.

"TOO STRICT EXAMINATIONS."

In the ADVOCATE, of Feb. 3, Dr. Jno. T. Sawyer has an article on the above caption, in which he endorses the views of Bishop Duncan and Dr. Geo. G. Smith as set forth in an article by the latter in the Nashville Advocate. A part of Dr. Sawyer's quotation from said article is as follows: "I think our committees have too much power, and are too exacting in many cases, and I wish the Conference, as a body, had a right to reject the report and call for another examination."

That such a right is needed in the Louisiana Conference is very apparent, as may be seen from the following cases:

A young man on trial, in the class of the second year, failed to pass the examination on Wesley's Notes, but did pass on the other five studies at the Conference held at Ruston in 1896. At the recent session, held in Crowley, he passed on Wesley's Notes, but failed on two other studies that he passed on at the previous session. The same committeeman examined each time on those on which he failed. The other two committeemen passed him each year on all the studies on which they examined. After he had been reported, "Failed to pass," at the last Conference, two presiding elders examined him during Conference, in the interval between sessions, on those two studies on which he failed, using the committeeman's very questions, and said they would have passed him with a good per cent.

Another case is that of a young man—at one time a professor in Centenary College—who failed, at the late Conference, to pass the same committeeman on the same two studies referred to above. He thought there must have been a mistake made in grading his papers; hence he asked the committeeman to re-examine them, which he consented to do, and did go over those on one study, and raised the grade to seventy per cent., which is five per cent. more than is required to pass. He then refused to re-examine the papers on the other study, giving as a reason that his opinion was fixed.

To say that these young men were dissatisfied is putting it too mildly. They were discouraged, and felt as if they had been unfairly treated and injured, and it was a means of almost driving them from the Conference. It is customary for committees composed of more than one to confer with each other upon the subject in hand, and the majority rules; but, evidently, the second-year committee has departed from this custom, for, by a self made rule, they divide the studies in the course equally between themselves, interchanging each year, and then each one arranges the questions and does the grading on those studies allotted to him, and his decision of the merits of each is final. By this rule one committeeman can fail a class, or an individual, four successive years, and each time on different studies. He is a committee of one. Instead of the class then being examined by a committee of three, the majority of whom should decide on the merits of the papers, it is examined by three committees of one each, and the decision of each is final. There is no appeal whatever. Notwithstanding the fact that these young men, and all who saw the questions submitted and the answers given, thought that they should have been passed, they had to submit to being set back a whole year by the decision of one man. Does not everyone see that some remedy is needed? And will it not be provided?

HOW I READ MY BIBLE.

About twenty years ago I began to read the Bible. I had been taught to read it some when a child. Soon after becoming interested about the salvation of my soul I also became interested in the Word. After receiving salvation I determined never to let a day pass without reading some portion of that blessed Book, and, as a consequence of that determination, I have not suffered many days to pass without reading it. "It has been a lamp unto my feet and a light unto my path." At times I have felt that I had nothing to rest my faith upon except God's precious promises. When all else seemed to fail, holding on to these by faith, light and joy have returned to my soul. I followed for a long time the practice of too many, namely: that of reading a chapter in the morning, and one in the evening, and probably more on Sunday. It is certainly better to read it in the way I have described than not read it at all; but I can truly say that it is not the most satisfactory, nor is it the most profitable way. You will find that the Word grows sweeter to you as you advance in Christian experience. I believe one can almost test his experience by his desire for the Word. If you do not desire or enjoy it, there is sure to be something wrong in your heart. I have found this plan of reading the Bible helpful to me, namely: to read several chapters at a time. Sometimes it is good to read a whole book before you lay your Bible down. Still another which I have followed for more than a year is to take some particular passage or subject on awaking in the morning, or soon after arising, and run the references, and also have that subject or passage as a central thought through the day for meditation.

Take this passage, "Rejoice evermore." There are at least two references to this passage—Phil. iv, 4, and II. Cor. vi, 10. How often joy is spoken of I can't tell; but if you will begin to study your Bible in this way, you will find it a treasure house. "How sweet are thy words unto my taste! Yea, sweeter than honey to my mouth." "O, how love I thy law! It is my meditation all the day." "The entrance of thy words giveth light." May God help us to search the Scriptures!

WHAT IS THIS YEAR TO US?

This year is a harvest field, in which God has mercifully granted a longer period of service to his followers, that they become more faithful workers in his vineyard; and to those who know him not it is a time of probation in which they may seek and find him. May no day of this year pass without each member of an Epworth League, and all who profess to be followers of our Savior, speak a kind word or do some act to make some sad one's life brighter! The opportunities for doing good lie all round us; the field is white for the harvest, and the reapers are few. Let us go forth to our work in the strength of our Lord. Suffering will come to some of us, and it may be before the end of this year some of our number may be called to serve in a higher sphere. No matter how fierce may be the storm, it will but drive us more quickly home if our faith is firmly fixed on the Rock of Ages, for he who ascended Calvary has promised to be a guide to all who "abide under the shadow of the Almighty" all the way to the grave and beyond, "until the pearly gates unfold." May we, through this year, keep our eyes fixed above, where faith is changed to sight, and pain and sorrow to rest, and not on this world, where we would be wrecked on the rocks and shoals of sin! Nothing can harm us while clinging to the cross, for we have the promise that is as immutable as God's love, "He shall give his angels charge over thee, to keep thee in all thy ways." Let this be our prayer, "May we be for the Master's use made meet!"

We regret exceedingly this delay of the following interesting items from our recording secretary, Mrs. McQueen, Meridian, Dec. 20, 1897: "Last night it was my privilege and pleasure to attend a public meeting of the W. F. M. Auxiliary of South Side. President Chambers, Miss Sallie Smylie, Mrs. Rivers, and Miss Mabel Rivers, of Central Church Auxiliary, also attended. The programme was well gotten up, and was calculated to instruct as well as entertain. Bro. Chambers made a good talk just before the collection was taken. You can judge that it must have been above the ordinary when I tell you that some one put in a whole dollar. The president said she had a little surprise for Bro. Hawkins (the pastor). She gave him a basket, and requested those who had anything for Bro. Hawkins to put it in his basket. When their offerings were counted Bro. Hawkins had $10 to add to his Conference collection.

"The auxiliary has nineteen honorary members, and is the livest auxiliary that I know of.

"Our auxiliary at Central Church is growing steadily. We have collected $14 for McNemar fund; paid the Conference treasurer $21.65 dues."

With great pleasure we report the following from Mrs. Daisy Hinton, "Item Gatherer," Feb. 21, 1898: "Quarterly report of the Flora W. F. M. S., Jackson district. (Changes will be made at our next annual meeting to conform to the new arrangement of districts made at the Annual Conference last December.—Editor.) We have fifteen adult members, five honorary. Average attendance at monthly meetings, 9. Amount collected for dues, $5.05; special work, $1. Total collected during quarter, $6.05. Fifteen dollars was sent to Conference treasurer, of which $14.50 was for girl in Miss Piles' school, Soochow, China, and 50 cents for Miss McNemar. We have 5 subscribers to W. M. Advocate and 1 to Little Worker."

From W. M. Advocate, January: To Scarritt Bible and Training-school, Mrs. E. J. Davis, $2. Adult Auxiliaries—Rehoboth, 20 members; Percy Creek, — members; McNair, 9 members; Providence, 18 members.

W. M. A., February: Adult auxiliaries—DeKalb, 11 members; New Hope, Meridian district, — members; Oak Grove, 9 members.

An earnest appeal in behalf of W. M. Advocate in Evangel, February, closes thus: "Sister, before you lay aside this article, ask God to show you your duty toward the paper which has for eighteen years led the van of missionary workers. It has helped you; it needs your help; you need its help. Devise some plan whereby you can show your faith in it by your work in its behalf.

"Take as your watchword for yourself, and for others whom you try to enlist, the sentiment on the cover of the January number of the Advocate: 'Know and you will feel, you will pray, you will give.'"

THE EASTER PROGRAM COMMITTEE.

The Board of Managers of the Scarritt Bible and Training-school memorialized the Woman's Board of Missions to require the observance of the Easter Sunday in the interest of the school again this year. The request was granted, and it is hoped that there will be a general observance of the day, and that the offerings for the endowment of the Belle Bennett Chair will be liberal.

The committee appointed by Bishop E. R. Hendrix to prepare the program is as follows: Mrs. Mary L. Hargrove, Mrs. C. M. Hawkins, Miss Helen Lee Richardson, Miss M. L. Gibson.

Easter Sunday falls on April 10 this year. The programs will be issued March 1, and we hope that there will be large demand for our Easter literature, and that all the children who love the training-school and Miss Bennett will work hard to fill the cards which will be given them. The program will be published in the March Evangel, and an outline in the church papers. Don't delay sending in applications for literature. Last year some requests for cards and programs came the day before Easter. If those who expect to observe the day in the interests of the training school will send orders at once for the supply they need, their names will be filed and orders filled free of all charges as soon as the program and cards are printed. THE FIFTH ANNUAL CONVENTION.

W. P. AND H. M. SOCIETY.

CONVENING AT KNOXVILLE, TENN., APRIL 6 TO 13, 1898.

To All Delegates and Visitors:

Please pay special attention to the following notice, because it is only by exact conformity to the requirements of the railroads by every delegate and visitor that reduced rates can be obtained by any.

Certificates of Passenger Associations, Passenger Committees, and lines north of the Ohio and Potomac, and west of the Mississippi rivers, will not be honored unless there is a minimum attendance of 100 persons.

Certificates of Southeastern Passenger Association, from all points south of the Ohio and Potomac, and east of the Mississippi rivers, will not be honored unless there is a minimum attendance of 50 persons.

The first proposition covering the large territory, of course, includes the second. If 100 are not in attendance, should there be 50, having purchased tickets within the territory of the Southeastern Passenger Association, reduced rates can be obtained; i. e.—if 50 delegates bring standard certificates to show that full fare has been paid going to Knoxville, then they can purchase return tickets for one-third fare.

Any parties attending the convention, either from a distance, or near Knoxville, if only for one day, should get a certificate, else, perhaps, the failure of two or three, going short distances, may be the cause of forfeiting this opportunity to get reduced rates for all.

When purchasing tickets, get from the agent the authorized standard form, headed "Conditions"—"Excursion Rates on the Certificate Plan," or if preferred, send at once to me, and I will send the proper form for the agents' signature when you purchase ticket, as the Southeastern Association has furnished me a supply.

Unlimited tickets can be purchased going to Knoxville, but the delegates must start home within three days after the adjournment of the convention.

PRESIDENT'S REPORT OF THE W. P. AND H. M SOCIETY AT PATTERSON FOR THE YEAR 1897.

As our sisters of the W. P. and H. M. Society are holding their Annual Conference at Lafayette, and we are unable to send any delegates, our pastor advised us to have a convention at home to inform our brothers and sisters in the church, who are not members of our society, about our parsonage work. I will confine my report to the general work of the local society, as our secretary and treasurer will furnish the necessary information along other lines.

Our work last year fell far below our expectations, for instead of liquidating the debt of $450 in full on parsonage, we were only able to pay one hundred and sixty-five dollars, balance due on note of Oct. 26, 1896.

Our May entertainment, conducted by Mrs. L. A. Hooper, furnished us with a considerable part of this money, as we realized eighty dollars from that. Our ice cream sales, under the supervision of Miss Katilin Muggah, whose industry and zeal were indefatigable, amounted to forty-four dollars and sixty-five cents; and, by the way, this work will be taken up by the ladies again in the near future, for which we request a liberal patronage from all.

In August a boat-ride was given on the steamer "Grady" for the benefit of our society, the proceeds amounting to thirty-one dollars.

We had planned a large entertainment for October, 1897, but "man proposes and God disposes;" as the report of yellow fever in our midst paralyzed all efforts of the Parsonage Society to make the last note on parsonage debt any the less. It still amounts to two hundred and eighty-five dollars and interest.

We intend this year (all things propitious) to cancel this debt, for, without doubt, the prayers of the faithful laborers will be answered, and already at our door are knocking the hands that will assist us, and we shall not hesitate to open and accept all that is offered from those who will give out of their abundance.

In April we expect to have a lecture for the benefit of this work from Dr. Charles F. Evans, D. D., of Lexington, Ky., who, I have no doubt, will charm his audience with his eloquence.

And last, but not least, will be our May entertainment for this year. I think this affair will see an end of the much discussed parsonage debt.

S. C. TRELLUE.

THE PERFECTION OF CHARACTER.

That which God has planned for us in his gracious economy is ever before him. It is nothing less than the perfecting of our character after the exalted model which is given us in his holy Word. Each passing event in our lives is shaped by him with this in view. Every moment his hand is touching invisible springs of influence in our behalf. He causes some acquaintance or friend to confront us, some word to be spoken by a heart that was moved by him to speak. That word may have been the pivotal word in our entire earthly career. That word was direct from himself; was the one serious word that affected more than any other, our eternal destiny. Through that word life became for us a momentous scene of spiritual development, and eternity opened before us with all its solemn realities.

At such an hour, if we could have seen his purpose without the admixture of our imperfect thought, we would have known that he was leading us upward toward perfection of character. That "thorn in the flesh" was his messenger. It tended to irritate and distress us. It was sometimes so keen that it seemed almost impossible to bear it any longer. Nevertheless, it was the experience that resulted finally in our having the "power of Christ" to rest upon us.

We have reason to believe that those who have taken his will as their supreme choice are being daily loaded with manifold mercies, in a way calculated to draw them toward himself and to establish them in purity of character. We may truly say: "How precious, also are thy thoughts unto me, O God! how great is the sum of them! If I should count them, they are more in number than the sand."—New York Advocate.

A COURAGEOUS PREACHER.

The growth of wealth and of luxury, wicked, wasteful, and wanton, as before God I declare that luxury to be, has been matched step by step by a deepening and deadening poverty which has left whole neighborhoods of people practically without hope and without aspiration. At such a time, for the church of God to sit still and be content with theories of its duty outlawed by time, and long ago demonstrated to be grotesquely inadequate to the demands of a living situation, this is to deserve the scorn of men and the curse of God! Take my word for it, men and brethren, unless you and I and all those who have any gift or stewardship of talents or means, of whatever sort, are willing to get up out of our sloth and ease and selfish dilettanteism or service, and get down among the people who are battling amid their poverty and ignorance—young girls for their chastity, young men for their better ideal or righteousness, old and young alike for one clear ray of the immortal courage and the immortal hope—then verily the church, in its stately splendor, its apostolic orders, its venerable ritual, its decorous and dignified conventions, is revealed as simply a monstrous and insolent impertinence!—Bishop Potter.

There are periods in life, years and years, when no great trouble visits us. Then the storms of sorrow fall, and we are apt to say, I have passed through, and I may hope for an immunity for the future. It is not so. The troubles may come back; they may come back again worse. As has been said, our Pharaohs are seldom drowned in the Red Sea, and we do not often behold their corpses stretched upon the sand. The bitterness of death may return. What then? At the very worst the memory of the past will help us. We shall retrace the slow, difficult way to peace; our trust in God will be deepened, and we shall realize that, after all, the range of pains and sorrows is limited, though the sea of troubles may roll its white-crested billows as far as the horizon. What are truly numberless are God's mercies. What is truly infinite is God's love.—Robertson Nicoll.

Not from physical evil, not from pain; Christ does not exempt his own from such kind of evil. Nay, we hesitate to call pain and sorrow evils, when we remember what bright characters they have made. . . . But the evil from which Christ's sanctification separates the soul is the worst of evils, properly speaking, the only evil sin revolt from God, disloyalty to conscience, tyranny of the passion strife of our self-will in conflict with the loving will of God.—F. W. Robertson.

Rock of Ages, within whose magic cleft my spirit would fain repose, it is not to shun the strife that I come to thee. It is not to rest from labor that I would nestle under thy shadow; it is that I may be "established in my goings." I come to thee for wings—for new power of flight. I seek thy rest because without thee I can not soar. I want to walk in the paths of righteousness, but I must first lie down in green pastures.—George Matheson, D. D.

THE HOLY GHOST GIVEN.

MR. EDITOR: Please allow me to tell the readers of your excellent paper how I have received more of the Holy Ghost than ever before. I do not mean from the standpoint of some theory; neither do I wish to be charged with egotism, for I only moan to stand up in the "great congregation of the righteous," and speak as I think. I am led by the good Spirit to testify as one to the Lord's dealings with me.

Methodists all like "experience meetings." I have a long time, in common with other Methodist preachers, realized the great need of more Holy-Ghost power. For years it has been my greatest desire and prayer to be anointed with the spirit of power. This has been, and is yet, the condition more or less of every true child of grace. The point with me has been, When would the time come that God, in answer to prayer, would give us that power? No one would say but that it is right to pray for it. If we pray for it, we must believe God will give it to us according to his promise. If he gives it to us, we have it. Is it not honoring God to say I have what I prayed for? Then may I not tell others how it was given that I may help them into a deeper work of grace?

In hearing ministers and other faithful people sending up their petitions to God, I have a long time heard such sentences as: "Lord, pour out thy Spirit upon us;" "O God, baptize us with the Holy Ghost;" "Lord, send the power," etc. As a guide to my own prayers I was led to consider:

1. Was it according to the Scriptures for a believer, a regenerated child of God, to pray for the baptism of the Holy Ghost? In searching the Scriptures for the authority and promise of this power, many "exceeding great and precious promises" directly on the subject were found, and those that did me most good were the following: The Lord taught his disciples to pray for and expect the Spirit. (Luke xi, 13.) "How much more shall your heavenly Father give the Holy Spirit to them that ask him!" I next observed closely where he addressed his apostles with a very special promise and command (Luke xxiv, 49): "And, behold, I send the promise of my Father upon you: but tarry ye in the city of Jerusalem, until ye be endued with power from on high." Another very comforting promise to my mind was (John vii, 38, 39): "He that believeth on me as the Scripture hath said, out of his belly shall flow rivers of living water (But this spoke he of the Spirit which they that believe on him should receive: for the Holy Ghost was not yet given; because that Jesus was not yet glorified)." (John xv, 26) "But when the Comforter is come, whom I will send unto you from the Father, even the Spirit of truth, which proceedeth from the Father, he shall testify of me." (Acts i, 8) "But ye shall receive power after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you."

2. I was led to inquire, What was the object of this promised power? Was it to save them? No, they were already saved by faith in Christ. Was it to bless them only? No. He had been blessing them all the time during his stay with them, and several times after his resurrection he appeared to them, and pronounced his blessing upon them by saying, "Peace be unto you;" and finally after he had appointed them to wait for the power at Jerusalem, in the very next acts and words of his life, "He lifted up his hands and blessed them." These were all real blessings, and several as to number. Well, had they ever received the Holy Ghost before Pentecost? Certainly they had. It is not to be doubted for a moment but that they received him when Christ first made them "fishers of men." And just before the ascension he "breathed on them, and saith unto them, Receive ye the Holy Ghost." Therefore, I reached the inevitable conclusion that the apostles had received the Holy Ghost before the day of Pentecost. I obtained as an answer that the object of this great outpouring of the Holy Ghost, so prominently recorded in the second chapter of Acts, was for the necessary equipment for successful service in the spread of the Holy-Ghost dispensation throughout the world. It was the inauguration of the Holy Ghost in his office work, in the church of God, as it had been foretold and promised by Jesus Christ. Thus, from what I conceived to be an intelligent settlement of my inquiries, I was brought face to face with the question,

3. Was the same power given by the Holy Ghost at Pentecost intended for me too in this age of the church? Glory to God, it was. Ample provisions were made then for all of us, in all ages and nations, who would embrace the blessings. Then the point was to find out by the Scriptures, beyond a doubt, that it was intended for me to have the same "filling with the Holy Ghost," or, as Peter says, "God gave them (the Gentiles) the like gift as he did unto us." I thought if I could make this point clear, I could then ask God in faith that I might be "filled with the Holy Ghost," as the apostles were. One thought that helped me much was, that there is no time with God, as past and future, but he is one eternal now. Weighing this thought in the light of revelation, I found that away back in the days of David he addressed the Almighty thus (Ps. xc, 4): "For a thousand years in thy sight are but as yesterday when it is past, and as a watch in the night." And from the flaming lips of Peter, who was the chief speaker at Pentecost, and under whose great sermon three thousand souls were converted, I found this language (II. Pet. iii, 8): "But, beloved, be not ignorant of this one thing, that one day is with the Lord as a thousand years, and a thousand years as one day." It has not been quite two thousand years since Pentecost, and as it takes one thousand of our years to make one Lord's day, it has not been quite two days since that great stir at Pentecost in Jerusalem. Many of the people haven't much more than gotten home, nor have they ceased talking of what Peter said in his sermon yesterday morning. His words still ring in our ears. I know that we were all included. The shouts of praises are still heard in the different languages of the nations. Therefore, I learned that I—yea, all of us—might "be filled with the Holy Ghost." I learned it from the plain language of the great preacher—Peter. Hear him, "And it shall come to pass in the last days, saith God, I will pour out of my Spirit upon all flesh; and your sons and your daughters shall prophesy, and your young men shall see visions, and your old men shall dream dreams." "For the promise is unto you and to your children and" (thank God) "to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call."

4. How this more power came. Not as I had expected, as to manner, but quite different. It came softly into my soul by the "still low voice" of his Word. After much prayer and searching out the promises I believed that I had received the Spirit of more power according to his Word, and straightway it became mine. I reckoned on God, I believed, I did not decide the matter from a great and extraordinary amount of feelings; I had thought I felt religious after the decision was made; I find myself still believing and receiving. I hope the good work will continue through time and eternity. I count not myself "already perfect," but "I press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus."

FROM THE WORK.

Kate J. Jones, Webster Groves, Mo., March 9, 1898: "Your article about Miss Willard was read with much pleasure by us, for even here the ADVOCATE, with its familiar face, has followed us. We held memorial service for Miss Willard last Sunday, our Union, numbering twenty-eight members, and a large congregation of outsiders, being present. Mrs. Margaret Nevins, our president, presided, and the four ministers of our village assisted. 'Lead, Kindly Light,' one of Miss Willard's favorite hymns, was sung by Mrs. Knight in a most impressive manner. In 'Bible Readings' the reader showed the motive power of all true greatness to be loving service, and this was pre-eminently Miss Willard's characteristic. One of the ministers read Tennyson's 'Crossing the Bar' in a solemn manner, most inspiring. Miss Willard's pictured face looked out from a screen of her favorite palms and lilies, pure and beautiful as the flowers themselves, and with the impress of her noble features. We have paid our last tribute of devotion to this, the grandest spirit of the century. On whom shall her mantle fall?"

Rev. J. E. Buck, Amphion, Texas, March 9, 1898: "I never had such an appreciation of the ADVOCATE as since I came to West Texas. It is as a letter from home every week. Through its columns I hope to hear oftener, and more at length, from the Mississippi brethren. Severing my relation to the North Mississippi Conference did not sever the tie of love and friendship which has existed since my connection with that Conference. While I have a strong attachment for the brethren there, after a stay of three months in West Texas, I have no cause for regretting the transfer. My health and that of my family is good; have not called in a physician since we came. The climate is perfectly delightful. The temperature has been during the entire Winter about what it is in North Mississippi during the month of April. I have seen ice the thickness of a knife blade at three different times during the Winter. The Spring season is at least a month earlier here than there. Some corn large enough to plow now, and cotton planting will begin in earnest in a few days. The greatest hindrance to successful farming is the lightness of the rainfall. We were kindly received, and have had every token of friendship and appreciation we could ask. Methodism is the same the world over. The hearts and homes of her members are ever open to receive her ministers, from whatever part of the connection they may come. No demanding the preaching of trial sermons or of a long list of testimonials from prominent individuals. The authority of the Bishop and his parchments are enough, and these are never or rarely asked for. God bless the Methodist Church! We are in the midst of a local option campaign in our county just now. The election is to be held March 12, and success and victory for prohibition is assured, we think. Pray for our success."
